A councillor and his illicit tobacco trade

ABDUS SABUR LITON

A significant share of Bangladesh's illegal cigarette market is controlled by two companies where Chattogram City Corporation (CCC) Councillor Abdus Sabur Liton and his brother have the majority stakes, an investigation by The Daily Star has found.

These two companies – Bijoy International Tobacco and Tara International Tobacco – may have long been placing counterfeit banderoles on their cigarette packs and distributing them in different parts of the country, an ongoing investigation by NBR's Central Intelligence Cell (CIC) indicates.

Additionally, these two companies have been producing and selling various cigarette brands, including fake versions of foreign brands like Oris and Esse Lights in big cities such as Dhaka and Chattogram, multiple officials say on condition of anonymity to candidly discuss the ongoing probe involving powerful people.

On May 21, CIC and customs intelligence busted Bijoy International's office in Chakaria upazila in Cox's Bazar and recovered documents that point to the tobacco company's link with manufacturing cigarettes with illegally imported raw materials, according to documents and customs officials.

Earlier on May 9, customs intelligence raided another tobacco factory, Tara International Tobacco, where Liton has the majority share, documents show.

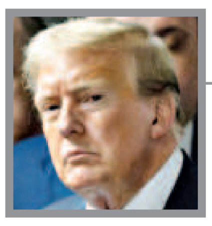
HUSH MONEY TRIAL

Trump 'guilty on all 34 counts'

Verdict won't bar him from contesting US presidential polls



- Judge sets sentencing for July 11
- Trump says real verdict will be delivered on polling day

AGENCIES

Donald Trump on Thursday became the first former US president ever convicted of a crime after a New York jury found him guilty on all charges in his hush money case, months before an election that could see him yet return to the White House.

The jury found him guilty on each of the 34 counts of falsifying business records to hide a payment meant to silence porn star Stormy Daniels. He could in theory be sentenced to four years behind bars for each count but is more likely to receive probation.

The 77-year-old Republican, who was released without bail, is now a felon -- a historic and startling first in a country where presidents are frequently described as the most powerful man in the world.

LAST DAY OF ENTRY TO MALAYSIA ON WORK VISA

Hundreds flock to Dhaka airport

Many of them could not fly as agencies fail to provide them with tickets

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Several hundred Malaysia-bound migrant workers waited for hours at Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport amid uncertainties as the deadline for workers to enter the southeast Asian country ended yesterday.

They came to the airport without plane tickets after the local recruitment agents promised that the tickets would be provided on time.

Throughout yesterday, the two international terminals remained packed and there were crowds in front of the terminals as well. Many of the workers reached the airport on Thursday night or earlier.

Some said they were losing hope of reaching Malaysia because the recruiting agents were not answering their phones.

Around 5:00pm, Muhammad Aziz, who came to the airport on Thursday night from Jamalpur, said he had been waiting for more than 12 hours and he was not sure whether the agent would give him the ticket.

He added that he received the Malaysian visa on May 21 to work at a furniture factory.

In March, Malaysian authorities said workers of Bangladesh and 13 other countries will not be allowed to enter the southeast Asian country after May 31.

Nurul Islam, who came to the airport from Jhenaidah, said he had been waiting at the airport for three days. He did not receive his ticket as of 3:15pm.

"I spent Tk 5.40 lakh for this. I will be in serious trouble if I cannot reach Malaysia on time," he said, breaking down in tears.

Many other workers at the airport were in a similar situation. Most of them spent between Tk 5 lakh and Tk 6 lakh they managed by selling their lands or borrowing from banks.

Another man said he got a ticket to

Though the authorities remain tightlipped about the whereabouts of former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed and his family members, several sources say they have left the country.

Benazir, his wife, and their three daughters left Dhaka on a Singapore Airlines flight on the night of May 4, said several officers of law enforcement and intelligence agencies on the condition of anonymity.

According to an officer, the former police chief, who is facing an Anti-Corruption Commission probe, went to Singapore with his family, stating on documents that his wife needed treatment. They

Over 1,250 edn institutions hit hard by 'Remal'

STAR REPORT

At least 1,259 educational institutions in six southern districts have been affected by Cyclone Remal, according to education offices.

The institutions include primary and secondary schools, colleges, and madrasas.

Some of the schools made of tin and wood have been destroyed by the storm, while tin roofs of some others have been blown away.

Playgrounds and ground floors of many educational institutions have been damaged as floodwater entered there. Tidal surge caused flash floods during the cyclone that hit the country's coastal areas on Sunday.

Academic activities in the affected educational institutions are being hampered, said officials and teachers.

In Patuakhali's Kalapara upazila, Menhazpur Haqqani Secondary School, which was made of tin and wood, collapsed.

"We don't know when our school will be rebuilt and when our classes will resume. We want to go to school soon," said Rabiul Hossain, an eighth grader of the school.

"We are trying to build a makeshift structure to continue classes. It will take at least one week to resume our academic activities," said Ashraf Uzzaman, headmaster of the school.

Around 250 students study there, he added.

UPAZILA ELECTION

EC summons state minister over polls code violation

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Election Commission yesterday summoned State Minister for Disaster Management and Relief Mohibbur Rahman, saying he violated the electoral code of conduct by campaigning for multiple upazila polls candidates in Patuakhali's Rangabali.

In a letter sent by the EC, Mohibur was asked to appear before the commission on June 2 and offer an explanation in this matter.

In the letter, the EC said the state minister sought votes for the candidates running in the Rangabali upazila polls to be held on June 5.

According to the letter, Mohibbur sought votes for upazila chairman candidate Saiduzzman Mamun, vice chairman candidate Roushan Mridha and candidate for vice chairman reserved for women Ferdousi Parveen while distributing relief aid among the flood-affected victims at Kodalia Ghat in Chhota Baishdia union and in Chalitabunia Bazar of Chalitabunia Union in Patuakhali's

Hasan Mahmud seeks OIC's continuous support for Rohingya repatriation

BSS, Dhaka

Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud has sought continuous support from the member states of the Organisation of Islamic Cooperation (OIC) to ensure the safe and sustainable repatriation of nearly 1.3 million forcibly displaced Rohingyas from Bangladesh to Myanmar.

He made this appeal while briefing ambassadors from OIC member countries at the United Nations headquarters in New York on Thursday, a foreign ministry press release said yesterday.

During the briefing, Hasan praised the OIC for its leading role in international efforts to alleviate the plight of the Rohingyas and updated the envoys on the current situation of the Rohingyas sheltered in Bangladesh.

The foreign minister expressed deep concern over the increasing conflict in Myanmar's Rakhine state at the briefing held in the OIC conference room at the UN headquarters.

He laid emphasis on the need for the Rohingyas' full citizenship rights upon their return to Myanmar.

Ambassadors from OIC member states, including Saudi Arabia, Gambia, Pakistan, Malaysia, Turkey, Iran, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates, Algeria, Egypt, and Indonesia, expressed their gratitude to the Bangladesh foreign minister for the timely briefing.

Company filings at the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies and Firms (RJSC) show that as of December 2020, Liton and his brother Abdul Mannan Khokon hold all 20,000 shares worth Tk 100 each of Bijoy.

Before that, the two brothers held 60 percent of the shares and another company held 40 percent. The private investment company then transferred its share to the two brothers on December 10, 2020, although it is yet to be approved by the RJSC, documents show.

Under company law, transfer of share takes effect on the date of transfer, unless there are forgeries by the parties involved or incomplete documentation. However, the final completion of share transfer is subject to RJSC's approval, a company lawyer said.

Liton, also acting convener of a port city unit Awami League, owns 70 percent share in Tara International Tobacco, a partnership set up in March 2017 with a proposed initial capital of Tk 40 lakh. The rest 30 percent share of the company is held by Omar Faruk Siddiki, also from Chattogram, documents show.

THE TOBACCO RACKET

Analysing import and local purchase documents seized from Bijoy and Tara, CIC officials suspect both companies have been engaged in tax evasion through imports of raw materials for cigarette using non-existent and anonymous entities.

Tobacco Tax Policy 2021-2030 strictly prohibits imports of tobacco raw materials by any entity other than cigarette manufacturers.

In actuality, a number of trading companies have been importing various raw materials for cigarette, including the three essential components: acetate tow, unmanufactured tobacco, and cigarette paper.

Acetate tow is the soft, cotton-like material used to make cigarette filters.

NBR data show at least 5,906 tonnes of raw materials used for cigarette production, including these three key components, have been imported by 11 trading companies in the last two years since February 2022.

None of these traders are manufacturers, and at least four of them supplied their illegal imports to Bijoy and Tara, officials say.

The raw materials they imported are enough to produce at least 295 crore cigarette sticks, CIC officials tell The Daily Star, adding that the government lost at least Tk 1,500 crore in revenue from these cigarettes, as the companies did not pay any VAT and supplementary duty.

Most of these raw materials came from China, Malaysia, Germany, India, Hong Kong and Indonesia, documents show.

These companies are SB Traders, M/s Anik Enterprise, Rapid Marketing, Rapid Pack Limited, M/s Osman Trading, RH Traders, Saad International, Alam Traders, AK Enterprise, Star Impex and CR7 Trading.

CIC investigators say most of them are phantom companies, meaning they are being used as shell companies.

The Daily Star went to the physical address of three companies in Dhaka and Chattogram, but did not find them.

Between May 9 and May 21, a large quantity of equipment and raw materials used for cigarette production were seized from the warehouses of Rapid Pack Limited in Dhaka's Keraniganj and AK Enterprise in Chattogram.

Customs officials have since shut the warehouses of both companies. During the raid, CIC and customs officials found Rapid Pack Limited had cigarette manufacturing equipment, although it has no permission to make them.

The CIC officials' raid on Bijoy and Tara was based on the analysis of the import, purchase and sales records of Rapid Pack and AK Enterprise.

Documents show both Rapid Pack and AK Enterprise supplied their imported raw materials to Bijoy and Tara, which is illegal as only direct manufacturers can import such items.

In the subsequent raid on Bijoy on May 21 by a joint team of CIC and port city customs intelligence, officials found documents related to its trade with Rapid Pack, Rapid Marketing, AK Enterprise and Alam Traders.

Currently, 7.56 tonnes of paper for cigarette packets inscribed with foreign brand "Oris" imported by AK Enterprise are being held by the Chattogram Customs. AK Enterprise falsely declared them as coated paper.

During interrogation, AK Enterprise owner AKM Ziauddin told customs officials that he imported these products for Liton, who paid for the shipment in advance.

PHOTO: COLLECTED

Ziauddin told The Daily Star that the false declaration was unintentional. "I imported the Oris brand foil paper from China for Tara International."

Talking to this newspaper, Liton admitted paying for the shipment.

He denied that his factories make illegal products, but admitted buying Oris branded cigarette papers from AK Enterprise. He added that all related VAT and duties were paid during the production phase.

Based on the information provided by Ziauddin, customs officials in a raid on Tara International on May 9 confiscated a significant amount of counterfeit Oris brand cigarettes made in Tara's factory in Bhairab of Kishoreganj.

"At least four of these 11 trading companies have illegally imported raw materials of cigarettes for Bijoy International Tobacco and Tara International Tobacco," a top CIC official said.

Import data obtained from NBR show these four companies imported about 61 percent or 3,583 tonnes of the 5,906 tonnes of raw materials illegally shipped into the country in the last two years.

Given the gravity of the matter, NBR Chairman Abu Hena Md Rahmatul Muneem on May 16 directed the Customs Intelligence and Investigation Directorate (CIID) and VAT Intelligence to collaborate with the CIC to track down the ultimate beneficiaries of the illegal imports.

Subsequently on May 19, NBR issued letters to all registered banks, asking them to provide all relevant bank documents and account information of the 11 entities as well as any associated individuals or entities.

NBR officials say none of the 11 trading companies submitted their tax and VAT returns in the last two years, which is mandatory.

ILLEGAL MARKETING

In December last year, local businessmen from different regions sent multiple letters to NBR, saying two cigarette brands named "Express" by Bijoy and "Peacock" by Tara were being distributed in rural areas of Chattogram, Khagracchari, Rangamati, Kurigram, Feni, Kushtia and Lalmonirhat with fake banderoles.

The letters, seen by this newspaper, said 10-stick packs of Express and Peacock cigarettes were being sold for Tk 15-25, much lower than the government-set retail price of Tk 45 for a 10-stick pack. Many of these packs had no banderoles, while others had fake banderoles.

Banderoles are the instrument used for controlling illicit tobacco trade and collecting tax revenue around the world. In Bangladesh, they are printed at the Government Security Printing Press in Dhaka.

Liton admitted to selling his brands at low prices sometimes.

An intelligence report sent to NBR in 2022 mentioned Bijoy, Tara and Liton by name, saying, "There are allegations against Tara International Tobacco used fake banderoles in the past."

'EXACTLY THE SAME'

Port city's Riazuddin Bazar is a prominent wholesale market for cigarettes, including illegal ones.

Three wholesale traders told The Daily Star that they have both the original and fake cigarettes of foreign brands, including Oris, Petron and Esse Lights. They said the demand for the fake ones is higher as they are cheaper.

One trader gave a demonstration on how to spot the fake ones, saying almost no one can spot the difference.

"They look exactly the same, but the quality is different.... Once you open the pack, you get a foul smell that you do not get from the original ones," he said.

Supply of some so-called foreign brands at Riazuddin Bazar drastically fell over the last two weeks after the raids at various suspicious tobacco factories, including the two owned by Liton.

About buying cigarette raw materials from trading companies, Liton said, "I don't have detailed information about their origins. I simply provide work orders, and they supply the raw materials."

The Oris brand cigarettes that the customs officials seized are of regular size, and not the slim ones like the original foreign brand, he said.

"The cigarettes produced under the brand name of Oris are popular, but I will stop producing them if the original Oris company raises any objections. The allegations of manufacturing Esse Lights, Oris and other slim cigarettes are baseless. I do not even have the equipment to make them," he said.

But CIC officials say the quality of the Oris paper seized at his factory and those used in some slim Oris cigarettes that they collected from the market is similar.

ILLICIT CIGARETTE TRADE IN BANGLADESH

Bangladesh is a fairly small player in illicit tobacco trade, but the trend is rising.

Globally, illicit tobacco trade is estimated at about 10 percent of the total market size.

Latest data on counterfeit cigarettes are not available, but a 2019 study by the World Bank Group shows Bangladesh's illicit cigarette trade in 2016-17 was roughly 2% of the total cigarettes sold in the market, or about 1.5 billion sticks.

It was 50 percent for Latvia, 38 percent for Pakistan, 36 percent for Malaysia and 17 percent for India that year.

In case of Bangladesh, the 2 percent illicit tobacco market share in 2016-17 was more than a three-fold growth from 2014-15, when the illicit tobacco market share was only 0.6%, the WB report said.

About 92% of this illicit trade is in cigarettes that escape the tax net. The remaining 8% of contraband cigarettes are divided between smuggling and counterfeit products. The country loses about $100 million in revenue from the illicit cigarette trade annually, almost 4% of total tobacco revenues, the study found.

However, NBR officials say that currently 8-10 percent of the cigarettes available on the market are illegal.

And the racket involving Bijoy, Tara and some of the 11 trading companies under investigation controls a big chunk of this illegal tobacco market, they add.

later travelled to Dubai.

The Daily Star could not independently verify the claims.

This correspondent called Benazir multiple times and sent him text messages, but he did not respond.

Contacted yesterday, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan said, "We have no information that he left the country."

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader also said he has no idea whether the former IGP had left the country.

Deputy Inspector General of Police (Immigration) Monirul Islam said, "Since Benazir is no longer the IGP, I do not have his immigration information."

After his retirement as the IGP in September 2022, Benazir and his family lived at a flat on the Rancon Icon Tower in Gulshan. On March 5, 2023, he purchased four apartments at House no. 1 on Road-130 in Gulshan-1.

One of the security guards of the 15-storey Rancon Icon Tower said, "I haven't seen any family members enter or leave the flat in quite a long time."

The ACC summoned Benazir for questioning on June 6, and his wife and three children on June 9. A source said Benazir and his family's lawyer might request more time from the ACC.

Benazir's lawyer, Shah Monjurul Hoque, said, "I don't have information about his whereabouts."

On April 18, the ACC launched an inquiry into the allegations that the former police chief amassed illegal wealth. A three-member committee is conducting the probe.

Before becoming the IGP, Benazir was the director general of Rab.

Kuala Lumpur, but there would be a stopover in the UAE.

"I will reach Malaysia on June 1. I am not sure whether they will let me work as I will miss the deadline," he said.

A special flight of Biman Bangladesh Airlines left for Kuala Lumpur with 271 passengers at 7:15pm yesterday. The flight was arranged at the instruction of the Ministry of Expatriates' Welfare, said Masud Khan, manager (public relations) at Biman.

Asked about the crowd of people, Group Capt Kamrul Islam, executive director of the airport, said additional flights were being arranged to handle the pressure.

In the last three days, 5,294 Bangladeshi migrant workers left for Malaysia in 30 scheduled and special flights of Biman, US-Bangla, Malaysian and Batik Air.

Besides, 179 migrant workers reached Kuala Lumpur on four transit flights, Kamrul said.

Biman earlier operated four special flights. The tickets sold for Tk 73,616 each.

Nearly 4.50 lakh Bangladeshi workers migrated to Malaysia between August 2022 and April this year, shows Bureau of Manpower, Employment and Training data. The southeast Asian country reopened its labour market for Bangladesh in 2022 following a four-year suspension.

Last year, Malaysia was the second largest overseas job market for Bangladesh.

At an event in Dhaka on Wednesday, Malaysian High Commissioner to Bangladesh Haznah Md Hashim said the deadline will not be extended.

At least 256 primary schools and 218 other educational institutions, including secondary schools, colleges, and madrasas, have been hit by the cyclone in Patuakhali, according to local education offices.

Repair of the educational institutions may cost Tk 20 crore, said officials at the district education office.

"We are preparing a list of the affected schools and will send it quickly to the higher authorities seeking funds for repair," said Molla Bakhtiar Rahman, Patuakhali district primary education officer.

In Pirojpur, 174 primary schools and 220 other educational institutions, including secondary schools, colleges, and madrasas, have been hit by Remal.

"The cyclone has damaged the tin roof of our madrasa," Martuja Billah, principal of Sapleza Nesaria Alim Madrasa in Mathbaria upazila, told The Daily Star.

"We are still collecting information about the damage. I think that the number of the affected schools may go up," said Idris Ali Azizi, the district education officer.

Besides, at least 171 primary schools have been damaged by the cyclone in Khulna, Bagerhat, and Satkhira.

Of them, 67 schools are in Satkhira, 66 in Bagerhat, and 38 in Khulna, said Md Moslem Uddin, Khulan divisional deputy director at the Directorate of Primary Education.

As per an estimation, the damage may result in a loss of over Tk 2 crore, he added.

Mohammadpur Government Primary School in Khulna's Batiaghata upazila has 1,376 students.

"We already have a shortage of classrooms. On top of that, a portion of tin roof of a classroom has been blown away," said Md Moniruzzaman, head teacher at the school.

Moslem Uddin said classes are being hampered at many affected schools.

In Jhalakathi, 50 primary schools, 95 secondary schools and colleges, as well as 75 madrasas have been damaged by the cyclone, according to local education offices.

Israel offers new Gaza ceasefire plan change their minds.

" ... I ask you to take a step back, think what will happen if this moment is lost," he said. "We can't lose this moment."

An earlier hostage proposal put forward earlier this year called for the release of sick, elderly and wounded hostages in Gaza in exchange for a six-week ceasefire that could be extended to allow for more humanitarian aid to be delivered into the enclave.

The proposed deal fell apart earlier this month after Israel refused to agree to a permanent end to the war as part of the negotiations and ramped up an assault on the city of Rafah in southern Gaza.

Hamas said on Thursday it had told mediators it would not take part in more negotiations during ongoing aggression but was ready for a "complete agreement," including an exchange of hostages and prisoners if Israel stopped the war.

Yesterday, the UN said that the humanitarian aid allowed into the Gaza Strip is not getting to civilians in need, as Israeli forces struck targets across the Gaza Strip, with witnesses reporting air raids around the southern city of Rafah.

"The aid that is getting in is not getting to the people, and that's a major problem," Jens Laerke, spokesman for the UN humanitarian agency OCHA, told a media briefing in Geneva.

"We continue to insist that Israeli authorities' obligation under the law to facilitate delivery of aid does not stop at the border," said Laerke.

"We need that safe and unimpeded access to get to the drop-off point so we can pick it up and get it to people."

Meanwhile, Israeli forces have ended combat operations in the Jabalia area of north Gaza after destroying more than 10 kilometres of tunnels during days of intense fighting that included over 200 air strikes, the military said yesterday.

At the south end of Gaza, Israeli forces are pressing an offensive into Rafah. Tank-led Israeli troops aim to break up Hamas' fighting formations in the city on the border with Egypt.

At a news conference in Prague, US Secretary of State Antony Blinken said the humanitarian situation remains dire in Gaza, especially in terms of distributing aid to civilians, citing combat operations in the south.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 36,284 people have been killed in the territory during more than seven months of offensive. The toll includes at least 60 deaths over the past 24 hours, a ministry statement said.

Bangladesh a key partner of UN: Guterres

UNB, Dhaka

UN Secretary-General António Guterres praised Bangladesh as a vital UN partner, highlighting its contributions to international peace, sustainable development, and climate change efforts.

During a meeting with Foreign Minister Dr Hasan Mahmud in New York, Guterres expressed gratitude for Bangladesh's support to the Rohingya and voiced concern over Myanmar's forced recruitment of young Rohingya. Commending Bangladesh's climate resilience, Guterres assured support for Bangladesh's transition from a low-income country, stating, "For this, Bangladesh should be rewarded, not punished."

Foreign Minister Mahmud thanked Guterres for his leadership on global issues, including the Gaza crisis, and urged continued UN focus on the Rohingya crisis, advocating for the safe repatriation of 1.3 million refugees.

RAJSHAHI UNIVERSITY

BCL factions reign with violence, univ admin silent

A CORRESPONDENT, RU

Bangladesh Chhatra League declared its Rajshahi University unit after seven long years on October 21 last year.

Mostafizur Rahman Babu is the president and Asadullah Hil Galib is the general secretary of RU BCL.

Since they took charge, at least 30 violent incidents involving BCL men have been reported on the campus. These incidents include factional clashes, extortion, illegal occupation of dormitory seats, and attacks on journalists, opposition, and general students.

Despite this, the university administration has largely refrained from taking disciplinary action against the accused. According to RU sources, no disciplinary committee meetings have been held this year.

The trouble began on October 22, when a group of BCL members, dissatisfied with their exclusion from the new committee, vandalised rooms in Madar Bux Hall.

On November 26, BCL leaders assaulted Rayhan Islam, the RU campus correspondent for Bangladesh Protidin.

On May 7, RU BCL general secretary Galib and others confined and tortured Nafiul Islam, a leader of the RU unit Chhatra Dal, in a room of Madar Bux Hall.

Just days later, on May 11, two BCL factions led by RU unit president Babu and Suhrawardy Hall unit president Niaz Morshed locked in a clash, resulting in at least five injuries. The factions brandished local weapons in another showdown two days later.

'Masters of corruption'

Quader on BNP leaders

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The names of BNP leaders would top any list of corrupt individuals, said Obaidul Quader yesterday.

He said the party leaders are "masters of corruption and looting", adding they siphoned money abroad and enriched themselves at the country's expense.

He was speaking at a press conference organised at AL president's Dhanmondi office.

Addressing former IGP Benazir Ahmed's situation, Quader said the court would decide on his arrest following an Anti-Corruption Commission investigation. On reports of Benazir fleeing abroad and withdrawing money from his bank account, he said, "I don't know, it is not clear yet. "ACC says they think he [Benazir] fled the country. Let them prove it," he added.

'DEVIL'S BREATH'

The world's 'scariest' drug

Now in hands of country's criminals

MUNTAKIM SAAD

Imagine walking down a quiet street, minding your own business, when a stranger approaches. They offer you a seemingly harmless business card, and you take it without thinking twice. Little did you know that the card was soaked in a drug, which would be absorbed by your skin within minutes.

Or someone might just blow the powdered drug directly in your face, and after inhaling that, within minutes you find yourself in a "Zombie-like state", unable to control your actions or resist their demands.

The drug leaves victims with no ability to control their actions. According to worldwide urban legends, the victims will do anything for their attackers, from giving up all their belongings to even going as far as killing someone for them.

The drug is scopolamine, derived from nightshade plants. Scopolamine, also known as hyoscine, is a natural or synthetically produced tropane alkaloid and anticholinergic drug which has a few legitimate medical uses, such as treatment for motion sickness, postoperative nausea and for the tremors of Parkinson's disease.

It is said to be one of the first "truth serums" which was used during WWII to obtain information from unwilling targets. However, it's mostly known for its darker sides.

It is popularly known as "devil's breath", and is globally recognised as "the world's most dangerous drug".

Criminals, particularly in Colombia and Ecuador, have used it to render victims helpless, robbing them blind, stealing their belongings, or even committing more heinous crimes such as murder or rape.

The scariest thing is that the drug has found its way to criminals in Bangladesh.

Fatema Begum, a resident of Chattogram, fell victim to such a crime on May 22.

While returning from a local market, two men posing as charity workers approached her, and when she turned around to talk to them, one of the individuals blew some powder in her face, leaving her disoriented.

Under the drug's influence, Fatema lost control over herself and unknowingly complied with the criminals' demands. They stole her valuables, including jewellery worth Tk 80,000, cash, her phone, and a shopping bag.

> "Devil's breath" can render victims suggestible and disoriented, causing them to lose all willpower and readily give up their belongings to criminals. It takes effect within 10 minutes of inhalation, and the victim's memory and brain can't function normally.

> Chief chemical examiner of DNC

The incident was captured on CCTV. Bystanders mistook the interaction for a usual encounter.

Double Mooring Police Station Officer-in-Charge Fazlul Kader Patwari said under scopolamine's influence, Fatema did what the criminals told her to do. When Fatema regained her senses after some hours, she realised she had been robbed.

"Scopolamine is made from the Borrachero plant. Known as "devil's breath" in its powdered form, this substance can render victims suggestible and disoriented, causing them to lose all willpower and readily give up their belongings to criminals," Dr Dulal Krishna Saha, chief chemical examiner of the Department of Narcotics Control, told The Daily Star.

By putting it on a visiting card, paper, cloth, or mobile phone screen, it's brought within four to six inches of the target's nose.

"It takes effect within 10 minutes of inhalation, and the victim's memory and brain can't function normally. Some take an hour to return to normal, while many fail to fully recover within three to four hours," he said.

In recent years, robberies using scopolamine have been reported in various parts of the country, including Dhaka, Jashore, Khulna, Rajbari, and Bogura.

Narayanganj Police first recovered 10 grammes of scopolamine from a gang in September 2023 while investigating the murder of a teacher of Northern University.

The gang used to sell scopolamine, potassium cyanide, and chloroform through online groups.

Police do not have exact figures for crimes related to scopolamine, but they found some Iranian nationals' involvement in them, along with local culprits.

On January 21, 2023, Jisan, an employee at a travel agency in the capital's Pallabi, fell victim to such a crime when two Iranian men visited the agency and took Tk 4.5 lakh from Jisan's cash box.

CYCLONE REMAL

Animal death toll rises to 100 in Sundarbans

UNB, Khulna

The death toll of animals from the flooding in the Sundarbans has climbed to 100 after Cyclone Remal hit the world's largest mangrove forest on Sunday.

According to the Forest Department, the carcasses of 96 deer and four wild bears were recovered from the forest till Thursday evening.

The animals were found dead in several areas including Kotka, Kochikhali, Karamjal, Pakhi Char, Dimar Char, Shelar Char and Narikel Baria.

Moreover, 18 deer and one python were rescued in a critical condition. After giving first aid, they were released into the forest.

Besides, damages to various infrastructures in the forest were estimated at around Tk 6.27 crore.

Over 100 ponds in the forest were flooded with saline water, causing distress to both wildlife and the local residents.

An 11-kilometer area known as Gol Bagan was also damaged.

However, it will take more time to fully assess the extent of damages to the trees and animals, said Mihir Kumar Dey, forest conservator in the Khulna range.

He said this time the forest faced an unusual situation due to the cyclone as it experienced two high tides and two low tides within a 24-hour period, flooding parts of the forest.

AL turned country into 'bottomless basket': Abbas

UNB, Dhaka

BNP senior leader Mirza Abbas yesterday accused the Awami League (AL) government of turning Bangladesh into a "bottomless basket" through rampant corruption. Speaking at a mass prayer event marking BNP founder Ziaur Rahman's 43rd death anniversary, Abbas claimed that Ziaur Rahman had rescued the nation from this status during his tenure. The event, organided by Dhaka South City BNP in front of the Nayapaltan central office, included prayers for Ziaur Rahman's soul and BNP chief Khaleda Zia's health. Abbas criticised the government for raising fuel prices amid skyrocketing living costs, worsening the public's hardships.

PRE-POLLS VIOLENCE

Day of joy marred by tragedy

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narsingdi

Sumon Miah and Sazia Afrin Liza from Narsingdi's Raipura endured a lengthy wait for parenthood. After 16 years, their dreams blossomed into reality with the birth of their twin daughters at a private hospital in Dhaka on Thursday.

However, this long-awaited celebration was overshadowed by sorrow, as Sumon was tragically absent.

Just eight days prior, Sumon, a candidate vying for the vice-chairman position in the Raipura Upazila Parishad election, was killed in a clash with supporters of a rival candidate.

Sumon, 40, son of Charsubuddi Union Parishad Chairman Nasir Uddin, was involved in ruling party politics. He was a former joint general secretary of Narsingdi Government College Chhatra League.

"While it was supposed to be a joyous occasion to welcome the twin babies, our happiness is marred by the brutal killing of my son," said Nasir Uddin, Sumon's father.

"These innocent babies are now fatherless," he added, tearing up.

On May 22, during an election campaign in Mirerkandi area of Paratali Union, Sumon and his followers clashed with supporters of vice chairman candidate Abid Hasan Rubel. There, Sumon was beaten during the clash.

In critical condition, he was rushed to Raipura Upazila Health Complex, where doctors declared him dead.

MP AZIM MURDER

3 placed on fresh remand

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday placed three accused on a five-day fresh remand in a case filed following the murder of lawmaker Anwarul Azim Anar in Kolkata.

The three accused are Amanullah alias Shimul Bhuiyan, Celesty Rahman, and Tanvir Bhuiyan.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Shanto Islam Mallik passed the order after members of Detective Branch of police produced them before the court with an eight-day remand prayer in the case, said a court staffer.

On May 24, the three accused were placed on an eight-day remand.

They were arrested in a case field by Azim's daughter Mumtarin Ferdoush Dorin with the Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station on May 22.

Meanwhile, the West Bengal CID has formed a special team to probe the murder, our correspondent from Delhi reported.

Besides, the search for the MP's body parts continued. "Our search is on in the canal. A few more samples have been collected from the sewage lines of the building where the MP was last seen entering. We are sending them for examination," a CID officer said.

The detectives were also trying to find out more information from his mobile phone's call history.

The West Bengal CID is also examining the CCTV cameras installed along the routes suspected to have been taken by the assailants in disposing of Azim's body parts.

Locals build bamboo dam to prevent river erosion

Their demand for permanent embankment fell on deaf ears

SAHIDUL ISLAM NIRAB, Jamalpur

Locals in Bahadurabad union under Jamalpur's Dewanganj upazila have built a 300-feet bamboo cross dam -- a makeshift dam -- to prevent erosion of Brahmaputra river during monsoon.

Around 500 residents of the union, led by union parishad member Ahmed Ali, voluntarily worked for a week to build the dam in Payolakandi area at a cost of Tk 1 lakh, which was also raised by the local residents from the markets and villages in the union.

They came up with the effort after the authorities concerned failed to take any visible step in response to their demand for the construction of a concrete dam to prevent river erosion.

Brahmaputra flows through Dewanganj, Islampur, Malandah and Sadar upazilas of Jamalpur district.

"The cross dam was built on the second week of May with bamboo and wood collected by the villagers. Six more such bamboo dams will be built on the river bank this year," said Abdul Karim, a farmer of Payolakandi village.

"Every year since 1974, the Bahadurabad area has sustained erosion of Brahmaputra river. Over last 50 years, the river engulfed many villages including Payolakandi Namapara, Madhyapara, Purvapara, Farajipara, Madar-char, Madan-char and Gumer-char villages in the union," he also said.

"Last year, over 300 families in Dewanganj and Bokshiganj upazilas lost their homesteads and around 250 acres of arable lands to Brahmaputra's erosion," said Moinul Islam Butto, a local representative of Bahadurabad union.

"Around one thousand people living along two-kilometre stretch of the river banks are at risk of losing everything to erosion as monsoon looms. However, even in five decades, the government has yet to take any step to save us from the river's erosion," he added.

Local residents Ahmed Ali, Md Anwar Sheikh, and many others said they had to relocate numerous times after losing their homesteads to the river.

"The government should excavate the river and build permanent embankments to protect the union," said Shajahan Mia, chairman of Bahadurabad union parishad.

Terming the local residents' initiative as praiseworthy, Sheikh Zahid Hasan, UNO of Dewanganj upazila, said he informed the matter to local lawmaker as well as the Bangladesh Water Development Board in Jamalpur.

Contacted, Rafiqul Islam, deputy assistant engineer of BWDB in Jamalpur, said, "Cross dams made on river banks with bamboo is a traditional method that works well to prevent erosion."

"Last year, BWDB had placed 13,000 geo-bags across 160-metre stretch on the river bank, but nearly half of those were washed away, mostly in Amkhawa union in Dewanganj upazila," the official also said.

"Proposal for a permanent embankment for Bahadurabad union has already been sent to the concerned ministry," he added.

Foreign ministry not consulted while dropping 'except Israel': Momen

UNB, Dhaka

Former foreign minister AK Abdul Momen yesterday said the Ministry of Foreign Affairs was not consulted while removing the words "except Israel" from the e-passport.

He, however, said Bangladesh's position regarding Israel remains unchanged.

"I was foreign minister at that time. I was not consulted, even the Ministry of Foreign Affairs was not consulted," he said while responding to a question, noting that the Ministry of Home Affairs looks into the passport matters.

Bangladeshi passports now do not bear the text -- "valid for all countries of the world except Israel".

Momen, also the chairman of the parliamentary standing committee on foreign ministry, said Bangladesh does not have any commercial relations with Israel.

He was responding to questions at a public parliament debate contest at FDC, organised by Debate for Democracy with its chairman, Hassan Ahmed Chowdhury Kiron, in the chair.

The topic of the debate was "United efforts by the Muslim world can help stop Israeli aggression in Palestine".

The State University of Bangladesh and Kabi Nazrul Government College debated on the topic.

The attention of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs was drawn to a message on X issued from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Israel welcoming the removal of a ban on travel to Israel on e-passports issued by Bangladesh in 2021.

Momen said they were told that the removal of the observation was done to maintain the international standard of Bangladeshi e-passports.

The MoFA at that time said it did not imply any change in Bangladesh's foreign policy towards the Middle East.

The ban on travel of Bangladeshi passport holders to Israel remains unchanged, according to the MoFA.

The government of Bangladesh has not deviated from its position on Israel and Bangladesh remains firm on its longstanding position in this regard.

The government of Bangladesh has always condemned the atrocities inflicted upon civilians by the occupation forces of Israel in the al-Aqsa mosque compound and Gaza.

Despite watching them and talking with a smile, Jisan did not realise he was being robbed until they left with the money. Later that month, police detained one of the culprits.

In April last year, law enforcement arrested five individuals -- including three Iranians, in Dhaka and Jashore -- following a robbery in Abhaynagar, where a shopkeeper handed over Tk 6 lakh to the perpetrators.

Later in August, two more Iranians were detained in Shibganj of Bogura, following a similar incident.

Contacted, Enamul Haque Sagor, assistant inspector general (media) of Police Headquarters, said, "It is a different modus operandi than regular crimes. We have already arrested several individuals. Whenever such crimes with unusual methods come to light, we take action."

Besides, two cases were filed with Raipura Police Station, accusing his rival candidate Abid Hasan Rubel as the prime accused.

"A reward of Tk 1 lakh has been announced for the arrest of the prime accused, Abid Hasan Rubel, who was a vice-chairman candidate. Efforts are underway to apprehend the other suspects," he added.

'My health, my responsibility'

Speakers tell event on cardiac care

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A growing tendency of excessive commercialisation is taking place in the cardiac healthcare system in Bangladesh, which requires immediate attention, said renowned economist Hossain Zillur Rahman yesterday.

He said excessive commercialisation in the health service is a global phenomenon and Bangladesh is no exception.

Zillur, also former adviser to a caretaker government, was speaking at a seminar at National Sports Council Complex in Purana Paltan of the capital. Saaol Heart Center, Bangladesh organised the event titled, "19th National Saaol Heart Lifestyle".

Speaking as the chief guest, Hossain Zillur said, "My health is my own responsibility. The state's health budget can be increased tenfold, doctors can be more attentive, but if we ourselves are not aware, then it will not be solved."

Oil is the biggest enemy to the heart, said Bimol Chhajer, a non-invasive cardiac specialist from India, adding that everything can be cooked with water instead of oil.

''This is why cooking without oil is important for everyone, especially for heart patients,'' he said.

Changing food habits and lifestyle -- eating oil free foods, doing yoga and maintaining a diet -- can prevent heart disease, he added.

Mohon Raihan, chairman of Saaol Heart Centre Bangladesh, said Saaol Heart Centre was established in 2009 as a health movement to keep citizens free from the risk of heart disease.

Heart disease accounts for 30 percent of the world's deaths, he added.

BCL factions reign

In response to the May clashes, the central BCL unit suspended at least five RU BCL leaders. However, the RU authorities have not taken any punitive measures against those involved.

Additionally, between May 13 and May 19, BCL activists drove out at least three general students from their dormitory seats.

The continuing unrest has left the RU campus in a state of turmoil, with many students feeling unsafe and unprotected.

Contacted, RU Proctor Prof Ashabul Haque said, "We only received a few complaints, which were settled even before we intervened. So, how can we take disciplinary action?"

RU BCL President Mostafizur Rahman Babu said action will be taken against anyone involved in the previous "stray incidents" and any other misconduct.

RU Pro Vice-Chancellor Sultan Ul Islam, however, said the university admission is "concerned" with the recent surge in violence.

"We will hold meetings with student bodies, particularly BCL, to maintain peace and stability on the campus," he added.

PARLIAMENTARY POLLS

S Africa heads for coalition as ANC support plunges

REUTERS, Midrand

South African parties geared up for coalition talks yesterday as the governing African National Congress (ANC) looked set to fall well short of a majority for the first time in 30 years of democracy.

While the party of the late Nelson Mandela looked likely to remain the largest political force after Wednesday's election, voters appeared to have punished the former liberation movement for years of decline.

With results in from 61.2 percent of polling stations, the ANC had 41.9 percent of votes, a precipitous drop from the 57.5 percent it secured in the last national election in 2019.

The pro-business Democratic Alliance (DA) was in second place on 23 percent. uMkhonto we Sizwe (MK), a new party led by former president Jacob Zuma, was at 11.7 percent and eating into ANC support, particularly in KwaZulu-Natal, Zuma's home province.

MK had overtaken the Marxist Economic Freedom Fighters (EFF), currently the third biggest party in parliament, which was sitting on 9.5 percent.

Political parties' share of the vote will determine the number of seats they get in the National Assembly, which then elects the next president.

That could still be the ANC's leader, incumbent President Cyril Ramaphosa. However, an embarrassing showing at the polls risks fuelling a leadership challenge -- but the ANC's Deputy Secretary-General Nomvula Mokonyane said he would not resign.

"Nobody is going to resign ... Collectively, all of us, we still are confident that he (Ramaphosa) has to remain the president of the ANC," she told reporters at the results centre.

"The leadership of the ANC will meet, structures of the ANC will be consulted. For now we are not talking to anybody," she said.

TRUMP'S CRIMINAL CONVICTION

US election stumbles into new territory

AFP, New York

TRUMP IS GUILTY
NOT ABOVE THE LAW
LIES HAVE CONSEQUENCES
RESIST

Torn apart and rewired by Donald Trump's historic criminal conviction, the 2024 presidential campaign moved into uncharted territory yesterday with all eyes on how the two main protagonists navigate the dangers.

Trump wasted no time in shifting from courtroom to campaign mode.

"I am a political prisoner!" he announced immediately after the guilty verdicts landed Thursday on all 34 charges in his New York hush-money trial.

In addition to the New York case, he faces three far more serious criminal indictments over his attempts to overturn his 2020 election loss to Joe Biden and hoarding of top-secret documents at his home in Florida.

Those cases, however, are not likely to go to trial before the November election.

And Trump has in any case turned what would immediately destroy an ordinary political career into a badge of honor, comparing himself to political prisoners like Nelson Mandela and telling supporters that the scandals prove his conspiracy theory about a "deep state" taking away his freedom.

Biden, by contrast, has so far avoided making Trump's multiple legal difficulties an issue. As president, he is keen to avoid giving ammunition to Republicans who claim he is meddling in the justice system.

Now he will have to decide whether Trump's conviction changes the calculus.

Biden's campaign reacted to the verdicts by saying that "no one is above the law." It added, however, that the focus should turn to the election, because "the threat Trump poses to our democracy has never been greater."

Biden himself said nothing about the momentous events in New York.

Yesterday, he had a busy public schedule, including talks with the Belgian prime minister and a celebration for NFL Super Bowl champions the Kansas City Chiefs, which will offer frequent opportunities for him to make remarks to journalists.

Trump is now the first former US president ever convicted of a crime. He would be setting another, even more startling record if he wins on November 5 and replaces Biden in the White House.

The jury found him guilty of falsifying business records to hide a payment meant to silence porn star Stormy Daniels and prevent her from publicizing an alleged sexual encounter that could have been fatal to his 2016 presidential campaign.

Prosecutors successfully laid out a case alleging the hush money and the illegal covering up of the payment was part of a broader crime to prevent voters from knowing about Trump's behavior just as he was about to face Hillary Clinton.

Robert F Kennedy, who is running as an independent in the presidential race, predicted on X that the New York trial would "backfire."

But Keith Gaddie, a political analyst and professor at Texas Christian University, said the political impact of the shocking events has yet to be determined.

Zelensky hails US weapons green light as 'step forward'

AFP, Stockholm

Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky yesterday hailed a US decision to partially lift restrictions on using US-donated weapons to strike inside Russia as a "step forward".

Washington gave the green light on Thursday for Ukraine to use US weapons to defend its Kharkiv region on the border with Russia, overcoming previous concerns that authorising such strikes could drag Nato into a direct conflict with Russia.

Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov said that US-made weapons "are already being used to attempt strikes on Russian territory". "This is quite eloquent evidence of the extent of US involvement in this conflict," he said. But, Nato head Jens Stoltenberg said: "Ukraine has the right for self-defence and we have the right to help Ukraine."

24 people dead in eastern India as temperatures soar

AGENCIES

At least 24 people died of suspected heatstroke in India's eastern states of Bihar and Odisha on Thursday, and the heatwave in the region is expected to continue until today, authorities said.

An Indian court has urged the government to declare a national emergency over the country's ongoing heatwave, saying that hundreds of people had died during weeks of extreme weather, reports AFP.

India has been experiencing a blisteringly hot summer and a part of capital Delhi recorded the country's highest ever temperature at 52.9 degrees Celsius this week, though that may be revised with the weather department checking the sensors of the weather station that registered the reading.

its laws and regulations.

"After the examination, the committee will submit a report to the commission. A decision on the investigation will then be made based on the report," he said.

On Wednesday, SC lawyer Salah Uddin Reagan filed the petition with the anti-graft watchdog seeking probe into the alleged corruption by the former army chief.

In the petition, the lawyer said the US sanctions on corruption charges and subsequent reports in national newspapers have tarnished the image of Bangladesh and its army, both nationally and internationally.

On May 21, the US imposed sanctions on Aziz and his immediate family members for what it said was his involvement in significant corruption.

The lawyer said the actions of Aziz contributed to the undermining of Bangladesh's democratic institutions and the public's faith in public institutions and processes.

Aziz had been the chief of army staff from June 2018 to June 2021. Before that, he led Border Guard Bangladesh for four years from 2012.

Cricket in uncharted territory

Council (ICC) event to be held in part in the United States.

While the bulk of the tournament will be played out in the Caribbean, 16 group stage games in the 20-team tournament will be played on American soil, including the highlight of the group stage -- a clash between India and Pakistan.

That match is due to be played at a 34,000-capacity temporary venue in Long Island, New York on June 9.

The rest of the tournament will be held in the West Indies, including the Super Eight stage, the semfinals and the final, which will be played at Kensington Oval in Bridgetown, Barbados.

The ICC sees the tournament as a launch pad towards the sport's return to the Olympics for Los Angeles 2028, when the T20 format will be used.

Major League Cricket, a T20 tournament, was launched last year and also stands to benefit from any growth in interest in the big-hitting, spectacular shortest form.

The ICC also sees the T20 format as the perfect vehicle for growing the game and this year's edition will feature three T20 World Cup debutants in the USA, Canada and Uganda.

Nepal, Papua New Guinea and Oman are among the other nations who are relatively new to the big stage and who will be looking to make their mark and grab some attention with an upset win.

With the teams drawn in four groups of five teams, with just the top two advancing, none of the smaller nations are expected to progress beyond the group stage and there is a danger the pool stage could mainly be a 'weeding out' process.

involved in such criminal activities, and actions are being taken against them.

On the last day of his two-day visit to the Rohingya camps, the home minister yesterday held several meetings with different stakeholders of the Rohingya camp issues. He visited camp-19 in Ukhiya around 11:00am and held a meeting with members of Armed Police Battalion (APBn).

Inspector General of Police Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun, Additional IGP Anwar Hossain, APBn chief Salim Mohammad Jahangir, and Refugee Relief and Repatriation Commissioner Mizanur Rahman accompanied the home minister during his visit to the camps.

After a law and order meeting on the Rohingya camps on Thursday night, the home minister told reporters at Cox's Bazar Circuit House that no one from Myanmar will be allowed to enter Bangladesh.

He said the government aims to secure the country's border with Myanmar and ensure safety at the Rohingya camps by preventing terrorist activities.

Asaduzzaman directed police and the APBn to stop the violence in Rohingya camps.

Trump 'guilty on all 34 counts'

Trump, however, is not barred from continuing his battle to unseat President Joe Biden in November -- even in the unlikely event he goes to prison.

But this guilty verdict still could sway November's presidential election. A poll from Bloomberg and Morning Consult earlier this year found that 53 percent of voters in key swing states would refuse to vote for the Republican if he were convicted.

Another poll, from Quinnipiac University this month, showed 6 percent of Trump voters would be less likely to vote for him - consequential in such a tight race.

In a press conference yesterday, Trump railed against his criminal conviction, calling his New York trial "very unfair", attacking the process as politicised and vowing to appeal.

"It was very unfair... You saw what happened to some of the witnesses that were on our side -- they were literally crucified," Trump said in a rambling speech at Trump Tower in Manhattan in which he called his adversaries "sick" and "fascists."

He vowed to challenge his conviction on 34 counts of falsifying business records, declaring "We're going to be appealing this scam... on many different things."

Earlier, immediately after the conviction, Trump himself voiced defiance.

"I'm a very innocent man," Trump told reporters, vowing that the "real verdict" would come from voters on election day. He branded the trial "rigged" and a "disgrace."

Biden's campaign issued a statement saying the trial showed "no one is above the law." It added that "the threat Trump poses to our democracy has never been greater."

Judge Juan Merchan set sentencing for July 11 -- four days before the Republican National Convention in Milwaukee, where Trump is due to receive the party's formal nomination.

The 12-member jury had deliberated for more than 11 hours over two days before the foreman read out the unanimous conclusion within a matter of minutes.

Merchan thanked the jurors for completing the "difficult and stressful task."

Their identities had been kept secret throughout proceedings, a rare practice more often seen in cases involving mafia or other violent defendants.

Trump also faces federal and state charges of conspiring to overturn the results of the 2020 election won by Biden, and for hoarding secret documents after leaving the White House.

However, those trials -- on far weightier alleged crimes -- are unlikely to get underway before the presidential election.

Trump was convicted of falsifying business records to reimburse his lawyer, Michael Cohen, for a $130,000 payment to Daniels on the eve of the 2016 election, when her claim to have had sex with him could have proved fatal to his campaign against Hillary Clinton.

While water levels in the Surma and Kushiyara rivers dropped yesterday, they flowed above the danger marks at three points.

With the rivers still flowing above the danger levels, parts of Sylhet city's Uposohor, Taltala, and other areas were freshly inundated yesterday.

The district administration has prepared 547 centres to provide shelter to those affected. A least 3,739 people were staying at the shelters yesterday, compared to 4,802 on Thursday night.

Sylhet Deputy Commissioner Sheikh Russel Hasan said, "The rain has largely subsided, and the overall flood situation is slowly improving, with many returning home from shelters. We have allocated sufficient relief goods for the affected people. We are monitoring the situation round the clock."

WHO WILL WIN THE FINAL SHOWDOWN?

CHAMPIONS LEAGUE

Turn of tide this time for Dortmund, Reus?

SAMAMA RAHMAN

As Borussia Dortmund prepare to walk into Wembley for a Champions League final against Real Madrid, it is hard to pinpoint their source of inspiration.

Any memories of the venue will certainly be tainted by their cruel loss to Bayern Munich 11 years ago, in the final of the same tournament no less.

Add to that the match-up, against the kings of Europe and a team that always seems to win the mental game, and their prospects shrink further.

There is also little encouragement to be found from their recent performances on big occasions. In fact, those performances will only reinforce the mental barrier.

At the end of last season, all Dortmund had to do was beat Mainz at home to become German champions and nothing else would matter. "We have it in our hands,"read a banner across the famed Yellow Wall.

Anticlimactically, perhaps overwhelmed by pressure, they floundered to a draw, conceding the title to Bayern.

There have been many such setbacks in recent seasons.

And one player who has lived through them all is Marco Reus. In fact, the well ran dry immediately after Reus arrived from 2012, the summer after Dortmund won a second straight league title.

Now, after 12 years at Dortmund, including five years as the team's captain, Reus has only two German Cups to his name.

The lack of silverware has often invited questions about mentality, sometimes causing tempers to flare. "You're really getting on my nerves now with your mentality crap, you really are," Reus fumed on the pitch after his team had conceded a last-minute equaliser away at Eintracht Frankfurt.

Whether it has to do with mentality or not, their mercurial form only adds to the mystery.

In the Champions League, Dortmund have been imperious. They finished top of a group with PSG, AC Milan and Newcastle, dramatically overcame Atletico Madrid in the quarters and then saw PSG off without conceding in the semis. But in the Bundesliga, they finished in fifth place.

This all-too-familiar hot and cold pattern has often led to players leaving Dortmund for greener pastures. Young players that are hungry for trophies, like Jude Bellingham, now on the opposing team, and Erling Haaland, are among such examples.

But a better representation would be one of Reus' peers like Mats Hummels, the only other remaining player from BVB's last Champions League final in 2013.

After winning two Bundesliga titles at Dortmund, and going trophyless for the next four years, Hummels moved to Bayern, where he proceeded to win the league three times in as many seasons.

His trophy cabinet also boasts the World Cup trophy, won in 2014, a prize Reus missed out on through injury.

Still, at Dortmund's home, Reus, is hailed as among the all-time greats and adored by the fans as 'one of us'.

"Marco is a living legend," coach Edin Terzic said after Reus' decision to leave. "Where else can you find that in modern football? A story where someone chooses a club for twelve years and spends almost his entire career there is extraordinary at this level."

Coming from Terzic, a Dortmund fan who attended his first game in 1991 at the Westfalenstadion aged just nine, those words carry serious weight.

Despite all the near misses and cruel twists of fate, lifting the Champions League with Dortmund would be a salve for any wound.

But while this date with destiny presents a chance, it also threatens to turn him into the tragic hero one last time. In that case, as he has for years, Reus can turn to the fans, secure in the knowledge that, just like on the last day of the last season, they will be singing his name regardless of the result.

EUROPEENS

- This is set to be Real Madrid's 18th final in the European Cup/Champions League. Los Blancos have lost only in three finals, with their last defeat in the final of the competition coming back in 1981.
- Real Madrid have won five of the last 10 UEFA Champions League. They have also won their last eight finals in the competition.
- Real Madrid legend Toni Kroos will be playing his final game for the all-whites while Borussia Dortmund will be bidding goodbye to their legend Marco Reus and centre-back Mats Hummels.
- This is going to be Dortmund's third Champions League final. They have won it once, in 1997, but lost when they last played the final in 2013 in Wembley against arch-rivals Bayern Munich. Interestingly, the final of this season will also be played at the same venue.
- Dortmund's defeat by Bayern 11 years ago was the only all-German final – and the last time the match was played at Wembley.
- Real Madrid hold a slender advantage considering their head-to-head stats against Borussia Dortmund. In the five matches played in the Champions League between these two sides, Real Madrid have won twice, Dortmund won in one while two other matches ended in draws. Real, however, have won their last two encounters in 2017.
- Luka Modrić and Dani Carvajal could appear in their sixth Champions League final victory for Madrid -- matching Paco Gento's record.
- Having scored the only goal against Liverpool in 2022, Vinícius Júnior could become only the eighth player to find the net in more than one Champions League final.
- Real's triumph in Paris two years ago was the 12th Champions League win for a Spanish side -- five more than the next highest-ranked nation, England.

NABID YEASIN

Come June 1, when Real Madrid players line up for the UEFA Champions League's grand finale at the iconic Wembley Stadium, they will not only be up against the yellow army of Borussia Dortmund but against the entire footballing world -- and there are ample reasons for it.

The sheer dominance in Europe's most elite club competition, the incomparable history of the club, and most importantly, the manner in which they have managed to conquer the most sought-after title time and again means that it will only escalate the envy of almost all the clubs, managers, players and their fanbases to see Real succeed in their bid to land a record-extending 15th Champions League title.

The record 14-time winners of the tournament have made it so that it is not an exaggeration to say that the Champions League is now synonymous with Real Madrid -- a club that is touted as the greatest ever mostly because of their unfathomable pedigree in the very competition.

Just in this decade, Real lifted the coveted Champions League trophy five out of 10 times -- beginning with their mission 'La Decima', climaxed through the iconic '92:48' Sergio Ramos header in their 4-1 win in extra-time over city rivals Atletico Madrid in 2014 final.

It was as if that particular triumph had not only ended Real's 12-year drought in the competition but also opened the floodgate that next brought in an unprecedented three-peat (from 2016 to 2018) that the world could only stand, watch, admire, and aspire to replicate.

While Zinedine Zidane and his core group of Cristiano Ronaldo, Gareth Bale, Karim Benzema, Luka Modric, Casemiro, and Toni Kroos made winning three successive Champions League look almost like a walk in the park, it surely comes as a dream run for most in the business.

But what probably rubs most clubs and their fanbases the wrong way is how Real defied the odds in every knockout stage in the 2022 campaign to win their 14th -- taking their tally so far out of reach of their pack of chasers that now they actually own double of AC Milan, the next best club in terms of Champions League titles with seven in the Italian club's lot.

No one would be able to define how Benzema unleashed a 17-minute hattrick to overturn a 2-0 aggregate score of a star-studded PSG boasting Lionel Messi, Neymar, and Kylian Mbappe in the round of 16 in 2022. Experts were dumbfounded and at a loss for words trying to make sense of Modric's trivela pass to Rodrygo for the tie-winner against Chelsea in the quarters that season, or how Real players pulled off another astonishing miracle at the Santiago Bernabeu by scoring thrice between 90-95 minutes to dump out favourites Manchester City from the semifinal that season.

There was no logic in how Real, a side that rely heavily on their attacking prowess to outscore their opponents both in Spain and Europe, managed to pull off a defensive masterclass akin to the classic Italian style of play against City once again in the quarterfinal second leg this season.

Joselu's story of turning the unlikely hero with two last-ditch goals in this year's semifinal against Bayern Munich still seems like a fairytale -- one that must sting everyone who hoped for the n-th time that Real would surely not script yet another Champions League miracle.

Pundits resorted to labelling their inexplicable comebacks as 'lucky' breaks innumerable times. But Real have pulled the rabbit out of the hat so often that now it only seems logical to state that there indeed exists the intangible 'Real DNA' that kicks in just in moments of despair, spreading in whoever dons that proud white shirt, to keep stupefying the world with glimpses of pure footballing genius.

Real Madrid have dashed the hopes of so many hearts, at times in such cruel manners, that now their ascent feels like a harsh taunt to the rest so far behind.

Hence, it won't be a surprise to see the entire world join the Yellow Wall of Dortmund for the final but that could do very little to deter Real Madrid from being determined to extend their Champions League legacy. And they will have the extra motivation of turning the occasion into a fitting goodbye to one of their legends -- Kroos.

Nicknamed 'the German sniper' for his ability to pinpoint his passes and throughs to anyone at any point of the pitch from even the farthest corners of the ground, Kroos will be bringing the curtain down on a glorious trophy-galore 10-year stay at Real Madrid at Wembley.

"Real Madrid games always follow the rhythm of Toni Kroos. If he wants the team to slow down, we slow down. If he wants us to speed up, we speed up. He decides everything," Kroos'former Real teammate Casemiro had once said. Surely, the players in all-whites will hope for their final dance to the tune of maestro Kroos to be memorable and meaningful, even if it means they would need to fight it out against Dortmund, backed by the entire world.

Is the govt truly serious about its vision to be tobacco-free by 2040?

Bangladesh may aspire to be tobacco-free by 2040, but the government's commitment to implementing stricter tobacco control laws seems at odds with the consistent surge in tobacco production: a nearly 73 percent increase in per-hectare yield over the last 14 years. Tobacco farming now accounts for over 30 percent of annual deforestation, placing the country third globally in this regard. The University of Bath ranks Bangladesh as the 12th largest tobacco grower as of 2020. This growth is alarming given the well-documented health and environmental hazards associated with tobacco cultivation, to say nothing of the dangers associated with its consumption.

The introduction of high-yielding varieties by tobacco companies, coupled with aggressive promotion of chemical fertilisers and pesticides, has enticed farmers with promises of higher profits. However, numerous studies highlight that excessive use of such chemicals depletes soil fertility, contaminates water sources, and disrupts ecosystems. A 2015 study in Kushtia found alarming levels of toxic residues in soil and water samples collected near tobacco farms. This contamination not only harms aquatic life, but also poses a health risk to humans who rely on these water sources. The World Health Organization (WHO) notes that each cigarette emits about 14 grams of CO2 over its lifecycle, and producing 300 cigarettes requires one tree for paper and drying leaves. Water pollution is another grave concern, with a single cigarette requiring about 3.7 litres of water over its lifecycle. Tobacco cultivation demands up to eight times more water than crops like tomatoes or potatoes, leading to significant water usage and pollution.

Despite these grave environmental and health risks, farmers are drawn to tobacco farming due to its profitability. But the real beneficiaries of this growth are the big tobacco companies. In 2022, Euromonitor International estimated the value of Bangladeshi tobacco market at Tk 42,000 crore. British American Tobacco (BAT), with an 85 percent market share, saw its profit after tax rise nearly twofold from Tk 925 crore in 2019 to Tk 1,788 crore in 2023. Meanwhile, the tobacco industry, a top taxpayer, generated over Tk 32,502 crore in revenue from domestic cigarette sales alone last fiscal year, an eight percent increase from the previous year. We cannot help but wonder: is the government, which owns 10 percent share in BAT, truly genuine about its resolve to discourage tobacco farming?

Surely, the government recognises that public health and safeguarding the environment must be prioritised over short-term economic gains. It must strengthen its resolve to discourage tobacco farming by providing alternative crops with comparable profitability and technical support to farmers. We also need stricter regulations as well as public awareness campaigns to control the marketing of high-yielding tobacco varieties and the excessive use of harmful chemicals. The government's vision for a tobacco-free nation by 2040 must account for something.

Malaysian labour market freezes again

Why can't the govt address the recurring irregularities?

On Friday, Malaysia once again closed its doors to aspiring Bangladeshi migrants—along with workers from 13 other countries—because of anomalies in the worker recruitment process. Since the Southeast Asian country first started taking workers from Bangladesh, the labour market has been frozen several times, reportedly due to corruption and irregularities in the recruitment process at the expense of workers' exploitation and criminalisation. It is frustrating that in all these years, neither the Bangladeshi government nor its Malaysian counterpart took any effective steps to address the widely reported irregularities and bring to book the syndicates involved in the recruitment process.

The last MoU signed by the two countries in 2021 capped the cost of recruitment for each worker at $720, but in reality workers ended up paying as much as $5,000, the highest price globally, according to a report in our daily. Meanwhile, workers kept on being deceived by ghost recruiters, then jailed and detained in Malaysia for no fault of their own. In the meantime, the syndicates, including 100 Bangladeshi recruiting agencies, some of which are owned by Bangladeshi lawmakers and their families, kept on making money at the workers' expense. A portion of this money is also being laundered to Malaysia as bribes for Malaysian recruitment firms.

In a recent letter to both governments, four UN experts talked about exploitation noting that "certain high-level officials in both governments are involved in this business or condoning it." Yet, the Malaysian high commissioner to Bangladesh would have us believe that the syndicates recruiting Bangladeshi workers in Malaysia are "beyond the control of the two governments." After decades of worker exploitation right under their noses, can the two governments absolve themselves of their responsibilities, particularly when they are yet to acknowledge—much less take action against—high-level officials involved in the corrupt process?

They must bring the perpetrators to book, no matter how powerful the syndicates are. The irregularities in migrant worker recruitment need to be resolved once and for all, so that our workers do not return as dead bodies or financially and emotionally broken individuals.

LOW VOTER TURNOUT IN UPAZILA ELECTION

Time for some soul-searching for the Awami League

In an ominous sign for democracy, voter turnout in Bangladesh's elections has been decreasing significantly in recent years, exhibiting voters' apathy towards this important process by staying away from casting votes. After the first phase of the ongoing upazila election, which saw 36 percent voter turnout, the ruling Awami League's General Secretary Obaidul Quader explained the poor turnout by saying that the paddy harvesting season as well as storms and rain in different districts were to blame. Nevertheless, he labelled the turnout "satisfactory."

Harvesting was over in almost all the places in the country before the second phase of election, held on May 21, and there was no rain on that day. Yet, the situation did not improve as the second phase saw only 37.57 percent voter turnout—second lowest since 2009.

Although there was not much difference in the voter turnout between the first phase and the second phase, the AL spokesperson came up with a different explanation this time, saying BNP, Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB) and some "anti-state" intellectuals were spreading falsehoods to discourage people from casting their votes.

The AL second-in-command, however, again termed the turnout "quite satisfactory."

In the third phase of the election, which was held on Wednesday, the polls saw 36.24 percent voter turnout—lower than the second phase. This time, Quader reiterated that the voter turnout was satisfactory, despite a natural disaster in the same week.

Now, one may ask whether the Awami League, one of the oldest political parties in the country, which has always claimed to have guaranteed people's right to food and franchise, is satisfied with 36-37 percent voter turnout. AL, which has been in power since 2009, always claimed to have 40 percent of the vote bank. If that is true, then judging by the voter turnout in recent elections, one can either assume that not all pro-AL voters are exercising their franchise, or only its own voters are turning up at the polling booths.

There are several reasons behind the voters' apathy that keeps them from exercising their franchise, including the absence of major political parties in the polls, the Election Commission's failure to ensure free and impartial elections, and the ruling party establishing a trend of being elected unopposed.

If people's apathy towards casting votes gradually turns into apathy for the democratic process, it may be dangerous for all political camps in the country, including the Awami League.

It also seems that a new voting system has been developed in the country over the past decade. Winning by all means and keeping opposition parties off the ballot has become the new voting system.

Take the last three national elections in 2014, 2018 and 2024, for example. Of them, the 2014 and 2024 elections were largely one-sided with most political parties boycotting them, while the 2018 election was questionable as opposition parties alleged that ballot stuffing took place on the night before the voting day.

In the 2014 election, 153 candidates of AL got elected without a single vote being cast, which was enough to form the government.

The total number of voters in the 2014 election for all 300 seats was 9.19 crore, while the total number of voters for the 147 seats in which the election was held was 4.31 crore. A total of 4.88 crore voters, 53 percent of the total voters, were unable to cast their votes and their mandate was not required to form the government in 2014.

In such a situation, it seems the ruling camp is not taking any election—national or local government—seriously, and an attitude may have developed within the party that "whoever wins has to be one of ours."

This time, however, the ruling party changed its strategy and decided not to give party nominations and not to allow the party electoral symbol to be used in the local body polls, aiming to make the election participatory, increase voter turnout, and turn the election festive. But this strategy has so far fallen flat as it has failed to encourage voters to turn up at the polling booths.

With no voters in the vicinity, security personnel sit idle at the Dashgaon Noagaon High School polling centre in Sylhet's Gowainghat upazila during the second phase of the upazila election on May 21, 2024. FILE PHOTO: SHEIKH NASIR

This situation has also left voters with limited options: they can either cast their votes for the ruling party candidates or its dissidents. With the absence of major political parties in recent elections, the polls appear to be a fight between Awami League and Awami League. So, before any election, Awami League aspirants put in their best efforts to get the party ticket instead of wooing voters, seemingly believing that getting the party ticket is enough for them to get elected.

Like the electoral system, a new approach has been adopted by the Awami Leaguers, and most of them have become desperate to cling to power and get elected unopposed for that. The party men don't want any competition on their way to power. In the absence of the opposition parties, the AL candidates can't even tolerate their own party colleagues on their way to win.

Is it realistic to change the electoral culture that developed over a decade simply by changing strategy?

The time has come for the Awami League to realise why voters are turning away from casting votes. Will the ruling camp finally do some soul searching? The chances are slim.

The Awami League, which has led all democratic movements before and after the birth of Bangladesh, is now busier with government affairs than its own organisation. It is busier bashing opponents and holding programmes to counter opposition parties, than finding out organisational weaknesses in its own ranks.

As the party prepares for a grand platinum jubilee celebration next month, it is high time for the party to do some soul-searching instead of focusing on countering its political arch-rival.

How we can protect the best interests of children during divorce

Laila Khondkar is an international development worker.

LAILA KHONDKAR

"The worst thing for the children when their parents divorce is to do 'middle-manning.' You have to tell your mother about your father and vice versa,"shared a young university student who had to go through this experience during her parents' divorce a few years ago.

The Bangladesh Sample Vital Statistics 2023 (BSVS 2023), a nationwide survey conducted by the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS) on 308,032 families, revealed that out of every 10,000 individuals in the country, 11 were divorced. There is a slight decline in divorce from the previous year, when the rate had increased sharply after the Covid-19 pandemic. Overall, divorce is on the rise in society, and this trend is expected to continue.

There are many reasons why people may choose to separate from their partners, from a lack of mutual understanding to violence against women. Moreover, economic empowerment of women gives them the capacity to leave unhappy and abusive marriages. This article, however, is not about analysing the socioeconomic and cultural reasons for divorce. Rather, I would like to focus on the impact children suffer when their parents divorce.

Parental separation can affect children's lives in many ways, including changes in eating habits, behaviour, and exam results. Children may feel depressed and anxious, and there is also the risk of other mental health problems. Most studies on divorce show that the first one to three years are somewhat more difficult for children to adjust to the situation. Also, not all children are equally affected by parental separation. Those who have witnessed very high levels of conflict and bitterness between parents find some relief in separation.

> Post-divorce complications can often become very bitter. There are disputes between parents over who will have custody of the child. A judgement is obtained if legal recourse is taken. However, the tension throughout the whole process can negatively impact the child.

The parents of a Swedish friend of mine divorced when he was 16 years old. He said, "Since I was seven or eight years old, I have seen a dysfunctional relationship between my parents. I myself asked them to get divorced when I reached adolescence. During my school final exams, the situation at home was insufferable because of their conflicts. A social worker arranged for me to be placed with another family. So, when my parents finally got divorced, I was relieved." My friend maintained a good relationship with both parents after the divorce. He is now a university teacher and a father of two children. There are countless examples of children succeeding in education, career and life after parental divorce.

Some teenagers in Bangladesh feel like my Swedish friend because the intense strife between their parents is unbearable for them. Many have witnessed physical and emotional abuse taking place in the relationship between their parents. According to child protection experts, if children witness abuse happening in front of them, it is also a form of child abuse. Children need to protected from this form of abuse as well.

Divorce is still a taboo subject and considered unacceptable by many in Bangladesh. The attitude is changing slowly, but the dominant social tendency is to protect the institution of marriage at any cost, even when it is no longer meaningful for the couple concerned. Therefore, children are under additional mental stress when parents are separated. Many are bullied at school and are subjected to harsh comments from neighbours and relatives. These discriminatory social attitudes need to change. People should stop making judgemental remarks about matters of others' lives without having the slightest idea about their realities.

Post-divorce complications can often become very bitter. There are disputes between parents over who will have custody of the child. A judgement is obtained if legal recourse is taken. However, the tension throughout the whole process can negatively impact the child. Some parents also prevent the child from seeing another parent, which is not acceptable from a legal point of view and a violation of children's rights. Except for a few extreme cases when a parent is a risk to the child, every parent has a right to interact with the child and perform their responsibilities. Having both parents in life is positive for the child's holistic development.

Some parents involve their children in discussions about alimony, division of property, etc, or try to sway them to their side. When parents fight or blame each other in front of their children, it leads the child to believe they must take sides, which is harmful for them. A parent's responsibility is to protect the child's best interests under all circumstances, but many fail to do so post-separation. Their anger and frustration are reflected in their behaviour towards their children.

Parents should consider the situation from their children's perspectives. It is beneficial for children to grow up in a peaceful environment with their parents. But if that cannot be ensured and separation becomes inevitable, the matter should be explained to the children as clearly as possible. Parents should listen carefully if their children express their feelings about the separation. Every child is different. Their reactions will also vary. It is important to let them know that feelings of anxiety, anger, and sadness are normal.

Parents have to learn how to manage the process in a mature way so that it does not affect children negatively. They are responsible for not involving children in the bitterness following separation. It is important for children to have reassurance that despite the separation, both parents will love them unconditionally. Children should be informed that even if the relationship between their parents changes, they can still love both of them.

Relatives, neighbours, and colleagues need to be sensitive to the people going through a divorce as well as their children. Teachers should also ensure that no student is discriminated against because of their parents' divorce. These will make it relatively easier for children to cope with the situation.

Kaiputra: The untold story of a discriminated and excluded community is researcher and director at the Society for Environment and Human Development (SEHD).

Philip Gain

PHILIP GAIN

The government term for the community that rears pigs in the open field in Bangladesh is Kawara. The public, in general, also uses the same word but Kawara, in Bangla, is used in a derogatory way implying the community that lives with pigs. Lately, the Kawara people have adopted the term "Kaiputra," a more respectable term to identify themselves.

If you are travelling through the southwestern districts, especially Satkhira, Jashore, Khulna, Kushtia, Faridpur, Gopalganj, Barishal and Narail, you are likely to see a herd of pigs grazing along the roadside or in a beel. Generally, a flock has 200 to 500 black pigs, almost similar to wild boar in looks. Pigs are considered unholy and therefore unwanted in a Muslim majority country.

However, the pork that comes from the southwestern districts of Bangladesh has high demand among non-Muslims and the big hotels, particularly in Dhaka. The Christians in Dhaka cannot think of celebrating their festivals without pork from the southwestern districts of the country. In fact, black pigs, fed and reared in the open field in these low-lying districts, are routinely slaughtered in Nagori in Kaliganj close to Dhaka and brought to shops in Farmgate. The meat is also supplied to hotels.

We have been following the herds of pigs in a few districts since 2016 for our research interest on the Kaiputra, one of the most miserable and impoverished people of Bangladesh. They leave their families in villages in Satkhira, Jashore and Khulna districts and live with the pigs throughout the year. A herd of 500 pigs require a dozen strong men who are known as rakhals. What I admire most about the rakhals is that they treat the pigs like their siblings. They have particular skills to communicate with the pigs, an intelligent animal.

The rakhals indeed feed the pigs, live with them day and night and talk to them. The pigs also listen to them and follow their instructions. The rakhals and pigs in the depth of our beels have an amazing life that we hardly notice. We normally see them when they come on the road to move from one place to another or feed along the roadside.

The rakhals and their origin

The Society for Environment and Human Development (SEHD) has thoroughly mapped the Kaiputra community and published a book, "Kaiputra: Pig Rearing Community" in 2019. SEHD found this community in 46 villages in Jashore, Satkhira and Khulna districts. In 41 of these villages, the Kaiputra community is active in their traditional business of pig rearing in the open. Kaiputras in five of the villages do not send their men as rakhals in the field. In addition to these 46 villages, there are another 29 villages in these three districts, where the Kaiputra communities have taken up fishing. They are no more interested in traditional pig rearing and in identifying themselves as Kaiputra.

The guesstimated Kaiputra population is 12,000. In 2018, the number of herds of pigs reported by the community members was 102 and the number of pigs, 16,296. Some members of the Kaiputra communities also raise pigs in their homes.

Although all Kaiputra people are followers of Hinduism, they are not considered to be within the four Varnas of the caste system and are therefore untouchables. There is no other community in the southwest of Bangladesh so isolated, ostracised, broken, impoverished and socially excluded.

On April 7 and 8, I visited a Kaiputra para in Dakshin Alipur (No. 2 Ward) in Alipur Union of Satkhira Sadar Upazila. The condition of 47 Kaiputra households—39 on the western side and 8 on the eastern side—of the Satkhira-Shyamnagar highway is worse than appalling. Many of the houses are jhupris. The community reported that the 47 families have been living there on khas land for many decades.

Around 50 men (rakhals) from this Kaiputra para go out in the field with their herds. Their monthly salary ranges between Tk 3,000 and Tk 9,000 plus a daily allowance for food.

The most appalling thing about the Kaiputra community of Dakshin Alipur is 25 of its female members, all widows and abandoned, beg in neighbouring areas. One of them is Kalyani Mondol (60 and above), who has been begging since her husband, a rakhal, died many years ago. She has a daughter, who has been married off. Kalyani lives in a jhupri, about 6 feet by 6 feet, made of nipa palm leaves, polythene and rusted tins. During rain, she has to sit up and stay awake. She is physically handicapped and walks with the help of a stick. What she gets in widow allowance is hardly enough. She cannot survive without begging.

"Because we beg and our men work with pigs, our neighbours look down on us," says Shefali Mondol (35), who also begs and sometimes works as a daily labourer. "In tea stalls and hotels in bazar areas, our cups and plates are separate. We are not socially equal to other humans."

The government reportedly has plans to expand the Satkhira-Shyamnagar Highway into four lanes and has been asking the Kaiputra community to vacate the land they inhabit. The Kaipiutra people are completely landless and have nowhere to go.

They, however, have a suggestion for their relocation. "We are landless and our houses are so flimsy that we consider ourselves homeless," says China Mondol, a mother of two rakhals. China occasionally begs for a living. "There is plenty of khas land on the western side of our current location. We are repeatedly appealing for pucca houses under Ashrayan scheme to resettle us there."

It is to be noted that in August the prime minister announced Satkhira Sadar Upazila free of landless and homeless people. The 47 Kaiputra families of Dakshin Alipur in Satkhira Sadar clearly show that the upazila is not free of the landless and homeless, if Kaiputra people are considered citizens of Bangladesh. These families will remain grateful to the prime minister if she resettles each of them on a piece of land.

Living the life of pig graziers in a fast-changing Bangladesh is really challenging. Maintaining a herd of around 500 pigs requires a large sum of money. The owners of the herds do not have access to bank loans. They take loans from moneylenders at a very high interest rate. They also take loans from NGOs, which are inadequate. There are also high risks of swine flu and other unknown diseases that kill pigs in masses.

In January 2022, an unknown disease killed many herds of pigs. Dilip Mondol, owner of a big herd of pigs in Vayana village in Jashore, helplessly watched all of his 700 animals die when an unknown disease struck. His net loss was Tk 50 lakh. His debt to different parties was Tk 30 lakh. He is completely broke now. He is not sure if and when he can come back to business. There are many others who witnessed their pigs' death after the attack of the unknown disease. Many do not report these diseases in fear of hostility from the locals.

The Kaiputra people want change and a respectful life. Bangladesh has indeed made significant progress in many sectors including health, education, economy, employment generation and fisheries. Many from the Kaiputra community have also changed their occupation. Those who have given up their pig grazer profession and moved to fishing feel they are doing better socially and economically. Many have also been changing their Kaiputra title, Mondol, to Tarafdar, Biswas, Sarkar, etc. Their children are getting admitted to schools in greater numbers. Yet, the Kaiputra like those in Dakshin Alipur are left far behind than any other community in the southwest, where they are concentrated.

As long as they keep taking their pigs for grazing in the open field, a practice they have inherited from their forefathers, they need support and protection from state and non-state parties. Their urgent needs include but are not limited to: the ability to take their pigs for grazing without fear, license, insurance, access to bank loans, social protection, access to khas land with ownership, medical treatment for pigs when they are struck by diseases, and recognition of pigs as domestic animals.

Earth: Our only home, our responsibility

MD ZIAUL HAQUE

The fragile beauty of Earth is a poetic reminder of the intricate balance that sustains all life on our planet. From the expansive oceans to the verdant forests and majestic mountains, every facet of our natural world contributes harmoniously to the symphony of existence. The intricate ecosystems brimming with a diverse array of flora and fauna underscore the resilience and interconnectedness of all living organisms.

However, the swift pace of human activities, which are causing deforestation, pollution, and climate change, poses a severe threat to Earth's delicate beauty. It is crucial for us to acknowledge that our actions have profound consequences on this planet, and to assume responsibility for preserving and safeguarding this irreplaceable home for future generations.

Environmental conservation transcends mere moral obligation; it is an essential prerequisite for the survival of our planet and its inhabitants. The well-being of humanity is directly linked to the health of our ecosystems, encompassing clean air, water, and fertile soil for agriculture. Through the preservation of biodiversity and protection of natural habitats, we ensure that the delicate balance within our ecosystem remains undisturbed, enhancing resilience against environmental perils such as climate change.

Moreover, environmental conservation plays a pivotal role in securing the ability of future generations to flourish on Earth. By taking proactive measures to curb pollution, conserve resources, and mitigate habitat destruction now, we are investing in a sustainable future for all life forms on this planet. Each individual endeavour towards environmental conservation contributes significantly towards fostering a more symbiotic relationship between humankind and the natural world—one that prioritises reverence for the environment and ensures enduring prosperity for all living entities.

Amid mounting evidence showcasing the undeniable impacts of climate change, we must acknowledge the urgency surrounding this global crisis. Rising sea levels, extreme weather phenomena, and ecological shifts are no longer distant anticipations but tangible realities confronting us today. The accelerated pace at which environmental degradation is unfolding necessitates immediate action from individuals, communities, and nations alike.

Of particular concern are the ramifications of climate change on biodiversity. Species worldwide face extinction as their habitats vanish or become inhospitable due to fluctuating temperatures and environmental circumstances. Moreover, the issue of climate change is exacerbating prevalent social disparities by disproportionately affecting marginalised communities that lack the means to adapt or recover from environmental crises. With rising temperatures and an increase in natural disasters, vulnerable populations face heightened risks to their health, livelihoods, and overall welfare. A comprehensive approach to addressing climate change is imperative, one that places equity and justice at the forefront. Preserving biodiversity and the health of ecosystems is not merely an environmental concern but a critical matter for human survival. Each species within an ecosystem plays a vital role in maintaining its equilibrium, and the loss of even one can trigger ripple effects throughout the entire system.

By safeguarding biodiversity, we are also ensuring our own well-being, as diverse ecosystems provide essential resources such as clean air, water, food, and medicine. Additionally, protecting ecosystems is crucial for combating climate change. Healthy forests act as carbon sinks by absorbing significant amounts of CO2 from the atmosphere and helping regulate global temperatures. Safeguarding these natural habitats is essential for addressing climate change and securing a sustainable future for the upcoming generations.

Sustainable living practices are key to securing a flourishing future for our planet. From reducing waste and embracing renewable energy sources to supporting local businesses and promoting ethical consumption practices, each small step we take can have a substantial impact on the environment. By making mindful choices in our daily lives, we can contribute to a more sustainable and harmonious world for upcoming generations.

The adoption of minimalism is another pivotal aspect of sustainable living that often goes unnoticed. Instead of constantly pursuing material possessions and consumerism, embracing a minimalist lifestyle helps decrease our carbon footprint and shift our focus towards experiences over material goods. By simplifying our lives and reducing excess clutter, we not only benefit the environment but also enhance our overall well-being in the process.

Dissemination of information and the education of others on environmental concerns can also serve as a catalyst for collective efforts towards a more sustainable future. Simple gestures such as engaging in community clean-up initiatives or backing local conservation projects have the potential to trigger a cascade of positive outcomes. Ultimately, it falls upon each individual to acknowledge his or her role in shaping the planet's well-being and to strive towards a harmonious coexistence with the natural world.

Government policies and global initiatives hold significant sway in determining the course of our planet's future. International agreements on climate change, like the Paris Agreement, and sustainability targets set by various nations are pivotal in addressing environmental issues on a global scale. It is heartening to witness governments uniting to combat challenges such as deforestation, pollution, and resource depletion through collaborative endeavours and shared commitments. Nonetheless, there remains substantial work ahead in terms of effectively implementing and enforcing these policies. Without robust enforcement mechanisms and accountability measures, many initiatives risk falling short of their intended impact.

Our obligation to safeguard our habitat culminates in recognising that the destiny of Earth lies within our grasp. Each person has a responsibility to safeguard and nurture this planet for generations to come. By curbing our ecological footprint and advocating for sustainable methods, we collectively hold the power to instigate change. Moreover, acknowledging the interdependence among all living creatures underscores the urgency for immediate action. By understanding that every decision we make impacts not only ourselves but also the intricate balance of nature, we can start fostering a sense of duty towards this beautiful planet.

5 Reasons Why You Should Drink MILK EVERY DAY

SAMIA HUDA

Milk, often referred to as nature's most complete food, has been a dietary staple for centuries. It's not just a beverage; it's a powerhouse of essential nutrients that contribute to overall health and well-being. Here are five compelling reasons why you should make drinking milk a daily habit.

EXCELLENT SOURCE OF CALCIUM

Calcium is crucial for maintaining strong bones and teeth. Milk is one of the best sources of this vital mineral, helping prevent conditions such as osteoporosis and dental problems. Consuming adequate calcium, especially during childhood and adolescence when bone growth is at its peak, sets the foundation for a healthier skeletal system throughout life. For adults, regular intake of calcium helps maintain bone density and reduces the risk of fractures.

RICH IN HIGH-QUALITY PROTEIN

Protein is an essential macronutrient that plays a critical role in building and repairing tissues, producing enzymes and hormones, and supporting immune function. Milk contains all nine essential amino acids, making it a complete protein source. Drinking milk daily can help meet your body's protein requirements, which is particularly beneficial for those engaged in regular physical activity or muscle-building.

PACKED WITH ESSENTIAL VITAMINS AND MINERALS

Milk is rich in vitamin D, which aids in calcium absorption and bone health. Additionally, milk contains vitamin B12, important for red blood cell production and neurological function, and vitamin A, essential for vision and immune health. The potassium and magnesium in milk help regulate blood pressure and support cardiovascular health.

WEIGHT MANAGEMENT

Incorporating milk into your daily diet can aid in weight management. The protein and fat content in milk contribute to a feeling of fullness, reducing overall calorie intake by curbing hunger and preventing overeating.

Studies have shown that individuals who consume dairy regularly are more likely to maintain a healthy weight or even lose weight when combined with a balanced diet and regular exercise.

PROMOTES HYDRATION AND OVERALL HEALTH

Milk is composed of about 90% water, making it an excellent source of hydration. Staying hydrated is vital for bodily functions such as temperature regulation, nutrient transport, and waste removal. Furthermore, the electrolytes in milk, such as potassium and sodium, help maintain fluid balance in the body, which is especially important after exercise or during hot weather.

So, raise a glass to better health and make milk a daily habit!

FLASH FLOOD IN SYLHET

6.43 lakh people stranded in eight upazilas

Many facing shortage of drinking water, food

DWOHA CHOWDHURY, Sylhet

At least 6.43 lakh people have been marooned in Sylhet's eight upazilas as flash floods hit the district early Thursday, according to the local administration.

Vast swathes of low-lying areas in Gowainghat, Companiganj, Jaintiapur, Kanaighat, Zakiganj, Beanibazar, Golapganj, and Sadar upazilas went under water owing to incessant rains and a gush of water from upstream areas in neighbouring Indian Meghalaya State since Wednesday night.

As a result, homes, schools, vegetable fields, fish enclosures, and key roads were submerged in 48 unions under these eight upazilas.

The flood-affected people are suffering from shortage of food and drinking water.

"Water entered my home so quickly that I could barely save any of my belongings. Paddy stored in the house got wet, and my fish worth Tk 7 lakh in three ponds were washed away," Moklisur Rahman, a resident of Nayagram Uttar area in Gowainghat upazila, told this newspaper last morning as he was drying his crop on a road.

Sabina Akhter's house, located in the same village next to a haor, was swept away by strong currents when the flash floods hit first.

"We had to take shelter at a neighbour's house. We'll now have to take out a loan to rebuild the house, but we aren't sure how we would repay the loan," she said.

Malika Begum of Forfora village in Jaintiapur upazila said her family along with eight other families took refuge at a shelter early Thursday.

"There were 15 families last night. Seven of them left as the floodwater in their localities receded. But we are still not being able to return home as the situation has not improved in our village," she said.

With the Sari-Gowain river flowing below danger level, the floodwaters were slowly receding yesterday in five upazilas that were first hit by the flash floods -- Gowainghat, Companiganj, Jaintiapur, Kanaighat, Zakiganj.

As of 6:00pm yesterday, the river was flowing 24cm below the danger mark at Gowainghat point and 34cm below the danger mark at Sarighat point, where the river flowed 33cm above the danger mark around the same time on Thursday.

In the last 24 hours till 6:00pm yesterday, 15mm rainfall was recorded in Kanaighat upazila and 19mm in Sylhet Sadar upazila.

Meanwhile, 193mm of rainfall was recorded in Cherrapunji, Meghalaya in the last 24 hours till 9:00am yesterday.

Unrest likely if Rohingyas not sent back to Myanmar

Says home boss

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

Unrest may occur in Cox's Bazar if the Rohingyas are not repatriated soon, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan said yesterday.

"A hub of international terrorists may be created here. There may be an influx of arms. Many things can happen. And we already see some signs of them," he told journalists while visiting a Rohingya camp in Ukhiya of Cox's Bazar in the morning.

The minister said some people who are fighting inside Myanmar can be seen in Rohingya camps.

"The biggest fear is that drugs have been coming in from Myanmar for a long time although our country does not produce any drugs. Some people in the camps here have got involved in drugs," said Asaduzzaman.

He said the government is trying to identify those

Israel offers new Gaza ceasefire plan

Says Biden, urges Hamas to accept it; aid not reaching Gaza population, says UN

REUTERS, Washington

US President Joe Biden yesterday said Israel had proposed a Gaza ceasefire in exchange for the release of hostages, and called on Hamas to agree to the new offer, saying it was the best way to end the conflict.

"It's time for this war to end and for the day after to begin," said Biden, who is under election-year pressure to stop the Gaza conflict, now in its eighth month.

Talks mediated by Egypt, Qatar and others to arrange a ceasefire between Israel and Hamas have repeatedly stalled, with both sides blaming the other for the lack of progress.

There was no immediate comment from the Israeli prime minister's office or from Hamas on Biden's remarks.

The new proposal Biden laid out yesterday is made up of three phases; the first would be a ceasefire lasting for six weeks.

During this time, Israeli forces would withdraw from Gaza and hostages, including the elderly and women, would be exchanged for hundreds of Palestinian prisoners. Palestinian civilians would return to Gaza, including northern Gaza, and 600 trucks would bring humanitarian aid into Gaza each day, Biden said.

- Humanitarian situation dire in Gaza: Blinken

In the second phase, Hamas and Israel would negotiate terms of a permanent end to hostilities. "The ceasefire will still continue as long as negotiations continue," the president said.

The third phase would include a major reconstruction plan for Gaza.

The proposal has been relayed to Hamas by Qatar, Biden said.

He called on those in Israel who were pushing for "indefinite" war to 57 constituencies go to polls today

Modi, Omar Abdullah among key candidates in the last phase

OUR CORRESPONDENT, New Delhi

INDIA ELECTION

An estimated 10.06 crore Indians are expected to cast their votes today in the last phase of voting in 57 constituencies spread across eight states and two union territories.

A total of 904 candidates, including Prime Minister Narendra Modi, are in the fray in the seventh and final phase of voting which began on April 19.

Modi of the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) is seeking a third term from the ancient city of Varanasi in eastern Uttar Pradesh, and his nearest challenger is Ajay Rai of Congress.

In a video message to Varanasi voters on the last day of campaigning on Thursday, Modi urged them to turn up at polling booths in record numbers.

Among other key candidates in the seventh phase are: senior BJP leader Ravi Shankar Prasad in Patna Sahib constituency in Bihar, Omar Abdullah of Jammu and Kashmir National Conference in Baramulla and West Bengal chief minister Mamata Banerjee's nephew Abhishek Banerjee in Diamond Harbour.

Nine Lok Sabha constituencies in Kolkata, its nearby suburbs, and the Sundarbans are going to the polls in the last phase of elections in West Bengal. Votes will be counted on June 4.

In Punjab, there will be battles for 13 seats between the state's ruling Aam Aadmi Party and Congress despite the fact that the two parties had forged an alliance for taking on BJP for the seven seats in Delhi.

Once again, the focus in the last phase will be on the voter turnout. The turnout in the first six phases of polling was 66.14 percent, 66.71, 65.68, 69.16, 62.2 and

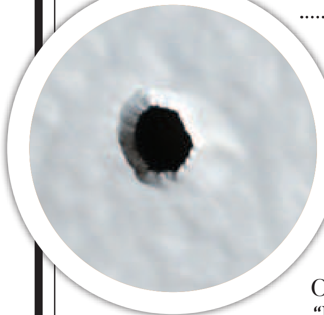
Mysterious pit on Mars could be key to colonising the Red Planet

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK



A newly discovered hole on Mars likely connected to underground caves could be key to colonising the Red Planet, astronomers say.

An image of the pit, which is a few metres across, was captured by Nasa's Mars Reconnaissance Orbiter.

"Pits may reflect geologically recent tectonic or volcanic activity. Any associated caves could be targets for future robotic exploration," researchers at the University of Arizona who analysed the images said in a blog post.

Mars has vast networks of lava tubes similar to those found on Earth which could host life forms, sheltering them from dust storms and the harsh planetary conditions caused by the lack of an effective magnetic shield and a thick atmosphere like Earth's.

Scientists suggest such cave networks, formed from the collapse of ancient lava tubes, could be potential shelters for future astronauts.

The newly discovered pit is near a dormant volcano in the Arsia Mons region, a volcanic plain thousands of kilometres across. This region is elevated relative to the rest of Mars by about 10km on average.

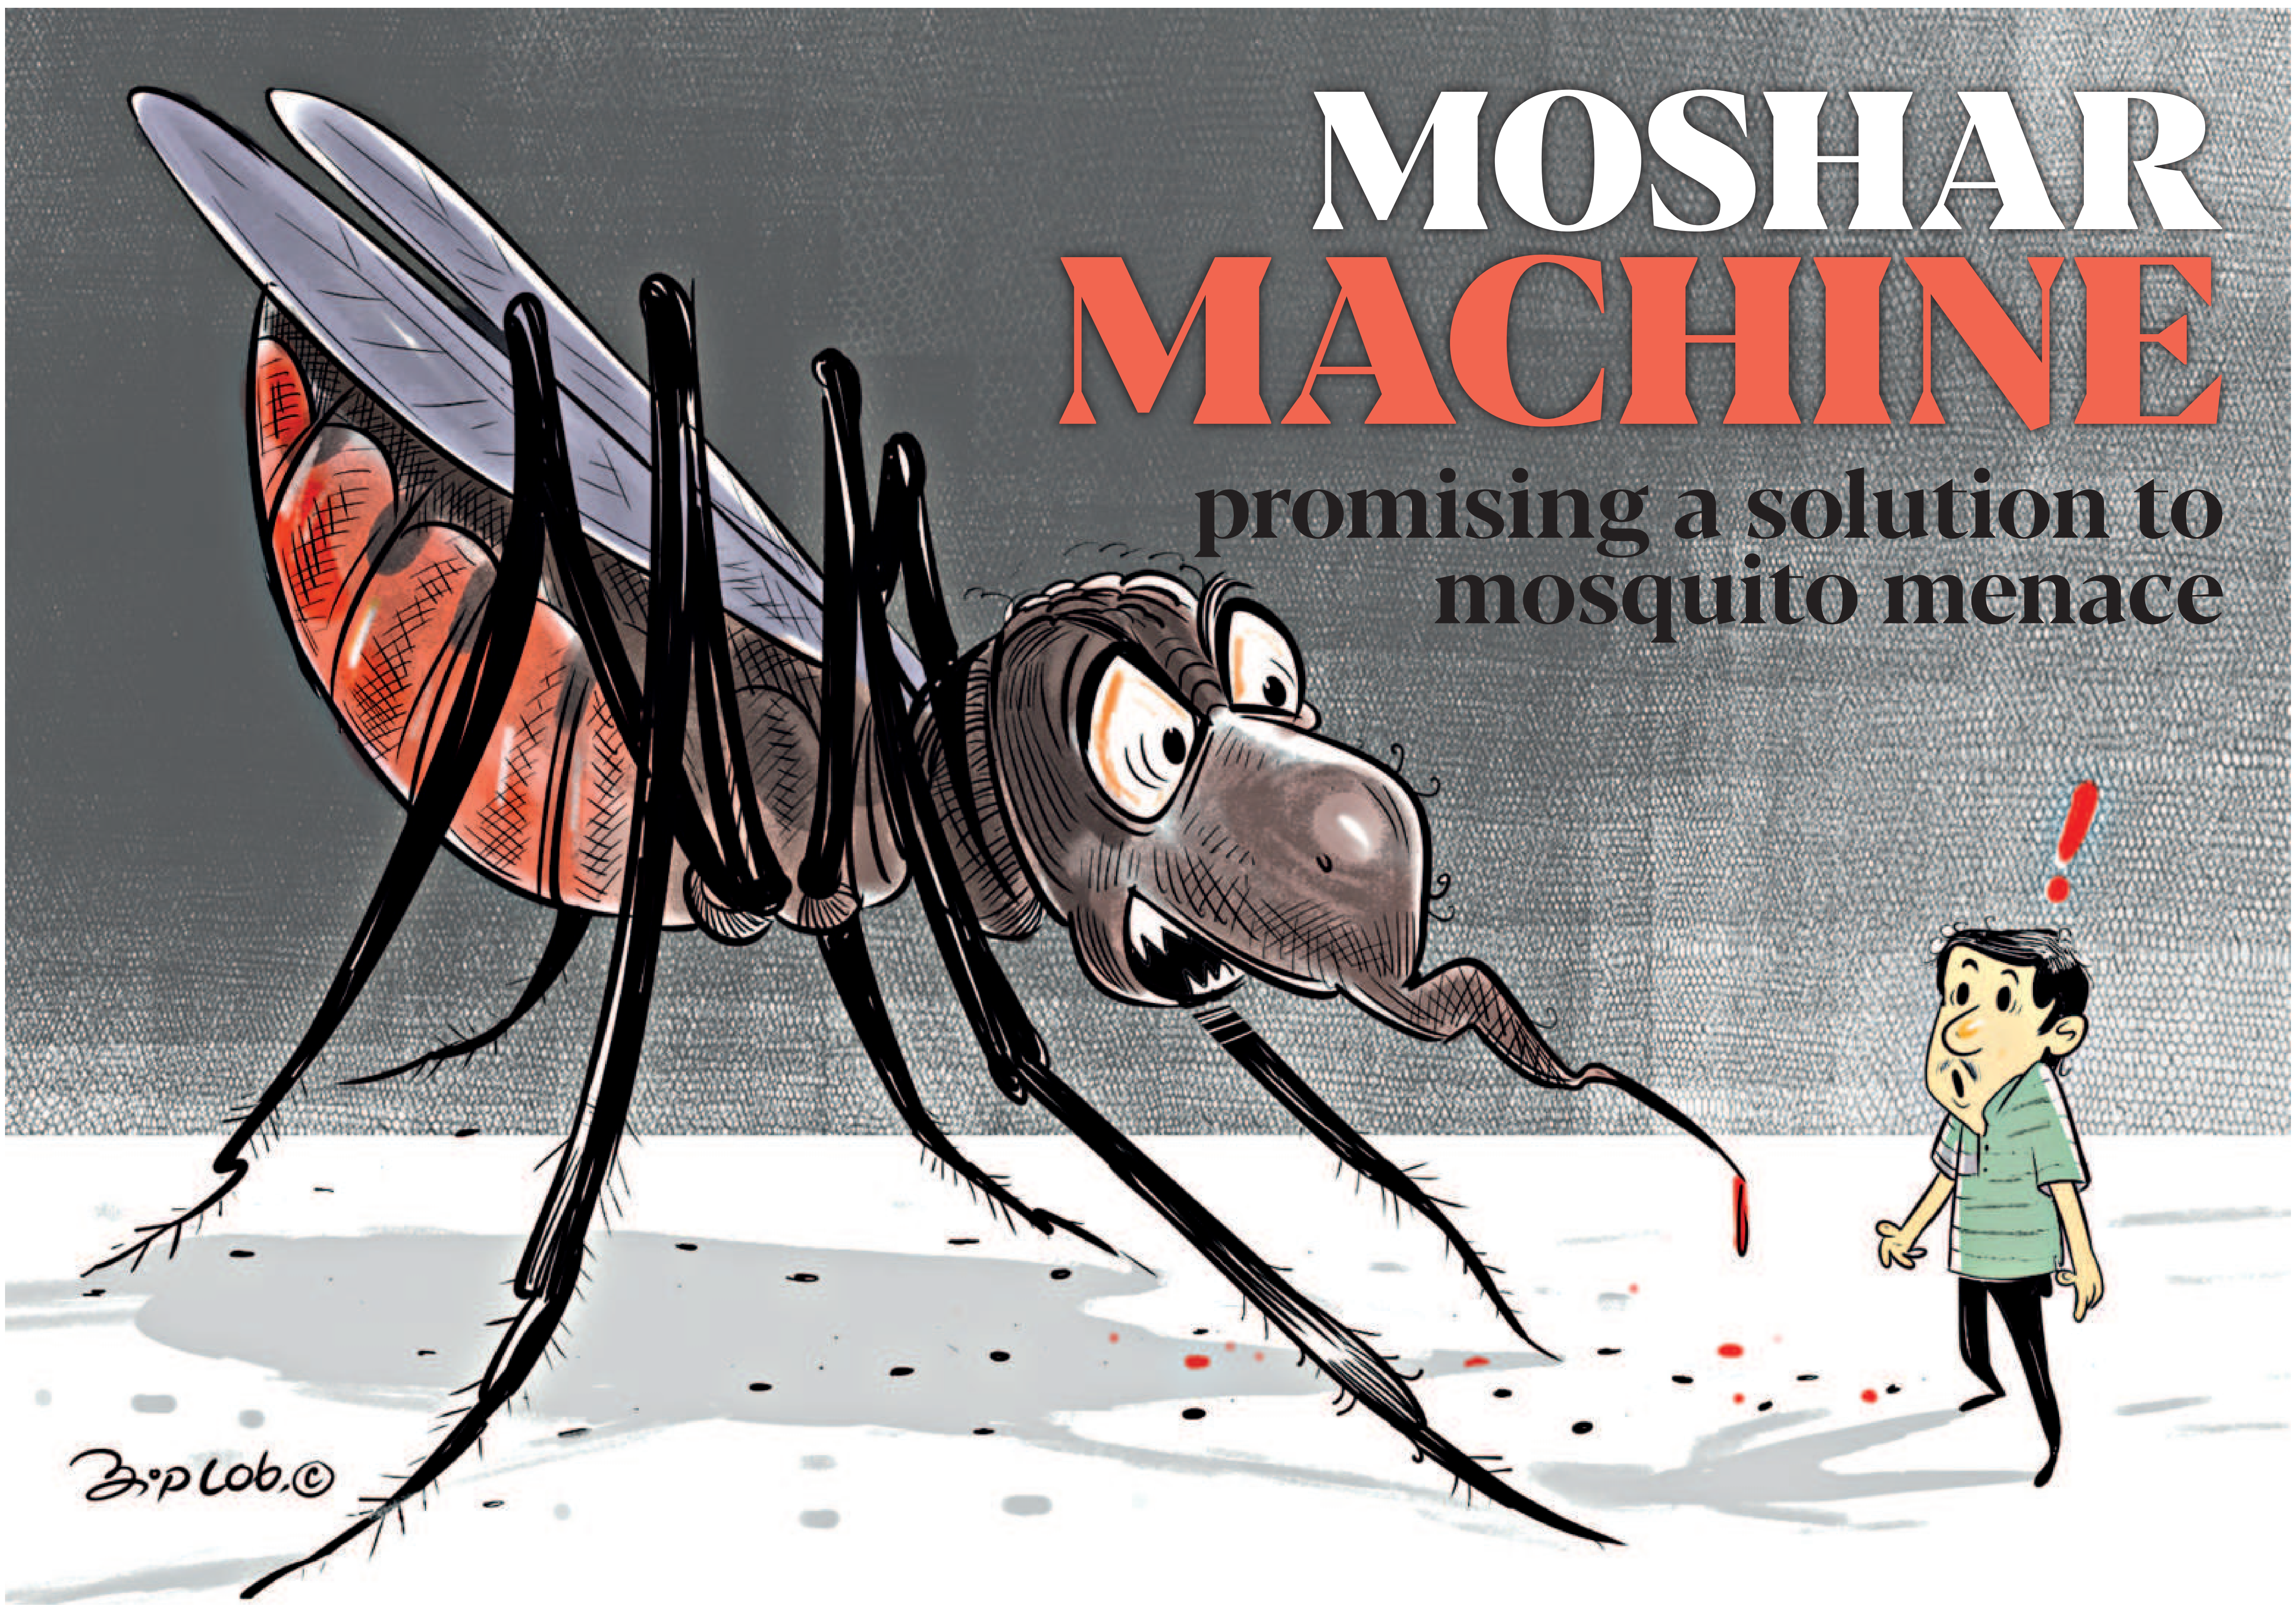
promising a solution to mosquito menace



"We designed this metal body to house the device so that it can be deployed in public places. This metal outer cage made this machine extremely durable, requiring simple maintenance like cleaning the nets with a brush."

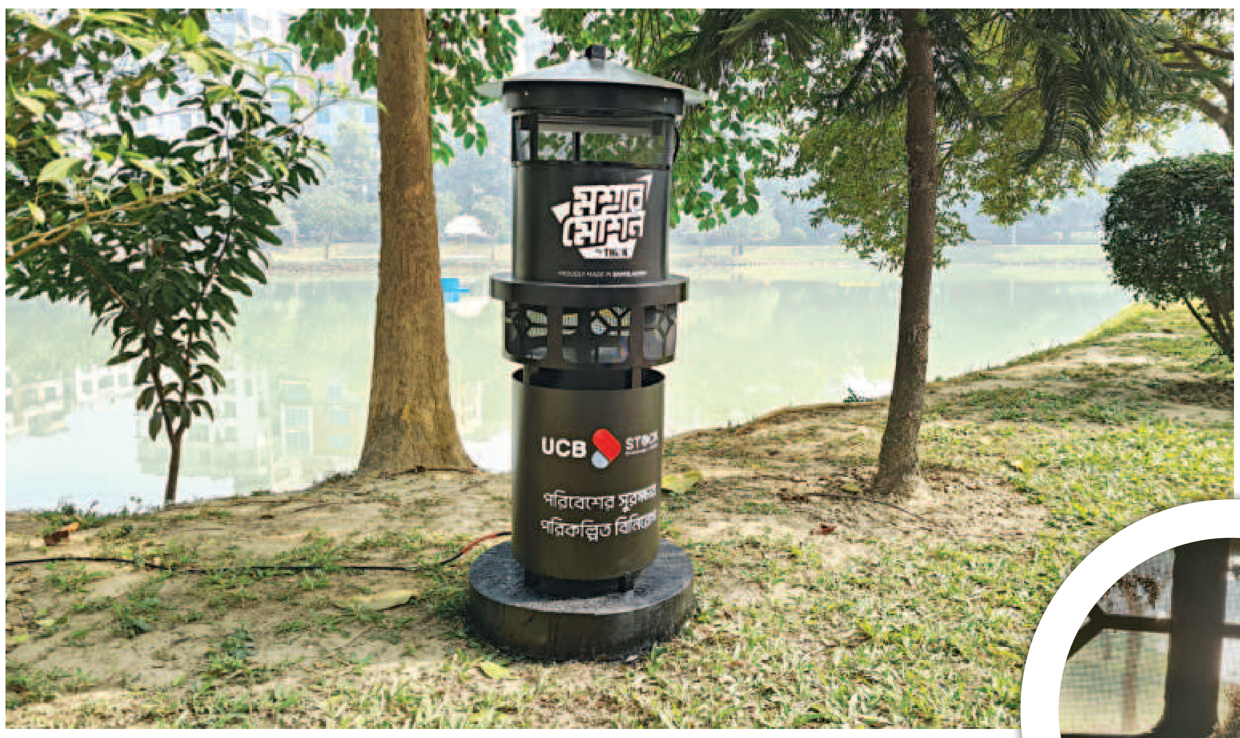
Ashiqur Tanim,
Founder THiNK LABs

MD SHAHNAWAZ KHAN CHANDAN

When the entire country is grappling with mosquito menace, a Bangladeshi entrepreneur and his team have come up with an ingenious solution that promises to be an effective tool in mosquito control.

Manufactured entirely in their lab with low-cost, eco-friendly technology, the device, named "Moshar Machine", can trap and kill a large number of mosquitoes if placed at an appropriate location.

Ashiqur Tanim, an Australian-educated entrepreneur, returned to Bangladesh in 2019 to invest in the research and development sector. He set up a lab in Dhaka named THiNK LABs, hired young Bangladeshi engineers and started developing tech-based solutions for a wide range of clients.



Tanim's love for technology and his drive to make a difference led him to focus on mosquito-borne diseases like Dengue, which take countless lives each year. He saw this as his chance to contribute meaningfully to the society.

After years of research, Tanim and his team at THiNK LABs developed a mosquito trap based on the formula of existing CO2 mosquito traps. However, unlike the other traps, THiNK LABs' device is of much larger capacity, way cheaper, and eco-friendly. It can also be used as an air disinfectant.

HOW THE DEVICE WORKS

The researchers at THiNK LAB have developed a way to make the device emulate human breathing, a feature that female mosquitoes, which require blood to reproduce, find irresistible.

The "Moshar Machine" device is equipped with a light source that emits light at a particular wavelength which enables it to interact with a special chemical coating within the device. Scientifically, this interaction is called photocatalysis.

This process produces highly reactive superoxide anions and hydroxyl radicals which oxidise organic matter in the air (bacteria, viruses and other organic compounds) and this ultimately leads to the release of trace levels of carbon dioxide that replicates human breathing.

According to Tanim, "Usual CO2 mosquito traps burn fossil fuels such as propane and use other chemicals to mimic human breathing. Users have to refuel the device regularly which is expensive and the fuel and its byproducts may also have some adverse impact on the environment."

"The Moshar Machine's innovative technology initiates photocatalysis and uses organic compounds in the air to replicate human breathing. So, we don't need any fuel to operate the machine and it does not produce any adverse by-products," states Tanim.

"On the other hand, the process automatically kills harmful bacteria and viruses in the air thus disinfecting it. And, the huge amount of dead mosquitoes this machine produces can be used as high-quality poultry and fish feed," added Tanim.

Once the mosquitoes get attracted to the machine, they are sucked into it through automated flaps and transferred to a cage where they die within two to three hours from dehydration. The flow of dry air produced by a fan fitted inside the machine speeds up the process of dehydration.

The entire setup comes inside a large metal body so that it can be safely used outdoors.

Tanim said, "We designed this metal body to house the device so that it can be deployed in public places. This metal outer cage made this machine extremely durable, requiring simple maintenance like cleaning the nets with a brush. It also enables the device to have a high volume of mosquito retention capacity."

EFFICACY OF MOSHAR MACHINE

Eminent entomologist Professor Dr Kabirul Bashar has conducted a comprehensive efficacy test of the device at several locations.

He commented in the test report, "According to the test results, the Moshar Machine attracts and captures mosquitoes quite successfully. Its ability to significantly reduce mosquito populations in the tested environments is particularly promising. The Moshar Machine's environmentally friendly design, free of hazardous chemicals, not only makes it safe to use in a variety of situations but it also benefits the environment."

The test report showed that the Moshar Machine successfully captured and killed eight species of mosquitoes including Aedes albopictus which transmits dengue, zika virus and Chikungunya, Anopheles minimus which is one of the primary vectors of malaria and other species of culex, mansonia and armigeres mosquitoes.

When asked about the efficacy of this machine Dr Bashar commented, "I have compared this device with other mosquito traps developed by renowned foreign companies. I have found Moshar Machine more effective and much cheaper than those. It can kill more than 3,000 mosquitoes in one night. It is appreciable that a Bangladeshi company has developed it and I think we should popularise it."

Dr Bashar stated further, "The device only attracts female mosquitoes as a result it can affect breeding and curb mosquito population effectively. The Moshar Machine can be a non-hazardous and environment-friendly approach to control mosquitoes if it can be deployed and managed effectively on a wider scale."

Tanim said the machine's unique technology of emulating human breathing ensures that beneficial insects for the ecosystems such as bees will not get attracted by the device.

He also stated that while any insect trapping system might unintentionally catch a small number of beneficial insects, the Moshar Machine's design significantly reduces the likelihood of this happening. The team is always monitoring field data and feedback to refine the Moshar Machine for maximum effectiveness further and minimise unintended impact.

He suggested, "For indoor use, the best performance can be obtained if the machine is positioned in well-ventilated spaces and entry points of a house. We have also developed the prototype of a smaller portable version of this machine for indoor usage."

According to Tanim, the larger version of the machine is perfect for controlling mosquitos in public spaces and mosquito breeding zones, ultimately reducing mosquito infestation in the locality.

THE INNOVATION NEEDS FUNDING AND PATRONISATION

THiNK Labs' innovative device has attracted attention from various quarters, and many people and institutions have purchased it for personal use.

Bangladesh Diesel Plant Limited, a state-owned engineering company, has shown interest in manufacturing the steel outer cage of the device. At present, the team has the capacity to manufacture 3,500 of these machines per month.

According to Tanim, the full benefit of this machine can only be realised when it is deployed systematically in public places and mosquito breeding zones and managed by relevant authorities.

He said, "If the government tries the machine and patronises its research and development, a more durable, high capacity and low-cost version of this machine can be developed. We have the capacity to install anti-theft and automatic monitoring mechanisms with this machine for deploying in public places. Some of these models have already been deployed at different places in Dhaka and they are working really well."

AFTER THE RAIN

MIR ARIF

> At that time the only thing that mattered to me was being a bad boy in the industry. I knew I was excused for the gossip I created, for a huge portion of my fans were naive to believe that my scandals were simply the creation of the media, to keep the populace returning to theaters for the same films—in other words, a simple business ploy.

While leaving the institute, a nurse gave me a packet of cigarettes as a token of friendship. I sat on the grassy lawn secured with a chain link fence, took a cigarette out of the packet, and wedged it between my lips. It was one of those slow afternoons when leaves didn't stir and clouds didn't move—only occasionally crows cawed from some magnolia branches, as though waking people up from a reverie. Behind me stood the three-story facility, its red walls peeled off by age and humidity. With no one to disturb my silence, no residents guffawing or raving, I could finally enjoy a silent afternoon on my own. It was strange to be able to sit under the open sky as a part of me didn't want to leave, wanted to go back inside the institute, my second home where I spent 36 years of my life, more than half of which passed sleeping. I was lucky to have never been chained to bedposts, which was done to some patients to avoid violence and aggression. Getting a second chance to live, I knew I wouldn't return there and squander it.

Of all things, I wished to see myself in front of a mirror. Were there any remnants of youth and handsomeness on my face? Or did I turn ugly, so bad that my appearance would frighten strangers and kids? Or was it a face of age and wisdom, with tufts of grey hair resting on my head? I had no idea what I looked like, but I knew that nobody would believe that I was born into a very wealthy family. My father always told me that your birth was just a coincidence in the grand scheme of things. "You are not made of something superior. You and our servants have the same blood. We come from the same a'lam arwa, the world of souls", he told me one day while I was playing hoopla with my brothers, aiming at targets strewn on the grassy backyard. I wouldn't have known that disguised in his grandiose speech was the truth of my birth, that I was born out of wedlock in the womb of one of his servants, a woman I'd never know. She was sent away soon after my birth.

ILLUSTRATION: MAISHA SYEDA

I was simply a child, fighting with my siblings or crying out for help when I didn't win in a fight. I'm not ashamed to tell you this: my father kept knocking up servants and his legally married wife ended up having six babies to raise, none from her womb. There was simply no place for her outside of the dictation of my father's world, so she ended up doing what any mother is expected to do. She raised us, fed us, bathed us, and even put us to sleep, singing lullabies about marauders coming to our land and harming peasants' wives and stealing their kids. I can't tell if she loved us, perhaps she did, perhaps she didn't. A thin, wispy woman in my memory, always fighting with my father for something not right in the house. Although she never named it, we kids knew. We knew she wasn't our mother; she was simply passing her years with us. She had nowhere else to go, no laws to protect her rights, no friends to console her. As though to balance the turmoil in the family, my father prospered outside, in his ship-making business. The only good thing he did for us was bring home a projector and run foreign films—mostly Indian and Iranian and occasionally Hollywood, films that came out not so recently but years and decades ago. He watched them with us in the garden, seated on his old Burmese teak chair, surrounded by sash-wearing servants while everyone else, including my mother, sat on the grass.

I didn't know where it came from, probably the movies had something to do with it. I grew up believing I was meant for greater things in life. I'd been acting since high school, a passion I continued with utmost honesty. Years later, after influential letters and phone calls from my father, I signed my first film contract that earned me 30,000 taka. It was a lot back then, for a young bachelor I mean, but I compensated for all the losses of my early youth by sleeping frequently with my co-stars, producer's wives, and occasionally fans. In short, I was a symbol of debauchery and licentiousness. It was a bad deal for a young nation trying to realise what she wanted to become. Frustrated boys looked up to film stars; young girls copied the notion of romance from actresses with beehives, a hairstyle so common in those days. At that time the only thing that mattered to me was being a bad boy in the industry. I knew I was excused for the gossip I created, for a huge portion of my fans were naive to believe that my scandals were simply the creation of the media, to keep the populace returning to theatres for the same films—in other words, a simple business ploy. Another section of my fans viewed those scandals as my "manly" need. A last segment of fans emphasised art should be enjoyed solely for its own materials, irrespective of the artist's personal life and his scandals. Indeed, it was a great pleasure to think that my work had something to do with art, that I was an artist slogging through a nasty, brutal world. I believed in the lies generated by my fans and even perpetuated them through multiple interviews with journalists from Dawn and The Ittefaq, and The Morning News. A confident actor believes in his lies, I told myself. The '60s was a nice time, holding together the nation—both literates and illiterates—through film. They were a novelty to the nation, and actors were at the centre of things. Cinema posters were never painted black, nor did projectionists insert any pornographic materials during the show.

Not all journalists were easy; some Western-educated ones found it appalling having to come back to their homeland to work in a new industry that didn't generate as much profit as they hoped for in their nascent career. They told us how to run things, hounded me for days for gossip. I would neither deny nor affirm my recent scandal with Suchanda and her failing marriage. Sometimes silence lets your audience think you are smart, a simple strategy that I also learned from the industry. It was one of those tough days, having been interviewed between my shooting breaks by a young journalist in a single-breasted jacket. The shooting itself was indoors, in a large duplex mansion, where, according to the plot, I was to visit and grovel at the father of my heroine to ratify our eloped marriage. I was to climb the stairs, only existing in those film mansions, and talk to my heroine's father who was waiting to see my ability to climb stairs, a pure ups and downs affair for the morally astute hero. When the heroine's father shouted—"Get out, you scoundrel. I say get out!"—I might have strayed from the script and uttered one or two sentences on a whim. The director, a university dropout with a strict sense of direction, wasn't happy about my liberty with dialogues. I had a row with him and when I stormed out, the young journalist came after me with unreal questions that had nothing to do with acting or films. Still, I patiently responded to his questions, ruling out any possibility of fathering a child with one of my co-stars. I was in a very bad mood when I left the set without finishing the slotted scenes of the day and drove straight to Dacca Club in my recently purchased Chevrolet Impala. I honked and floored the accelerator recklessly in a rickshaw-filled avenue shaded by flame trees. Although not as fancy as a hand-built Cadillac or Rolls-Royce, the sports coupe had a smooth, elongated body, painted in a shade of beautiful turquoise that no other cars in the city had. I took pride in that classic American car, a symbol of power and style, complementing my rising popularity.

The stairs at the club cascaded up to the third floor, and eventually to the rooftop, where I planned to occupy a table and lounge away smoking cigarettes and ordering one or two shots of Old Monk that quickly let me forget any troubling thoughts. From above, I heard shoes clicking on the mosaic floor. Two girls with beehive hair, and in tasselled, sleeveless blouses were climbing down. Our paths crossed. One of them recognized me and a gasp was visible on her face. I quickly acknowledged their presence with a nod and climbed up to the third floor, to realise that there was nobody to greet or usher me in as my visit was unannounced. I was standing in the stairway alone—then I saw one of the girls coming up to me—in slow, steady steps. She stopped before me and all I could see was the pattern of her saree. It was hard for me to look at that face, so pretty, so young, making me feel that I was in the street after rain and I could see everything had been wiped fresh and clean and the world had never aged, never gotten sick. Being in that world was the most wonderful thing. I was never poetic in that sense; in fact, I hated poets, labelling them as lazy dreamers who had nothing better to do with life, but at that moment, I wished I had words to describe her beauty.

The girl held out a tissue. Immediately I understood why she returned. She tipped her head back to look at me closely. We were listening to each other's breath, so close that I could hear her throbbing heart.

This is part one of the "After the Rain", to be serialised here on Star Literature.

Modern graveyard

KASHFIA NAHREEN

We have built a civilisation of sky-high buildings, of concrete cities,
of disconnected communities.
Cracks creeping up the foundation of our homes, black mold making its way through every floor, termites in the walls,
fractures in every bone.
So, we stand, divided
in this graveyard of hope.

No longer eighteen

MALIHA TRIBHU

DESIGN: MAISHA SYEDA

They said, growing up would be a trap you could fall into, something you cannot get out of once you slip into it.
It isn't a flip of a coin you toss onto the air and catch it on the palm of your hands like a resting butterfly catching its final breath, like a caterpillar cocooned into its shell undergoing metamorphosis—growing up sneaks up to you whether you want it or not.
Growing up catches up to you on a random Tuesday,
Somewhere around the scorching heat waves of May; and all of a sudden it isn't entirely about you anymore.
You now hold your mother's grief onto the palm of your hands,
You now carry the anger of your sister's pent up rage over the years for everything she could not have.
And now you wear an invisible armor just for her, just so you could protect her from everything you could not protect yourself of back when you were sixteen;
Because the world got under your skin at sixteen and you let them, you let them throw mud all over your face and bicker away their blames for you not being enough—you wandered about the maze made out of your own self-loathing guilt for years until the truth appeared in front of you one by one,
on a random Tuesday—welcome to the age you've been so desperately praying for,
to the age of making a difference instead of repeating the mistakes your mother once made.
You are no longer the clown amusing their circus, neither are you the puppet of their unfulfilling dreams and aspirations.
You are on your own now—as horrifying and liberating as it sounds.
Growing up never comes up to you with everything figured out in a perfect order, neither with a survival kit and a manual that might be half-written in Chinese.
It catches up to you like a sudden instinct installing onto our brain; screaming,
"you must protect them now like the way you've always wanted to protect yourself — for everything you could not have for yourself, for every blame that had been thrown at your face, for every time you prayed that someone would protect you, that someone would rescue you, you now wear the armor for them like a necklace handed down from your mother, a badge of strength handed down from her mother—but this time, it isn't the iron bars chaining you down to your feet, like the ways it chained onto your mother's bones, but a crown resting onto your head—something you could hand down to your sister."
Growing up is an act of acceptance of the battles you will win and lose; at the cost of protecting the ones you love.
And when something like that dawns upon you like catching up to a midnight dream
You know then and then
That you are no longer a girl of eighteen.

BHABNA
'Cannes' do it

The usual scenario of attending any film festival is that artistes go to showcase their films. An unusual scenario took place when Bangladeshi actress Ashna Habib Bhabna returned from the 77th Cannes International Film Festival, after scoring a Malaysian movie.

As soon as Bhabna returned home, she spared some time for a glamourous photoshoot with The Daily Star.

"The experience was a dream come true and the tour was completely worth it," shared the artiste. "The first actress to walk on the red carpets of the prestigious Cannes was legendary actress Babita, and we also saw Jaya Ahsan visiting the Cannes, so I had a dream to visit the French Riviera someday to represent my country."

She informed that after applying to the festival as a South Asian actress, she received an accreditation letter to attend the event. She got around 20 days to prepare for the adventurous solo trip. "As I was selecting my attires for the festival, I was quite concerned about the fact that I would be representing my country, my culture, my family--swiftly blended with my taste, which ultimately showcased during the festival."

Renowned Indian newspaper Times of India published an article titled, Sari not sorry! This Bangladeshi actress dressed better than any Bollywood star at Cannes — remarking on her great fashion sense. "I consider this as an award for myself, the report was such a sweet surprise for me. I saw the article when I returned to Dhaka. I have pinned this message on my Facebook timeline as well."

During the eight days of her solo trip, she enjoyed the premiers of many films, walked on the official red carpet wearing her mother's elegant wedding saree, and also graced the event with some unique attires, that caught everyone's attention. Her outfits for the festival included traditional jamdani, a gown made with Banarsee material, and a crow-styled fancy outfit, which earned her praises. During her visit, she also signed a Malaysian film Zenubia, announced to be directed by Bangladeshi-born filmmaker Zafor Firoze, and executive produced by Qiao Li. "The director told me that he had been trying to reach me for a long time, and when we met at the festival, he approached me for this work; everything seemed like a miracle to me!"

According to Bhabna, it has been a great experience for her as she could meet many international artistes and directors there. "There is a misconception regarding the festival that you can only attend if you go with your work. Many international artistes visit the festival for networking, to approach or collaborate for new projects. It is a huge arena and the film market itself is a great way of worldwide networking. As a media personality, anyone can visit the event if they are eligible and receive an invitation from the festival."

Bhabna mentioned that one of her dresses carried the names of her most favourite actresses, which included Meryl Streep, Audrey Hepburn, Babita and Suborna Mustafa. "It was another miracle that my first visit coincided with Meryl Stripe receiving an Honourary Palme d'Or at the festival."

The actress had the opportunity to watch the premiere of the Chinese film Caught by the Tides, directed by Jia Zhangke. "After walking the official red carpet, I watched this film at Rumer Hall, and at that time, I made a wish that one day my film would be premiered in this hall, which I believe will come true someday!"

As Bhabna dreams big, she is now flooded with good wishes and appreciation from her admirers. At the same time, she is also facing criticism, as she was trolled on social media a few days ago over posting a photo of a cow standing on a truck in extreme heat. To this, the actress remarked, "I saw an animal suffering in the heat, where I was sitting in an air-conditioned car, it deeply hurt me, and I couldn't resist posting this, as I always do. I didn't suggest anybody to refrain from eating meat, nor did I say I don't eat meat."

Bhabna has three films awaiting theatrical release--Dampara, Payel and Japito Jibon. The actress also shared that the shooting of Zenubia would commence from November in Malaysia.

WHAT'S ON THE GRAM

ARIFIN SHUVOO

Last year, Arifin Shuvoo caught the Bollywood limelight with his performance in the Bangabandhu biopic, Mujib: The Making of a Nation.

Recently, the actor shared some eye-catching photoshoot outcomes on his Instagram account, exuding a mysterious vibe in a printed black, white, and golden shirt that adds an alluring touch to his appearance.

He looks fierce, channeling his inner masculine aura as he wears matching rings to add to his whole vibe.

The actor will next appear in the Mithu Khan directorial film Neel Chokro.

WHAT'S PLAYING

KHOONEYE MA

Marjan Farsad's Khooneye Ma is a hauntingly beautiful Persian folk song that evokes a profound sense of nostalgia for the old world of Iran. With its simple yet poetic lyrics, the song offers a glimpse into the longing experienced by those who leave their homeland behind.

Released in 2014 as part of her album Blue Flowers, Khooneye Ma masterfully blends traditional Persian melodies and heartfelt storytelling. Farsad's soothing voice creates a melancholic atmosphere, while the lyrics paint a vivid picture of cherished memories and a yearning for the warmth and laughter of home.

A few lines of the song loosely translate to: Our house has stories/It has sour cherries and pistachios/Behind its warm laughs/It has tired people.

TV TALKIES

'THE 8 SHOW'
A high-stakes tale of survival and greed

It seems that South Korea takes its series based on high-stakes survival games rather seriously. The 8 Show, based on the Webtoon Money Game & Pie Game by Bae Jin-soo, which premiered on Netflix this month is yet another wildly extreme show that sticks the landing in its genre.

On the heels of the success of the popular South Korean show Squid Game, this show centralises around eight random individuals in financial crisis. The show presents a compelling narrative, particularly with the ultimate prize money amounting to burgeoning outrageous degrees.

Participants are offered a chance to engage in a clandestine game with intricate regulations. The objective? Secure a prize of 44.8 billion won. At first glance, it appears straightforward, until the players grasp the bewildering intricacies of the competition and realise the lengths to which each of them is prepared to go.

The 8 Show relies on the even playing ground that the participants begin with to exploit the various degradations of human nature. Enveloped in plunging mystery, the series ends with a promise to be able to do more in a possible second season.

MANMADE FIBRE

Bangladesh's best bet to become top apparel exporter

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

Having become the world's second largest source for apparel items after China, Bangladesh is now pushing for the top spot by adding more value-added products to its export basket.

Clothes made of manmade fibre (MMF) are playing a particularly vital role in this regard as such highly value-added apparel items have significant demand abroad.

Besides, non-cotton apparel fetches higher prices than cottonwear for being more flexible, durable and functional, with the cost of a T-shirt made from MMF being about double that of one made from cotton.

As such, local garment makers have been diversifying their product base with non-cotton items.

Additionally, they have increased their production capacities, maintained consistency in supply and improved product quality over the past five decades.

Now, about 7.9 percent of all apparel items sold worldwide come from Bangladesh as the country has turned into a reliable source for international clothing retailers and brands.

Non-cotton apparel fetches higher prices than cottonwear for being more flexible, durable and functional, with the cost of a T-shirt made from MMF being about double that of one made from cotton

And with about 29 percent of the country's garment exports comprising MMF products, Bangladesh aims to use this segment to expand its global market share to 12 percent by 2030.

With this in mind, the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA) aims to increase the country's annual apparel exports to $100 billion within the next six years.

Against this backdrop, local exporters have been exploring markets for MMF products and increasing their value addition, BGMEA sources said.

Value addition in the country's export-oriented garment items currently stands at about 71 percent, as per data of Bangladesh Bank.

Exporters attribute the growing volume of MMF apparel shipments for the increased value addition in export-oriented garment items.

This is because the MMF segment accounts for a bulk of the export receipts from highly value-added garments, with some producers even exporting MMF jackets worth $100 per piece.

The share of MMF in global fibre production has increased to 78 percent over the past five years, according to a study, styled "Beyond Cotton – A Strategic Blueprint for Fiber Diversification in Bangladesh Apparel Industry", released in March this year.

Of the total non-cotton fibre production, about 39 percent is comprised of polyester filament yarn while polyester staple fibre makes up 15 percent, the study shows.

And although the production of nylon filament yarn and viscose staple fibre has increased, they each account for just 5 percent of the global output.

On the other hand, global production of acrylic staple fibre declined from 1.7 percent in 2017 to 1.4 percent in 2022. Meanwhile, wool and silk have a negligible global production share of 1 percent and 0.1 percent respectively.

Volume-wise, the trade of both cotton and non-cotton fibres has increased at a rate of about 1 percent annually from 2018 to 2022.

During this five-year period, global trade of polyester fibre fell by a compound annual growth rate of 3 percent while polyester yarn and fabric saw increases of 1 percent and 2 percent respectively.

The boom in local MMF apparel production was practically initiated by the collapse of Rana Plaza in April 2013 as the tragedy revealed how workers in the garment industry were subject to unbearable working conditions.

This prompted many international retailers and brands to move away from the country until certain conditions, particularly those laid out by the Alliance and Accord, were met by local producers.

So, as a part of the remediations, garment makers invested extensively to fortify workplace safety as per the recommendations, which included addressing fire, structural and electrical concerns.

Not only did this boost the confidence of foreign buyers, but it also led to Bangladesh emerging as the global champion in green garment factories.

Now, the country has 217 LEED certified green garment units, of which 83 are platinum rated, 120 are gold, 10 are silver and four are just certified by the US Green Building Council.

It was only after these investments were made that the capacities of local garment makers reached such a level that they could diversify their product base with more value-added items and include non-cotton products.

Another trend that spurred the transition to synthetic fibres is changing fashion.

For example, the demand for casualwear such as polos and T-shirts made from blended fibres has increased as their acceptability in formal settings such as offices has risen over the past decade.

Now, non-cotton apparel is the largest and fastest growing category of garment exports, contributing 50 percent of all shipments from leading sources such as China, Vietnam and Italy.

The concentration of cotton apparel exports compared to non-cotton is higher in cotton producing countries like India and Turkey. However, Bangladesh accounts for a high share of global cotton apparel exports even though cotton production in the country is negligible at best.

Objects like plastic bottles can be recycled to make fibre. PHOTO: ZAHANGIR SHAH

China is the largest exporter of non-cotton apparels with a market share of 36 percent while India contributes 2 percent and Bangladesh provides 1 percent.

However, China's share is declining as it was 56 percent just a few years ago while India is also seeing reduced non-cotton apparel exports.

On the other hand, the situation is reverse in Bangladesh as the country's share in the global non-cotton apparel trade used to be even less than 1 percent, the study shows.

"If we want to achieve more from garment exports, the traditional model will not work as a new model prioritising fibre diversification is needed," said Faruque Hassan, the immediate past BGMEA president.

The data also shows that MMF imports recently increased, indicating that local garment manufacturers are expanding their product base.

"Still, government support is needed for the sector's growth," Hassan said.

Against this backdrop, he urged the government for a 10 percent incentive on exports of MMF garments to encourage production and thereby help grab a bigger share of the global non-cotton apparel market.

"Cotton is also a priority for Bangladesh but MMF-based garment production is an innovative idea to grab more market share," Hassan said.

He also urged for withdrawal of the Tk 3 value-added tax on sales of MMF yarn in the domestic market.

But like all things artificial, MMF does come with its own set of drawbacks, particularly environmental.

MMF or synthetic fibres are engineered through a complex chemical process rather than being manufactured from natural sources.

In essence, these fibres are mainly made from polymers derived from petrochemicals.

So, while the fossil-fuel-derived fibres are not conflict materials, they are products of an industry with a heavy social impact.

Besides, MMF are not biodegradable and have been contributing to environmental pollution as washing non-cotton clothes releases microplastics.

Investment in artificial fibre still low

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

Investment in manmade fibres in Bangladesh is low as the country has mainly focused on the trade and production of cotton fibre garments over the past five decades.

The total investment in the relatively new sector stands at around Tk 7,000 crore.

But with the evolution in fashion and climate change, the demand for garments made from manmade fibres has been rising worldwide and China, the largest apparel supplier globally, is dominating in this segment.

Recently, Vietnam has also been staging a strong performance in this segment globally.

Bangladesh's share in the total global trade of manmade fibre-based garments is still hovering at around 5 percent and it is growing gradually through the gain of contracts lost by competitors China, Vietnam and India.

If Bangladesh invests $18 billion, the country will be able to export $46 billion worth of non-cotton garment items by 2032, according to a study on "Beyond Cotton – A Strategic Blueprint for Fibre Diversification in Bangladesh Apparel Industry".

The study was conducted by the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA) in March this year.

Of the amount, $4.6 billion needs to be invested in fibre, filament and yarn manufacturing, $9.2 billion in fabrics manufacturing and $4.2 billion in garment manufacturing, the study also said.

This will enable the installation of an additional 4.7 million spindles, 14,000 knitwear machines and 0.5 million sewing machines.

Bangladesh should expedite the process of enhancing its capacity in manufacturing garments from manmade fibres, recommended another study conducted by PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC) on behalf of the BGMEA in April this year.

This is due to the fact that 60 percent of the $1,121 billion-worth garments to be traded globally in 2030 will be constituted of manmade fibres, be it wholly or by a substantial margin, it said.

Meanwhile, 35 percent will be cotton and cotton-rich garments and only 5 percent others.

In contrast, the value of garment items traded globally in 2022 stood at $953 billion, of which manmade fibre and manmade fibre-rich garments accounted for 50 percent, cotton and cotton-rich fibres 37 percent and others 13 percent, the study said.

The study also found that the total global trade of four garment items, including brassieres, technical textiles, activewear and swimwear, jackets, suits and blazers, stood at $100 billion in 2022.

Around 73 percent of that value came from manmade fibre-based items.

There are six to seven mills dedicatedly producing manmade fibres, said Monsoor Ahmed, additional director of the Bangladesh Textile Mills Association (BTMA), a platform for primary textile millers.

Many have expanded their manmade fibre production capacity along with that of cotton fibres to cater to local garment manufacturers and export small quantities, he said.

Since the investment in this segment is still low, most of the demand is met through imports, mainly from China, he added.

Abul Kalam Mohammad Musa, managing director of Manikganj-based Mumanu Polyester Industry, said he has been producing manmade fibres from discarded polyethylene terephthalate (PET) bottles by setting up a mill in 2018.

The fibre is used in the production of jackets, outerwear, sportswear and activewear, he added.

His production capacity is 120 tonnes per day but he can utilise just half of it for a scarcity of raw materials in local markets and due to a restriction on imports of the required polymer.

Narrowest budget deficit in a decade as govt to curb expenses

REJAUL KARIM BYRON and ASIFUR RAHMAN

As the government wants to lower expenses, it is likely to contain the budget deficit to 4.6 percent of gross domestic product in the next fiscal year, a level seen a decade ago.

The government usually keeps the budget deficit at around 5 percent.

During the political turmoil of 2013, ahead of the 2014 national election, the government placed the budget of which the deficit was 4.6 percent.

The upcoming budget will be the first one of the current government. The political situation is stable now, but the economy is facing a prolonged crisis.

In the 2019-20 fiscal year, the government was in a difficult place because of the shutdown of the economy due to coronavirus restrictions. The Ukraine-Russia war also made a global impact on economies in 2022.

Economists now believe that the dwindling foreign currency reserves are the biggest crisis.

The upcoming budget will be the first one of the current government. The political situation is stable now, but the economy is facing a prolonged crisis.

Finance ministry officials say they are finding it hard to maintain macroeconomic stability due to the low foreign currency reserves.

According to Ahsan H Mansur, executive director of Policy Research Institute, macroeconomic stability should be the first priority in the upcoming budget, which will be placed in parliament on June 6.

"Earlier, the policymakers were in denial, thinking they could overcome the crisis in a matter of months. At least, they have realised now that they have to do something," he said.

The International Monetary Fund also suggested lowering government expenditure and raising revenue collection.

In the current, 2023-24, fiscal year, the budget deficit is Tk 2,61,785 crore. In the coming one, the amount is likely to be Tk 2,57,000 crore.

This is a departure from the norm because the deficit amount usually rises year on year, officials say.

A budget deficit means the gap between the government's revenue income and the expenditure. The government borrows from the domestic and global development partners to meet the deficit.

Most of the time, the budget size increases by 12 to 14 percent compared to the previous year's budget. But this time around, the Tk 7,96,900 crore budget is likely to be just 4 percent bigger than the previous one.

JOBS IN MALAYSIA

JAMIL MAHMUD and RASHIDUL HASAN

Mismanagement by government authorities and local recruiting agents led to over 3,000 workers failing to reach Malaysia before the deadline of May 31.

Bangladesh Association of International Recruiting Agencies (Baira) has initially estimated that 3,000 to 4,000 Bangladeshi workers could not reach the Southeast Asian country within the deadline, set by Kuala Lumpur in early March.

On Friday, several hundred workers waited for hours at the Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport to catch flights. Many of them went there without tickets after receiving assurances from local recruiters that they would be given tickets on time.

Malaysia announced the deadline in March but the Bangladesh government did not respond to this until late last month, said Shariful Hasan, head of BRAC's Migration and Youth Initiatives Programme.

Shariful Hasan, head of BRAC's Migration and Youth Initiatives Programme, said Malaysia announced the deadline in March but the Bangladesh government did not respond to this until late last month.

Some additional flights were operated on Dhaka-Kuala Lumpur route only late last month which was not enough, he said.

Controversial recruitment system to stay 3 more years

STAR REPORT

The Malaysian government will use for another three years the Foreign Worker Centralized Management System, which is fraught with allegations of irregularities, news portal Malaysiakini reported yesterday.

The online system operated by Bestinet Sdn Bhd manages the recruitment of workers from Bangladesh and 14 other countries.

Bestinet owner Aminul Islam Abdul Nor, a Bangladesh born Malaysia citizen, is behind a cartel of 100 Bangladeshi recruiting agencies that syphoned crores of taka paid by migration seekers out of Bangladesh, according to insiders of overseas recruitment business.

The 100 recruiting agencies were selected by the Malaysian government in August 2022 to recruit Bangladeshi workers. Since then, almost 500,000

Azim 'taxed' every gold bar smuggled

Say investigators

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN and RASHIDUL HASAN

Anwarul Azim Anar, the recently slain MP of Jhenaidah-4, was a powerful figure in the criminal underworld with his tight grip over a gold smuggling racket as well as the narcotics trafficking in the region, investigators say.

Law enforcers and the intelligence agency involved in the investigation of his gruesome murder also said Azim got too greedy.

They explained that Azim had been leading the gold smuggling racket for over a decade, but in recent years, he got so greedy that he imposed a "personal tax" on every gold bar smuggled through his turf.

Unsurprisingly, this angered the syndicate members, ultimately leading them to hatch a plan to "get rid of" Azim.

The contract for his murder went to Amanullah, a leader of the Purbo Banglar Communist Party (PBCP), courtesy of Azim's business partner, Aktrauzzaman, also a member of the syndicate.

As per plan, the lawmaker was butchered at a New Town flat in Kolkata on May 13, a day after he went there for medical treatment.

Sources said Azim was actively involved in the PBCP until he joined BNP politics with Abdul Mannan in 1988.

Modi set for return with a big margin

Predict exit polls as India's mammoth 7-phase election ends

STAR REPORT

INDIA

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi's Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP)-led alliance is projected to win a big majority in the general election that concluded yesterday, TV exit polls said, suggesting it would do better than expected by most analysts.

Most exit polls projected the ruling National Democratic Alliance (NDA) could win a two-thirds majority in the 543-member lower house of parliament, where 272 is needed for a simple majority. A two-thirds majority will allow the government to usher in far-reaching amendments to the Constitution.

However, according to the exit polls, the NDA is likely to fall short of the 400-seat target it set for itself in this year's national elections, reports our New Delhi correspondent.

A summary of six exit polls projected the NDA could win between 355 and 380 seats, a number that is likely to boost financial markets when they reopen on Monday. The NDA won 353 seats in the 2019 general election, of which BJP accounted for 303.

The opposition "INDIA" alliance led by Rahul Gandhi's Congress party was projected to win between 125 to 165 seats.

Meanwhile, exit polls have shown that the BJP is making fresh gains in West Bengal ruled by Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee-led Trinamool Congress. Most polls gave BJP more seats than the TMC.

MP AZIM MURDER

‘Celesty was supposed to receive Azim at Kolkata flat’

Police team now in Nepal to quiz suspect Siam

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN and RASHIDUL HASAN

Celesty Rahman, a friend of Aktaruzzaman, alleged mastermind of the murder of Jhenaidah-4 MP Anawarul Azim Anar, was responsible for receiving the lawmaker at a flat in Kolkata's New Town on May 13.

She was given the responsibility as part of the killing plan, said the Wari division of the Detective Branch of Dhaka Metropolitan Police in its second investigation report submitted to a Dhaka court on Friday.

Celesty is now in DB custody.

Amanullah alias Shimul Bhuiyan, who was tasked with carrying out the killing mission, and his associate Foysal received Azim in Kolkata and took him to the flat at Sanjeeva Gardens of New Town where he was killed on May 13, according to the investigators.

According to a police source, Aktaruzzaman was a friend and business partner of Azim.

“Aktaruzzaman had invited the lawmaker to a business meeting in the Kolkata flat over a video call, during which Celesty Rahman waved to the MP. Aktaruzzaman later returned to Bangladesh on May 10 without informing the lawmaker that he was leaving Kolkata,” said the police source, citing the second investigation report.

Azim went to Kolkata on May 12 and spent the night at his friend's home. He went out the next day, saying he would visit a doctor.

On May 22, India and Bangladesh police said the MP was murdered at the New Town flat.

Investigators also said that they

Israel pounds Gaza defying US truce plan

Netanyahu says there won't be any ceasefire until Hamas destroyed

AFP, Rafah

Israeli forces hammered Rafah in southern Gaza with tanks and artillery yesterday, hours after US President Joe Biden said Israel was offering a new roadmap towards a full ceasefire.

Shortly after Biden's announcement, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu insisted his country would still pursue the war until it had reached all its aims.

He reiterated that position yesterday, saying that “Israel's conditions for ending the war have not changed: the destruction of Hamas's military and governing capabilities, the freeing of all hostages and ensuring that Gaza no longer poses a threat to Israel”.

Hamas, meanwhile, said it “views positively” the Israeli plan laid out by Biden.

In his first major address outlining a possible end to the nearly eight-month war, the US president said Israel's three-stage offer would begin with a six-week phase that would see Israeli forces withdraw from all populated areas of Gaza.

It would also see the “release of a number of hostages... in exchange for (the) release of hundreds of Palestinian prisoners”.

Israel and the Palestinians would then negotiate for a lasting ceasefire -- but the truce would continue so long as talks are ongoing, Biden said.

The US leader urged Hamas to accept the Israeli offer.

“It's time for this war to end, for the day after to begin,” he said.

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken called his counterparts from Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Turkey on Friday to press the deal.

UN chief Antonio Guterres “strongly hopes” the latest development “will lead to an agreement by the parties for lasting peace”, his spokesman Stephane Dujarric said.

German Foreign Minister Annalena Baerbock said the offer “provides a glimpse of hope and a possible path out of the war's deadlock”, while EU chief Ursula von der Leyen welcomed a “balanced and realistic” approach to end the bloodshed.

Saudi Arabia stressed its “support for all efforts aimed at an immediate ceasefire” and the withdrawal of Israeli troops.

Indonesia, meanwhile, said it was ready to send “significant peacekeeping forces” and medical personnel to Gaza if a ceasefire is agreed.

Remal destroys 68 lakh trees

Says forest department

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

Over 68 lakh trees covering around 27,300 hectares of forest land have been destroyed by Cyclone Remal in Patuakhali and Barguna, according to the Forest Department.

Apart from this, many trees and tree saplings in house yards, educational institutions, and plant nurseries were also damaged.

According to Patuakhali Coastal Forest Division, the financial loss is over Tk 11 crore -- Tk 7.90 crore in Patuakhali and Tk 3.15 crore in Barguna.

“We have prepared a damage report and sent it to higher authorities seeking directives for further steps for reforestation,” said Patuakhali Coastal Divisional Forest Officer Shafiqul Islam

There are 91,000 hectares of forest land in Patuakhali and Barguna, including 36,136 hectares of reserve forest, he added.

According to locals, the forest served as a natural shield during the cyclone, protecting lives, homes, and other properties.

A resident of Barguna, Shafiqul Islam Khokon, said, “We are always protected from cyclones, floods, and other natural disasters by the Pathorghata reserved forests. To preserve our existence, the forest must be preserved.”

Fisherman Tunu Mia of Patuakhali's Kuakata area said that the reserve forests there shield people from several types of destruction. “These forests save us, like a friend,” he added.

Kalapara Forest Range Officer Monirul Haque said to counteract such damage, reforestation initiatives will be implemented.

“There was a large Chambol tree in our house yard. The tree was uprooted during the storm,” said Deepali Rani, a resident of Rahmatpur area of Patuakhali Kalapara town.

“We had around 30 to 35 trees around our house. Almost all the trees have fallen during the storm,” said Badal Matubbar, a resident of Salimpur village of Kalapra upazila.

Around 100,000 trees at different educational institutions have been damaged in Kalapra upazila only, said Kalapara Forest Range Officer Monirul Haque.

Immediate initiatives will be taken for reforestation, he said.

National organisation “Dhoritree Rokkhay Amra” Member Secretary Sharif Jamil said, “There is no alternative to planting more trees to protect the coast from natural disasters.

crore by June 2025, a 21 percent increase compared to the current fiscal year's target.

A finance ministry official told The Daily Star that the Bangladesh Bank took several measures to increase foreign currency reserves, but the measures are not working.

“We are trying to accommodate those measures in the upcoming budget which might reduce the pressure on foreign currency reserves,” he said.

The Annual Development Programme has incorporated the foreign loan and grants allocations at Tk 1,00,000 crore.

As a budgetary support, the government will get between $3 billion and $3.5 billion from the World Bank, Asian Development Bank and Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank. After debt servicing, the net borrowing will stand at Tk 1 lakh crore.

The rest of the Tk 1,57,000 crore deficit will be met by borrowing.

Economist Ahsan H Mansur said the government has already tightened its monetary policy.

“There are many ways to reduce the expenditure. It will impact positively on the balance of payment,” he said. “We should try to bring back the days when we had macroeconomic stability.”

The T20 showpiece had previously grown from 12 to 16 teams since its 2007 inception and the format's unpredictable nature has seen many strong outfits humbled.

In the 2022 edition, South Africa, Sri Lanka and West Indies fell to Netherlands, Namibia and Scotland respectively, three blossoming sides capable of ruffling more feathers this time around despite operating with a fraction of the budget distributed by the ICC to Test-playing nations.

Bangladesh are no longer pushovers but the T20 World Cup has not been a happy hunting ground and a 24% winning record suggests it will be difficult to advance past South Africa and Sri Lanka in Group D.

He blamed both the countries for the suffering of the migrant workers.

Labour migration expert Prof CR Abrar said a traveller is not expected to go to the airport without a ticket.

The recruitment process of the Malaysia-bound workers had started much earlier and many went to the airport as part of the process, he told The Daily Star.

“The authorities should seriously look into the suffering of the migrant workers, find out those responsible and take stern action against them,” said Abrar, also the executive director of Refugee and Migratory Movements Research Unit (RMMRU).

He said syndicates of some quarters had been active in labour migration from Bangladesh to Malaysia over the years.

Enquired about the matter, State Minister for Expatriates' Welfare and Overseas Employment Shofiqur Rahman Choudhury yesterday said the government would look into Friday's incident and take action against those responsible.

Those who failed to go to Kuala Lumpur on Friday despite having valid travel documents will be given priority for jobs in Malaysia whenever the next opportunity is available, he told this newspaper over the phone.

In March, Malaysia announced the May 31 deadline to bring in foreign workers from 14 countries, including Bangladesh.

Speaking at an event in Dhaka on Wednesday, Malaysian High Commissioner to Bangladesh Haznah Md Hashim said the deadline for workers' entry to Malaysia would not be extended and that this was in “the interest of the country's national security”.

BRAC's Shariful said imposing a deadline on the entry of valid visa holders means creating opportunities for some other stakeholders to take undue advantage of the situation.

He said a person having a valid visa of a particular country should be able to enter that country without trouble.

Baira Secretary General Ali Haider Chowdhury yesterday said they were yet to have the final figure of workers who could not travel to Malaysia failing to get a flight.

“Our office was closed on the weekends [Friday and Saturday]. We will able to get the final statistics on Sunday [today],” he told The Daily Star.

Malaysia has been an attractive job destination for low-paid Bangladeshi migrant workers over the years. They prefer the Southeast Asian country to some traditional markets in the Gulf due to many reasons, including higher wage.

According to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics' “Labour Force Survey-2022”, a Bangladeshi migrant worker earns Tk 28,822 a month in Malaysia on average compared to Tk 24,957 in Saudi Arabia.

However, the Bangladesh-Malaysia migration was marred by irregularities and exploitation, which had prompted Malaysia to shut its door on Bangladeshi workers on multiple occasions.

The country had suspended labour recruitment from Bangladesh in 2018 over allegations of irregularities. It resumed hiring Bangladeshi workers in 2022.

Data from the Bureau of Manpower, Employment and Training shows that nearly 4.50 lakh Bangladeshis migrated to Malaysia between August 2022 and April 2024.

Last year, Malaysia was the second largest overseas job market for Bangladesh after Saudi Arabia.

Jasiya Khatoon, director of Welfare Association for the Rights of Bangladeshi Emigrants Development Foundation, said Friday's incident at the Dhaka airport is proof of Bangladesh's poor migration management.

She blamed local recruiters and the government authorities concerned.

She said the government should step up its diplomatic efforts to address the challenges facing the migrant workers.

Belonging to a fisherman's family, Azim once traded fish in the Kaliganj Bazaar. His involvement in gold smuggling began after he finished his degree course at Jhenaidah's Government Mahtabuddin College in 1988.

A source in an intelligence agency told this newspaper that Azim first joined a biker gang that smuggled gold on their bikes.

Abul Kalam Azad, chairman of Barobazar union parishad, told The Daily Star, “Kaliganj upazila and its surrounding areas have long been a haven for gold smuggling for its proximity to the Indian border.”

Regarding Azim's killing, he said that the lawmaker had a falling out with Aktaruzzaman over their business partnership, but did not elaborate on the kind of business they were in.

Azim joined the Awami League in 1995 and became the Kaliganj municipality mayor in 1996.

The post's influence corrupted his young mind, and he became involved in a variety of criminal activities, including the narcotics trade, claimed local sources.

In 2001, when the BNP government came to power, Azim went into hiding in neighbouring India.

Between 2001 and 2008, at least 22 cases were filed against Azim, including a murder charge and a red notice.

But in 2009, he made a comeback as the Kaliganj upazila chairman. Later, he went on to become the lawmaker for Jhenaidah-4 in 2014 and for the next two consecutive terms.

Over the years, he managed to clear the charges brought against him in all 22 cases since he became the upazila chairman in 2009.

Azim's criminal persona was an open secret in the constituency, but none dared speak against him, for those who did were either attacked or even killed by hired goons at his command.

Several dozen people have become victims of his oppression, say locals.

The Daily Star managed to speak to the family of Ariful Islam, general secretary of a local ward unit Jubo League, who was killed in his home by political rivals on November 29, 2022.

“Some six to seven armed criminals broke into our home and stabbed my father to death in front of our eyes. These criminals worked for Azim. They killed my father as he was the lawmaker's political rival,” Tahsinur Rahman, son of Ariful, told The Daily Star yesterday.

On July 8, 2023, one Mehedi Hasan was killed over an internal feud with local drug addicts in Kaliganj upazila.

Two suspects, Akram and Saddam, were arrested over the incident and sent to jail. But later they managed to secure bail as they were followers of Azim, sources alleged.

This newspaper was not able to communicate with the victim's family as they moved away after the murder out of fear, said locals.

Contacted, Ashraful Alam, mayor of Kaliganj municipality, acknowledged the existence of the gold smuggling racket and claimed he and MP Azim took action against the racket.

Speaking on Azim's murder, Ashraful said it might have occurred over either business or political rivalry.

“The parliament is yet to declare his [Azim] seat vacant, but his rivals have already started campaigning for the post.”

When this newspaper asked if the MP position was sought to take control of the smuggling racket, the mayor did not respond clearly.

Controversial recruitment

workers have migrated to Malaysia.

The Southeast Asian country suspended foreign workers recruitment on May 31. The Malaysian government's previous contract with Bestinet expired the same day.

On March 28, four UN experts wrote a letter to the Malaysia and Bangladesh governments, saying that criminal networks operate in the recruitment process of Bangladeshi workers who are deceived and obliged to pay exorbitant sums which pushes them into debt bondage.

Besides, the workers are recruited by companies that exist only on papers.

The UN experts said Bangladeshi migrants paid between $4,500 to $6,000 for recruitment fees, which is the highest in the world.

Many migrants find on arrival in Malaysia that they do not have a job as promised and are forced into overstaying their visa. Consequently, they risk arrest, detention, ill-treatment and deportation. Many become destitute and face an alarming humanitarian crisis, said the UN experts.

The situation requires urgent attention before it escalates further or before lives are further put at risk, they said .

According to Malaysiakini, the Malaysian cabinet agreed to continue using Bestinet's service after reviewing a paper presented by the home ministry on May 29. However, the terms of the agreement with the company remains unclear.

The news portal wrote that it could not get comments from Home Minister Saifuddin Nasution Ismail and Bestinet President Aminul.

The Auditor-General's Report 2022 revealed that Bestinet's online system had many weaknesses that made it susceptible to manipulation, with instances of conflict of interest and breach of governance and control, reports Malaysiakini.

Malaysia's Public Accounts Committee recently investigated Bestinet, but its findings will only be tabled in parliament when the house convenes later in June, it said.

Last week, Channel News Asia (CNA) reported that the government was under pressure to renew the lease with the platform linked with trafficking allegations, despite the intentions of Prime Minister Anwar Ibrahim's regime to overhaul the system.

Sources told CNA that Bestinet, a firm with strong ties to top politicians and a history of controversy, was pushing back against the government's migrant labour reform agenda.

victory without referring to the exit polls.

“I can say with confidence that the people of India have voted in record numbers to re-elect the NDA government,” he said on X, without providing evidence of his claim.

“The opportunistic INDI Alliance failed to strike a chord with the voters. They are casteist, communal and corrupt.”

Nationally, an exit poll from broadcaster CNN-News18 forecasts Modi's ruling Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) and its coalition allies to win 355 seats.

Republic Bharat- P Marq exit poll gives BJP-led NDA 359 seats, India News-D-Dyanamics gave it 371 while Republic Bharat- Matrize said NDA is set to get any numbers between 353 and 368. News Nation gave BJP-led alliance between 342 to 378 seats and TV 5 Telugu exit poll projected 359 seats for NDA.

PMARQ exit poll predicts 154 seats for the opposition INDIA bloc and 30 for others. Republic TV Matrize put the seat numbers between 118 and 133, while India News D Dynamics poll gave 125 seats to the opposition. News Nation poll predicted 153-169 seats for INDIA bloc and NDTV India -Jan Ki Baat estimated 141-161 seats.

In West Bengal, TMC, which had lost a significant number of seats to BJP in 2019 and won 22 seats, may end up losing a few more in this year's elections if the exit poll predictions prove true, reports Reuters.

According to the Matrize exit poll, TMC will secure 16-20 seats, while Jan Ki Baat has predicted 16-18 seats for the party in West Bengal. PMARQ exit poll has predicted 22 seats for BJP and 20 for TMC.

In the 2019 Lok Sabha elections, BJP had won 18 of the total 42 seats in the state.

In Andhra Pradesh, the NDA is expected to get 18 of the state's 25 seats, reports Reuters.

Karnataka is also expected to vote overwhelmingly for the BJP, despite its preference for the Congress at the state level. In Telangana too, the Congress may be unable to capitalise on its assembly poll victory. The BJP is likely to walk away with over half of the state's 17 seats.

The BJP is even expected to open its account in Tamil Nadu, with at least two seats, and in Kerala with one, exit polls predict.

In neighbouring Odisha, the BJP can do even better, winning 15 of the state's 21 seats and confining Naveen Patnaik's Biju Janata Dal -- once the unquestioned choice of the people -- to the margins.

The opposition dismissed the exit polls, and ahead of their publication had called them “prefixed”. Most opposition parties accuse India's main news channels of being biased in favour of Modi, charges the channels deny. They also say exit polls in India are mostly unscientific.

“This is a government exit poll, this is Narendra Modi's exit poll,” Supriya Shrinate, the Congress's social media head, told news agency ANI, in which Reuters has a minority stake.

“We have a sense of how many seats we are winning, it will not be one seat less than 259,” she said.

Nearly one billion people were eligible to vote in the seven-phase election that began on April 19 and was held in scorching summer heat in many parts.

The Election Commission will count votes on June 4 and results are expected on the same day.

A victory for Modi, 73, will make him only the second prime minister after independence leader Jawaharlal Nehru to win three consecutive terms.

How could ex-IGP Benazir flee country?

Asks Fakhrul

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday questioned how former IGP Benazir Ahmed and his family members "left the country without obstruction" despite the allegations of amassing assets illegally.

Speaking at a discussion, he also said this exposes the ruling party leaders' claims of not sparing wrongdoers as "mere eyewash and deception."

"I saw a media report that Benazir and his family went to Singapore, leaving the country on May 4. Before leaving, he emptied all his bank accounts and withdrew around Tk 60 crore. I don't know whether the amount is much bigger," Fakhrul said.

"My question is, how

CLIMATE ACTION PLAN

Bangladesh needs US $876b for implementation

Says environment minister

BSS, Dhaka

Environment, Forest and Climate Change Minister Saber Hossain Chowdhury yesterday said Bangladesh needs US $876 billion to implement its ambitious climate action plans.

He said the National Adaptation Plan (NAP) of the country estimates an investment of US $230 billion is required for adaptation till 2050.

The remarks came during an inaugural function of a three-day workshop organised by the Economic Relations Division (ERD) at BRAC CDM, Savar.

Additionally, he said, implementation of the Nationally Determined Contributions (NDC) requires US $175 billion.

"The Mujib Climate Prosperity Plan (MCPP) and the Bangladesh Delta Plan 2100 estimate US $471.72 billion to implement the identified priority projects. Partnership is fundamental. To coordinate among the development partners, the government formed Bangladesh Climate Development Partnership," he said.

"Mobilising climate finance is essential to support our transition to a low-carbon, climate-resilient economy. We must leverage private sector investments, international climate funds, and innovative financing mechanisms," said the minister.

Coordinated action needed for Rohingya repatriation

Foreign minister tells UN, partners

UNB, Dhaka

Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud has urged the United Nations organisations and other partners to take coordinated action for the repatriation of about 1.3 million Rohingyas sheltered in Bangladesh on humanitarian grounds.

He also sought effective steps to resolve the ongoing conflict in Rakhine state and for the betterment of the Rohingya population.

The foreign minister, who is now in the United States on a three-day official visit, made the appeal during four

Bangabandhu Bridge set for largest maintenance since opening

Chinese joint venture to start work later this year

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

Bangabandhu Bridge, the second largest bridge in the country, will later this year undergo the biggest maintenance work since its opening 26 years ago.

Bangladesh Bridge Authority (BBA) will replace all the pot bearings, a vital element for load transmission, on the 4.8km bridge.

It has already selected a joint-venture firm in China to carry out the work, which is considered very critical and time-consuming, at a cost of Tk 128.47 crores, said sources.

"The bridge authority wants to carry out the job while keeping the crucial bridge fully functional. But it may have to suspend vehicle movement for some time," an official said.

The move came around three years after BBA decided to replace the bearings after it was found that 45 percent of pot bearings had problems.

The bridge on the Jamuna River, which was opened to traffic in June 1998, is a vital strategic economic road, rail, energy, and telecommunication link between the northern and southern parts of the country.

The Bangladesh Bridge Authority will replace all pot bearings on the 4.8km Bangabandhu Bridge at a cost of Tk 128.47 crore, marking the largest maintenance effort since its opening 26 years ago.

Pot bearings are a special type of bridge bearing used for transmission of loads from superstructures to piers and to absorb vibration caused by vehicle movement, experts said.

Italian company FIP Industrial supplied the pot bearings and as per the bridge maintenance manual, the service life of the bearings is between 20 and 30 years, shows BBA documents.

China Communications Construction Company Limited (CCCC) -- BBA's operator for maintenance and operation of Bangabandhu Bridge -- in a report to BBA in 2021 said around 45 percent of 112 bearings' pads on the bridge had problems.

A BBA board discussed the issue in September 2021 and decided to replace the bearings, shows the document.

Quazi Muhammad Ferdous, chief engineer of BBA, said the Cabinet Committee on Government Purchase (CCGP) last week approved a proposal to hire a joint venture firm to replace pot bearings.

The companies are CCCC, Second Harbor Engineering Company Ltd and China Road and Bridge Corporation, according to document.

The firm will get Tk 128.47 crore for supply, installation, testing, and commissioning of Foreign secy to meet Chinese counterpart tomorrow

Hasina's proposed visit to China to be discussed

UNB, Dhaka

Foreign Secretary Masud Bin Momen is scheduled to visit China to have bilateral discussions with his Chinese counterpart tomorrow.

"He will have a meeting with Chinese Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Sun Weidong, which is scheduled to take place on June 3," a senior official told UNB.

Issues of mutual interest, including Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's proposed visit, are likely to be discussed.

Meanwhile, an inter-ministerial meeting was held at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

The two sides will discuss finding a convenient date for the PM's visit to China.

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina is likely to pay an official visit to China before July 15.

In May 2023, the Chinese vice minister was in Bangladesh on a two-day official visit to discuss issues of mutual interest.

He had a bilateral meeting with Foreign Secretary Masud Bin Momen during his stay in Dhaka.

Recently, Ambassador of China to Bangladesh Yao Wen said Bangladesh and China should Political goodwill, accountability necessary

Say speakers on ensuring safety of coastal areas

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Government officials lacked the necessary experience and dedication to build embankments in the country, speakers told a programme yesterday.

As a result, damage to embankments by Cyclone Remal in the coastal areas left people homeless and caused the inundation of villages, croplands, and low-lying areas adjacent to the embankments by saline water, they added.

A group of environmentalists, rights activists, and teachers spoke at a press conference organised by Bangladesh Poribesh Andolon in the capital's Dhaka Reporters' Unity.

Addressing the event, Bapa president Nur Mohammad Talukder said, "To build embankments in the coastal areas, the concerned government officials lack experience and patriotism. Those [embankments] are built based on foreign instructions, and are not fit to provide safety to the coastal people."

"To address this issue, political goodwill and accountability are needed," he added.

Reading out a written statement, Gauhar Naeem Wara, a member of Bapa's national committee, said, "The cyclone damaged 61 kilometres of embankments across three districts in Khulna region."

"In Barishal region, embankments have been damaged in at least 400 places. Embankments were also breached in many places across Noakhali and Chattogram regions, allowing saline water to enter villages and damage freshwater sources," he also said.

Gauhar stressed the need to change current policies and strategies.

"Environmental damage is being done under political influence in the name of unplanned development. It needs to stop," said Bapa vice-president Mohidul Hoque Khan.

Bapa's joint secretary Ahmed Kamruzzaman Majumder alleged that the government did not properly account for the damage caused by the cyclone, while Bapa member Rafiqul Alam recommended using simpler warning signals to inform common people ahead of natural disasters.

Police seized the truck but its driver fled the scene, the OC said.

A case was filed with Sirajganj Sadar police station accusing the truck driver and police are trying to nab the trucker.

In Patuakhali, one person was killed and two others were injured when a battery-run rickshaw-van fell into a roadside ditch at Ulania in Galachipa area. The accident took place around 8:00pm on Friday.

Md Jihad, 15, son of Zakir Khan of Dakua village of Galachipa upazila was declared dead at Galachipa Upazila Health Complex.

The injured -- Shahjahan Gazi, 38, from Kacharikand village; and Faisal, 17, son of Dulal Faraji from Gurinda Bazar area in the upazila -- were undergoing treatment at Barishal Sher-e-Bangla Medical College Hospital, said Galachipa Police Station OC Ferdous Alam Khan.

Ferdous said they will sign a contract with the firm once they get the written approval of CCGP.

The replacement work is supposed to be completed within one and a half years, he said, adding, "But it may take a little more time given the complex nature of the work."

Asked when the work may start, he said it may take up to six months as the contractor, after signing deals, has to collect the bearings and start replacement.

He said the bridge had gone through some repair work. "But replacement of all the pot bearings of the bridge will be the biggest maintenance work on the bridge since its opening," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

AFTERMATH OF CYCLONE REMAL

Living under open sky for six days

SUSHANTA GHOSH, from Bhola

At least 12 families have been living under the open sky for the past six days in Kutuba union under Bhola's Borhanuddin upazila after becoming homeless as Cyclone Remal left a trail of destruction in the district.

Visiting Chhota Manika village in the union on Friday, this correspondent saw Kawsar Gazi, 70, and his wife Nurjahan Begum cooking rice and lentils in front of the remnant of their house.

"Before the cyclone lashed here on May 27 midnight, we had taken shelter at a house near the embankment. We could not take anything from the house with us. When we returned, we found our tin-shed house completely destroyed and all our belongings washed away," said their granddaughter Amena Begum, 15.

"Since then, we have been living under the open sky for past six days. We only got 30 kilogrammes rice as relief," said Nurjahan Begum.

Kawsar Gazi pleaded the authorities to provide them with assistance to rebuild their house.

At least 181 houses were partially and 37 completely damaged in the cyclone in Borhanuddin upazila, said Md Raihan-Uzzaman, upazila nirbahi officer.

"We have already distributed relief among the victims in the upazila. We are now preparing a list of those whose houses were destroyed to provide them with assistance to rebuild the houses. Kawsar Gazi's name is on the list," the UNO added.

Cattle farmers in dire need of support

Cyclone Remal, left over 9,000 acres of grazing land flooded and damaged across 19 cyclone-hit areas.

This led to an acute crisis of fodder for cattle in those areas, affecting at least 2.5 million livestock.

As such, cattle farmers are in dire need of support to provide fodder and medical treatment for their livestock, speakers told a programme yesterday.

They demanded compensation for the farmers and suggested waiving their loans taken from NGOs and cooperatives for cattle rearing.

A group of cattle farmers and their leaders made the plea at a press conference organised by Bangladesh Dairy Farmers' Association at the capital's CIRDAP auditorium.

"Of my 20 cattle, 15 died after falling sick. A veterinarian from Khamarbari demanded Tk 10,000 to come for providing treatment and later settled for Tk 8,000, but they arrived a day late," said Rashida Begum, a dairy farmer from Dhaka's Adabar area.

"During treatment, two more cows died. They took samples for testing but the reports are still not provided. I am feeling helpless," she added.

Jamal Hossain, another dairy farmer from Mohammadpur, echoed her.

Addressing the event, Imran Hossain, president of the association, said their cattle are getting sick due to lack of clean water, and crisis of fodder since the cyclone hit Bangladesh.

"Despite reaching out to the livestock officers at upazila and district levels, farmers are not receiving any medical assistance for their cattle," he said, adding that the officials cited transportation issues as an excuse.

"Earlier, government officials from livestock department used motorcycles to visit the farms for treatment of livestock, taking Tk 500–1,000 per visit. Now, they are using cars to make the visits and demanding Tk 3,000–10,000," Imran also said.

When he was told he wouldn't be allowed to go anywhere, how did he sneak off to Singapore right under the government's nose?" asked the BNP leader.

He said the ruling party leaders also made remarks that no one involved in corruption would be spared.

"Do they (the government) think people are stupid? They understand all these are eyewash and deceptions. You're ruling the country by resorting to trickery," said Fakhrul.

Bangladesh Sammilita Peshajibi Parishad, a platform of pro-BNP professionals, organised the programme at the Jatiya Press Club, marking the 43rd death anniversary of BNP founder Ziaur Rahman.

Fakhrul said the government not only nurtured Benazir and Aziz Ahmed (former army chief) but also promoted countless corrupt individuals.

Awami League has turned Bangladesh into a "safe haven for plundering," he added.

access, manage, and deploy climate finance," he also said, adding that developed countries have a moral and legal responsibility to support developing countries in their climate actions. "We call upon our international partners to honour their commitments and provide predictable, adequate, and accessible financial support. We must also explore innovative sources of finance, such as green bonds, climate insurance, and public-private partnerships," he continued.

Secretary of Economic Relations Division, Ministry of Finance Shahriar Kader Siddiky; Deputy Head of Development Cooperation, the Embassy of Sweden Nayoka Martinez-Bäckström; Deputy High Commissioner and Development Director of British High Commission in Dhaka Matt Cannell; Country Director of Asian Development Bank Edimon Ginting; and Resident Representative of UNDP Bangladesh Stefan Liller also spoke at the event.

separate meetings at the UN Headquarters in New York on Friday, a foreign ministry's press release said yesterday.

During the meeting with United Nations General Assembly President Dennis Francis, the minister said when about one million people fled to Bangladesh to escape violence in Myanmar, the people of Cox's Bazar and Chattogram received them with compassion.

"But gradually the Rohingyas are getting employment in different places out of the camps, and the camps have become a haven for various crimes, including human trafficking, drug smuggling, and terrorism. As a result, the locals are having a very difficult time," he added.

During his meeting with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees Filippo Grandi, Hasan said since last February, about 750 members of the Myanmar Border Guard Police and Army have fled to Bangladesh at various times.

"Not only that, the shells of the conflicting groups in Myanmar have also caused casualties in Bangladesh. It is absolutely necessary to prevent the recurrence of these," Hasan said.

In a meeting with Julie Bishop, UN secretary general's special envoy for Myanmar, Hasan Mahmud said the ongoing conflict situation in Myanmar is not a new phenomenon and should not be allowed to be used as an excuse against Rohingya repatriation.

Illegal sand extraction plagues Dharla, two other rivers

Erosion devours croplands, homes in Patgram, Lalmonirhat

S DILIP ROY, Lalmonirhat

Illegal stone and sand extraction has caused severe erosion in three transboundary rivers -- Dharla, Singimari, and Saniajan.

Visiting the river banks in Patgram upazila of Lalmonirhat recently, this correspondent saw sand and stones piled up on the banks after extraction with dredger machines, while large holes were formed on the river beds.

Locals complained that indiscriminate sand extraction is causing riverbank erosion, subsequent flash floods during monsoons, and damage to croplands, homes, biodiversity, and livelihoods.

Dharla is about 31.5 kilometres long on the Bangladesh side, while Singimari is 21km and Saniajan 4km long, according to Bangladesh Water Development Board.

In fiscal year 2017-18, the BWDB completed 4km of excavation and 2.5km of embankment protection works at a cost of Tk 24.72 crore on the rivers, the officials added.

"Dharla's erosion devoured my homestead, 10 bighas of my arable lands, and also the village graveyard. Like me, many others lost everything to the river," said Nazrul Islam, 77, a farmer in Patgram's Rasulganj village.

Many locals have alleged that a section of ruling party leaders are patronising the sand lifter. They are colluding with dishonest officials in the administration to extract sand and stones illegally.

With change of power, the rivers also change hands, but their fate remains unchanged, they said.

Ruhul Amin Babul, general secretary of Patgram upazila AL and also the upazila chairman, said illegal sand lifters are criminals, and their political identity is irrelevant. "They change their allegiance with the change of power. They don't belong to any political party," he said.

Strict action should be taken against these people, he added.

Shahidul Islam, 65, a farmer from the same village, said, "At present, some 400-500 dredger machines are being used to lift stones and sand round the clock from the rivers."

Nazir Ali, 78, of Banglabari village, called upon authorities concerned to take strict measures to bring the culprits to book.

Contacted, Abdul Gaffar, upazila agriculture officer in Patgram, said, "Many families who were engaged in agriculture lost their croplands to river erosion. This, in turn, adversely affected the area's agricultural productivity. However, there has been no survey done on how much arable land was lost to river erosion."

MA Momin, additional deputy commissioner (revenue) of Lalmonirhat and member secretary of the district's National River Protection Committee, said, "The district and upazila administrations are firmly against illegal sand and stone extraction from the rivers."

Shunil Kumar, executive engineer of BWDB in Lalmonirhat, said, "Local administration will take legal action against the culprits. Proposals have been sent to the government for dredging Singimari and Saniajan rivers. For Dharla river, the government will decide on necessary measures."

Nurul Islam, UNO of Patgram upazila, said, "The upazila administration has conducted numerous mobile court drives. Although these illegal activities have mostly stopped, there are reports of some stone lifting at night. Our drives will continue."

When asked about the allegation that some officials are involved in sand lifting, he denied it.

RMG workers demand wages, Eid bonus by June 10

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh Garment Sramik Sanghati, an RMG workers' platform, demonstrated in Dhaka yesterday, demanding full salaries with overtime and Eid bonuses by June 10.

They also demanded that the government stop excessive bus fares and ensure safe travel arrangements for garment workers during the Eid journey.

To press home their demands, they brought out a procession from Purana Paltan and later held a rally in front of the Jatiya Press Club in the capital.

Speaking at the event, Taslima Akhter, president of Bangladesh Garment Sramik Sanghati, said nearly 80 percent of Bangladesh's foreign exchange earnings come from the hard work of garment workers, but they face various challenges during the two Eid celebrations every year.

She expressed concern over the common practice of factories failing to pay bonuses on time. Workers have faced mistreatment and abuse when they protest demanding arrears, said Taslima.

The labour leaders said during Eid travel every year, transport fares double and even triple. Garment workers risk their lives by taking low-cost transport to reach home. The government needs to address this issue, they said.

POLLS CODE VIOLATION

2 BCL leaders jailed, UP chairman fined

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Tangail

A mobile court in Tangail's Mirzapur upazila has sentenced two local leaders of Bangladesh Chhatra League to seven days' imprisonment for violating electoral code of conduct.

They are: Abdullah Al Fahad, senior joint convenor of upazila unit of BCL, and Ishad Ahmed Mallick Nishad, former member of Warshi union unit of BCL.

The mobile court of executive magistrate Masudur Rahman, also assistant commissioner (Land) in the upazila, also fined local Warshi Union Parishad Chairman Mahbubul Alam Mallick Tk 10,000 over similar charges.

Masudur Rahman caught the convicts red-handed while distributing biryani among people after a meeting on Friday afternoon, ahead of the Mirzapur Upazila Parishad polls slated for June 5.

An altercation ensued between the executive magistrate and the convicts. Informed, Upazila Nirbahi Officer of Mirzapur Sheikh Nurul Amin went to the spot around 8:00pm and ordered the trio to be taken to the UNO office.

Later, around 11:00pm, they were handed down the punishments under Section 32(1) of the Upazila Parishad Election Code of Conducts of 2016. The two BCL men were taken to jail around 1:00am, confirmed Masudur Rahman.

Additional police personnel were deployed as supporters and associates of the convicts gathered at the UNO office premises.

3 killed, 5 injured in road accidents

STAR REPORT

At least three people have been killed and five others injured in accidents in two districts, according to reports from our local correspondents.

In Sirajganj, two people were killed and three others injured as a CNG-run auto-rickshaw and a truck collided in Alokdiar area of Sadar upazila on Friday night.

Mohadeb Shah, 60, of Hat-Pangashi village in Raiganj upazila; and Abu Obaida, 24, of village Muktargati in Sirajganj Sadar upazila died on the spot.

Sirajganj Sadar Police Station Officer-in-Charge Md Sirajul Islam said the accident took place around 10:00pm on Friday. The injured were undergoing treatment at Sirajganj 250-bed Bongomata Sheikh Fazilatunnesa Mujib General Hospital.

Build cold storage facilities in Rangpur region

Demand local farmers

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

The Krishak Sangram Parishad has called for a special allocation in the upcoming national budget to construct cold storage facilities for potatoes and vegetables in the Rangpur region.

This demand was raised at a human chain formed in front of Rangpur Press Club yesterday.

Lawyer Palash Kanti Nag, convener of Krishak Sangram Parishad, addressed the gathering.

Speakers said there was an urgent need for cold storage facilities in Rangpur and Dinajpur, pointing out that the lack of such infrastructure results in an annual loss of Tk 10,000 crores due to rotting vegetables. Without adequate cold storage, 30 percent of vegetables produced in this area are wasted yearly.

They said total vegetable demand in the country stands at 1.52 crore tonnes annually. Insufficient government cold storage facilities compel farmers to sell their produce at extremely low prices to avoid spoilage.

Palash Kanti criticised the reduction in agricultural subsidies and allocations in recent budgets, stressing the necessity of ensuring fair prices for farmers.

He also demanded interest-free loans on easy terms for farmers.

Following the rally, a procession marched the main road of the city, with participation from marginal-level farmers from various areas of Rangpur city.

RICHI SOLAIMAN returns to your screens

> About getting back to work, Richi shared, "It feels amazing to be back in front of the camera. I can't describe it in words. I'm returning to my roots and my audience, and I couldn't be happier!"

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

Richi Solaiman, a once popular household name on television, is making her way into the realm of Bangladeshi web content with Girgiti. Known for her roles in numerous single dramas and serials during the early 2000s, she was one of the busiest artistes in the industry.

Currently, Richi resides in the US with her husband, Rashek Malik, a detective in the New York Police Department, and their two children.

The actress is poised to make her web debut with the film Girgiti. She recently wrapped up filming in Kolkata and has now returned to Dhaka.

In an interview with The Daily Star, Richi explained, "I stepped away from work to raise my kids. They have always been my priority, and now that they can take care of themselves, I decided to return to my career."

Proud of her children's independence, Richi considers it a significant achievement that they can manage their studies and other activities on their own.

About getting back to work, Richi shared, "It feels amazing to be back in front of the camera. I can't describe it in words. I'm returning to my roots and my audience, and I couldn't be happier!"

She also mentioned that she will be selective with her projects, aiming to take up one project a month. "The plot of Girgiti is women-centric, which is one of the main reasons I chose this project," she confirmed.

The film revolves around the lives of two women. "For the first time in my career, I will be playing a police officer, a role for which I prepared for about four months," she said.

Richi is confident that her return will be special. "Over the last few years, many people have asked when I would return, expressing how much they missed me. I missed them too. Even my son encouraged me to start working again to become actress Richi Solaiman once more. I want my comeback to be memorable, and I hope this project will make it worthwhile."

PHOTOS: COLLECTED

Produced by Bengal Multimedia Limited and directed by Bijoy Jana, the web-film will be released on the OTT platform Rtv Plus.

Richi Solaiman embarked on her acting career in the much-acclaimed mini-series Iti Amar Bon in 1992. The actress who is also a trained kathak dancer, used to dance in BTV programmes and during one of her rehearsals she caught the attention of Mustafizur Rahman. He was planning to direct Iti Amar Bon at that point. Although the series was a raging success, Richi didn't continue with acting. Instead she pursued her passion for dancing.

Eventually, she started feeling more inclined towards acting and as a result landed her first role as an adult in Begum Mumtaz Hossain's Bela Obela.

Throughout her acting career, the actress has often been proud of her performance in women-centric roles, when we asked her which performance of hers is close to her heart. The actress revealed, "The serial Nir showed an interesting relationship between a woman and her mother-in-law. Anwara apa played my mother-in-law in it. That serial received positive reactions from many. I was also highly appreciated by people from all walks of life for my role in the serial Nabila Chorito. Many people told me that nobody could have pulled off that character better than me."

The actress further received praise for her performances in the serials Nil Nirjone, Moyur Bahon and Tyag.

Apurba nearly collapses while filming

Recently, Ziaul Faruq Apurba sustained serious hand and back injuries while filming action scenes for the spin-off series, Golam Mamun, which is awaiting release this month.

Sources report that Apurba injured himself during an outdoor action scene, exacerbating his back pain and nearly losing consciousness. Despite being advised to rest, he returned to the set after receiving first aid from a physiotherapist.

Project director Shihab Shaheen commented, "Apurba was seriously injured during filming. Despite receiving painkillers and being advised to rest, he resumed work to avoid delays."

Apurba said, "Many people are involved in a production, so focusing solely on me isn't feasible. Painkillers helped me feel somewhat better."

Gigi and Bella Hadid donate $1m to support Palestinian families

Gigi and Bella Hadid, born to a Palestinian father, have consistently expressed their pride in their heritage and supported Palestine on social media.

According to The Hollywood Reporter, Gigi and Bella Hadid are donating USD 1 million to four organisations focused on children and families: HEAL Palestine, the Palestine Children's Relief Fund (PCRF), World Central Kitchen (WCK), and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA).

These collectively provide humanitarian aid, including food, medical programmes, assistance to displaced families, and psychological services, amidst the Israel-Palestine conflict.

recovered body parts, suspected to be those of the slain lawmaker, from the septic tank of the flat based on the information provided by Celesty.

During interrogation, Celesty told investigators that she heard the sound of a toilet being flushed repeatedly on the second floor of the duplex flat. Based on that information, detectives asked the Kolkata CID to conduct a search in the sewerage line and septic tank of the flat.

Four people have so far been arrested in connection with the murder.

Jihad Howlader, a butcher who dismembered the lawmaker's body and dumped its parts later, is in custody of the West Bengal CID.

Amanullah, his nephew Tanvir Bhuiyan, and Celesty are in custody of the Detective Branch of DMP.

Aktaruzzaman, the alleged mastermind behind the murder, is believed to be in the USA. Another suspect, Foysal, is absconding.

Suspect Siam Hossain, who along with Jihad dumped the lawmaker's body, went to Nepal after the killing. He was arrested by police there.

Masud Alam, counselor at the Bangladesh embassy in Nepal, told The Daily Star, "Siam Hossain is in custody of Nepal police. An Interpol team, now in Nepal, is probing the murder."

He said further details about the investigation would be disclosed later.

POLICE TEAM IN NEPAL

A three-member team of Bangladesh Police, led by Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (DB) of DMP, went to Nepal yesterday to investigate the murder.

Speaking to reporters at the Dhaka airport, Harun said, "We have heard about Siam's arrest in Nepal. Some other suspects may be hiding in Nepal."

Earlier, a three-member DB team, led by Harun, went to Kolkata on May 26 to probe the murder. The team returned home on Thursday.

Meanwhile, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan yesterday said that the murder of Azim took place in India, which is why the case was filed there.

The Indian authorities will also investigate the murder, he added.

"The mastermind flew to the United States. India has an extradition treaty with the USA. So, the Indian government will appeal to them [USA]," the minister said in response to a question from a journalist after attending a programme at Dhaka University's Student-Teacher Centre.

VIOLATIONS OF DIRECTIVES

As per the 2011 PMO circular, foreign trips should only be made for matters related to national interest, like signing of MOUs, agreements or mandatory representation in international bodies.

It also clearly directed that for events like educational tours, seminars, symposiums and workshops, junior officers and field-level officials should be prioritised over secretaries.

According to documents seen by this newspaper, three of the agriculture secretary's trips last year violated the rules: twice for a workshop and once for contract discussions.

This year, Wahida already travelled five times: thrice in May, once in April and once in January. Two were for roundtables and discussions and three for signing contracts.

She went abroad six times to sign contracts in Singapore, China, Tunisia, Canada, Saudi Arabia and Morocco.

The expenses of these trips were covered by the agriculture ministry's operational budget, violating another directive that prohibited foreign trips funded by operational or development budgets.

From May 21-23 this year, Wahida led a delegation of five officials to Australia for a bilateral meeting and a meeting on trade and investment.

On May 6, she accompanied Agriculture Minister Abdus Shahid to a roundtable in the Netherlands, against yet another PMO directive, which discouraged the minister and secretary of a ministry to go on foreign trips together.

It, however, said that exceptions may be made for national interests, such as meetings with the World Bank, International Monetary Fund or donor groups.

Between April 15 and 19, she was set to visit Kenya to learn about digital agriculture but had to cancel due to a minor accident.

In November last year, she attended a workshop in the Philippines.

From September 1-4 last year, the secretary joined a workshop in China; on August 1-5, she attended a discussion in Malaysia; and from June 4-9, she visited Canada for an existing contract.

"For contract signings, wing chiefs usually go; secretaries don't need to go unless there are major complications," said former secretary Awal.

Asked, the agriculture secretary claimed there is no such directive.

Awal further said, "In my tenure, I sent junior officers for trips, as they will serve the country for a longer time than I will ... The precedent set by the current secretaries will have a more negative impact in the future."

Speaking to The Daily Star, Wahida said the secretaries travel abroad in the interest of the country, not for pleasure.

"You surely know that the approval for foreign trips of secretaries comes from the Prime Minister's Office. The secretary can travel as many times as deemed necessary in the interest of the country."

Regarding criticism, Wahida said, "I don't know who's making these criticisms, but I can't take anymore of what you [this newspaper] are saying. Everyone in our ministry knows the purposes of the trips."

Agriculture Minister Abdus Shahid told this newspaper, "If the foreign trips-related files don't come to me, I can't intervene."

Asked whether the files for the secretary's trips may have been sent to the PMO without his approval, he said, "Ask the secretary about that ... I act or settle things that come to me as per the rules."

He, however, admitted that some files do not reach him. "If the files don't come, what can I ask about them? ... If there is no discussion with me, I can't say what is right or not."

Firoz Mia, a researcher on public administration, said, "The minister's approval is required for foreign trips. If there's an exception, that might be another issue."

A minister, speaking anonymously, said, "Approval from the minister is needed for foreign trips. If there isn't any, it indicates a poor relationship between the minister and the secretary."

short period of time."

THE ACCOUNTS AND THEIR HOLDERS

According to the ACC investigation team's source, they identified 33 bank accounts: six in Benazir Ahmed's name; five in Jissan Mirza's name; three for Farheen Rishta Binte Benazir; and one for Tahseen Raisa Binte Benazir.

There is one joint account shared by Jissan Mirza, one Mirza Monwara Reza and one Mirza Anwar Parvez.

Other accounts are held by entities such as Ekti Shishir Bindu, Stealth Industries Ltd, Savanna Farm Products, Savana Agro Ltd, Savana Park Resort and Country Club, and Bangla Tea Manufacturing Industries Ltd. There are also three unspecified accounts with Sonali Bank PLC and a Sanchayapatra worth Tk 30 lakh.

On May 23, Dhaka Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court ordered the freezing of all these accounts.

Benazir also has two beneficiary owners' (BO) accounts with IFCI Securities Ltd and Dragon Securities Ltd. Jissan Mirza has two BO accounts with Southeast Bank Capital Services Ltd and EBL Securities Ltd, while Tahseen Raisa has two with Dynasty Securities Ltd and EBL Securities Ltd.

The Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission on Monday froze the BO accounts.

"We have frozen the BO accounts following the ACC's request," said a senior official of the stock market regulator, requesting anonymity.

Officials said the BSEC have already asked Central Depository Bangladesh Ltd, which facilitates transfer and settlement of shares and other securities against BO accounts, to close the accounts.

BENAZIR OUT OF COUNTRY

On May 4, Benazir left to Singapore using his passport -- B00002095, an intelligence source confirmed to The Daily Star yesterday.

Meanwhile, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan yesterday said that he does not know whether the ex-IGP is in the country or not.

"We've not banned him [from travelling abroad] yet ... I still don't know for sure if he is here or not. I have to be sure."

said it is indecent for the country to have a businessman like him. That businessman has "removed his name from the list of defaulters by depositing 2 percent".

Muinul said, "Money laundering is the biggest problem but no steps have been taken to control hundi."

Rather, he added, various benefits including tax exemptions have been offered to bring back the laundered money, but not a single taka has returned.

About loan money being laundered, he said, "Tk 5 lakh crore out of total Tk 18 lakh crore loans in the banking sector are defaulted. But Bangladesh Bank does not recognise it. Bank loans are being repaid with borrowed money. A loan is being rescheduled seven to eight times."

Speaking about the lingering high inflation, he said, "Other countries could reduce it, but Bangladesh couldn't. To the contrary, the prices have been pushed up further."

Muinul said now the names of the former police and army chiefs are being discussed. "They are being talked about only because the government wants them to be talked about. Where did former home minister Mohiuddin Khan Alamgir get the money to set up Padma Bank? Why is Bachchu (Abdul Hai) of BASIC Bank still missing? Where are the sons of Sikder who ruined the National Bank?"

He said that Russia has set up projects like Rooppur power plant in India at half the cost. "So why are we spending more money there? A lot of unnecessary infrastructure is being built. Money is being looted through it."

Muinul observed Sri Lanka has collapsed in the wake of massive unnecessary infrastructure. "We are also going in the same direction with such eccentricities. After 2008, there was no fair election in the country. All the elections were one-sided. Deviation from democracy is a bad sign for the country, and is affecting the economy."

Workers Party President Rashed Khan Menon said, "We can understand the poor state of the economy through media reports as well as through our lifestyle. If you go to the market, you can feel how badly the economy is doing."

He added that syndicates are controlling the market. "The ruling party leaders are also saying the same. No one disagrees with this. But no attempt has been made to identify those who are in the syndicate. Most of the syndicates are close to the government."

The economy is controlled by a small section of military-civilian bureaucrats and wealthy elites and wealth is becoming concentrated in them, he said.

Workers Party Politburo Member Sushant Das and General Secretary Fazle Hossain Badsha also spoke at the event.

Woman dies

On information, locals rushed to their aid and took them to the hospital and on May 29, the woman died but her husband survived.

On May 31, the woman's uncle filed a case with Rajibpur police accusing four people. The two other accused are Shukkur Ali, 59, of Karigarpara village, and Soleyman, 29, of Tangalipara village.

Contacted, OC Ashiqur said police were trying to arrest the other two accused.

Flooding

Jaintapur, Kanighat, Jokiganj, Beanibazar and Golapganj upazilas and 9 wards of Sylhet city were flood affected.

At least 550 shelters have been opened in the district in which 3,342 people moved in.

Deputy Commissioner Sheikh Russel Hasan said the lower areas of Sylhet city, Beanibazar and Golapganj upazilas were flooded again due to onrush of water from upstream.

Yesterday morning, former foreign minister Abdul Momen MP visited the flood-affected area in the suburbs. He blamed the Surma not being dredged for the flooding.

He said the river dredging project was taken up and work had begun but, after a few days, it was shut down for various reasons.

Had the job been completed, the water would have drained quickly, he said.

Sylhet City Corporation opened a 24-hour control room (01958284800) for emergency services of the city dwellers.

Russia attacks Ukraine energy sites

100 missiles, drones fired

AFP, Kyiv

Russia fired a combined 100 missiles and drones at Ukraine overnight, in a barrage that targeted energy sites across the country, Ukrainian officials said yesterday.

Russia has launched dozens of aerial attacks at Ukraine's power facilities throughout the two-year war, causing significant damage and energy shortages.

"The enemy launched 53 missiles of various types and 47 attack drones," the air force said, adding that it shot down 35 of the missiles and all but one of the drones. Two thermal power plants were damaged in the attack, it added.

In a daily briefing, Russia's defence ministry said the strikes were a "response to attempts by the Kyiv regime to damage Russian energy and transport facilities."

Ukraine has hit several Russian oil depots and refineries in drone strikes over recent months -- something Kyiv says is fair retribution for Moscow's own aerial attacks.

SHANGRI-LA DIALOGUE IN SINGAPORE

US seeking to build 'Asia-Pacific version of Nato'

Says China as US defence chief praises 'new era of security' in the region

AFP, Singapore

US Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin yesterday hailed a "new era of security" in the Asia-Pacific region, as Washington strengthens its network of alliances aimed at countering China's growing military might and influence.

From Japan to Australia, the United States has been deepening defence ties across the region, ramping up joint military exercises and regularly deploying warships and fighter jets in the Taiwan Strait and South China Sea -- infuriating Beijing.

Responding to Austin, Chinese Lieutenant General Jing Jianfeng accused the United States of seeking to build "an Asia-Pacific version of Nato", and described the superpower as the "greatest challenge to regional peace and stability".

In the past three years, Austin said there had been a "new convergence around nearly all aspects of security" in the Asia-Pacific, where there was a shared understanding of "the power of partnership".

"This new convergence is producing a stronger, more resilient and more capable network of partnerships and that is defining a new era of security in the Indo-Pacific," Austin told the Shangri-La Dialogue in Singapore.

However, it was not "about imposing one country's will" or "bullying or coercion", Austin said, in an apparent shot at China, which has increased its sabre-rattling over self-ruled Taiwan and grown more confident in pressing its claims in the South China Sea.

"This new convergence is about coming together and not splitting apart," Austin said. "It's about the free choices of sovereign states."

The Shangri-La Dialogue, a major security forum attended by defence officials from around the world, has become a barometer of US-China relations in recent years.

This year's edition comes a week after China held military drills around Taiwan and warned of war over the US-backed island following the inauguration of President Lai Ching-te, who Beijing has described as a "dangerous separatist".

Taiwan is one of the thorniest disputes in US-China relations.

Austin met with his Chinese counterpart Dong Jun on Friday for the first substantive face-to-face talks between the two countries' defence chiefs in 18 months.

China scrapped military communications with the United States in 2022 in response to then-US House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's visit to Taiwan.

Tensions between Washington and Beijing were further stoked by issues including an alleged Chinese spy balloon that was shot down over US airspace, a meeting between Taiwan's then-president Tsai Ing-wen and Pelosi's successor Kevin McCarthy, and American military aid for Taipei.

Friday's meeting offered hopes of further military dialogue that could help prevent flashpoint issues from spinning out of control.

Austin said the United States and China would resume military-to-military communications "in the coming months", while Beijing hailed the "stabilising" security relations between the countries.

The Philippines, a treaty ally of the United States, is a key focus of Washington's efforts to build an arc of alliances across the region.

Given its position in the South China Sea and proximity to Taiwan, which China claims as its own, Philippine support would be crucial for the United States in the event of any conflict.

The Philippines has increased to nine the number of military bases open to US troops under a 2014 agreement, including two in the country's far north less than 450 kilometres (280 miles) from Taiwan.

Austin insisted yesterday that Washington's commitment to defend Manila under their mutual defence treaty remained "ironclad", as repeated confrontations between Chinese and Philippine vessels in the South China Sea have stoked fears of a wider conflict.

ANC loses majority in South Africa

AFP, Johannesburg

South Africa's ruling ANC faced a search for allies to help it form a new government yesterday after it lost its three-decade-old absolute majority in a watershed election.

With 99 percent of the votes from Wednesday's election counted, President Cyril Ramaphosa's African National Congress had only 40 percent, a catastrophic slump from the 57.5 it won in 2019.

The party has enjoyed an absolute majority since 1994, when liberation leader Nelson Mandela led the nation out of white-minority rule and into democracy.

The ANC must now either negotiate a coalition government, or at least persuade other parties to back Ramaphosa's re-election in parliament to allow him to form a minority government reliant on other parties for support to pass budgets and legislation.

Boat tragedy kills 20 in Afghanistan

AFP, Kabul

Twenty people, including children, drowned when a boat sank during a river crossing in Afghanistan's eastern Nangarhar province yesterday, a provincial official said.

"A boat with women and children on board sank on Saturday morning at 7:00am in the river in the Basawul area of Momand Dara district" of eastern Nangarhar, said Quraishi Badloon, the head of the province's information department.

He said five people survived the accident, the cause of which was being investigated. At least five bodies had been recovered and efforts were underway to find the others, provincial government officials said.

Israelis feel isolation over Gaza war as sympathy over Oct 7 attack fades

AFP, Jerusalem

A series of diplomatic setbacks, strong condemnation of a recent Gaza strike, and intense protests on Western campuses have left Israelis feeling their country is unfairly isolated.

Israelis expected unwavering support from their allies and the international community after Hamas's October 7 attack.

But as Israel's retaliatory offensive against Hamas in Gaza deepened, it seems to have lost the sympathy it initially received after the unprecedented attack.

This loss of support intensified following last week's Israeli strike on a camp for displaced Palestinians in Rafah, which killed at least 45 people, according to Gazan officials. The military has denied targeting the camp.

The strike drew condemnations from Istanbul to Beijing and from Washington to Paris.

On social media platform Instagram, more than 47 million posts with the hashtag "All eyes on Rafah" have been recorded since the strike.

But Israelis remain defiant despite the growing isolation.

"I don't think Israel should care what the world has to say... I support our military 100 percent," Netanel Aronson, a 24-year-old Israeli-American, told AFP.

"I pray for them every day that they should be safe and come home."

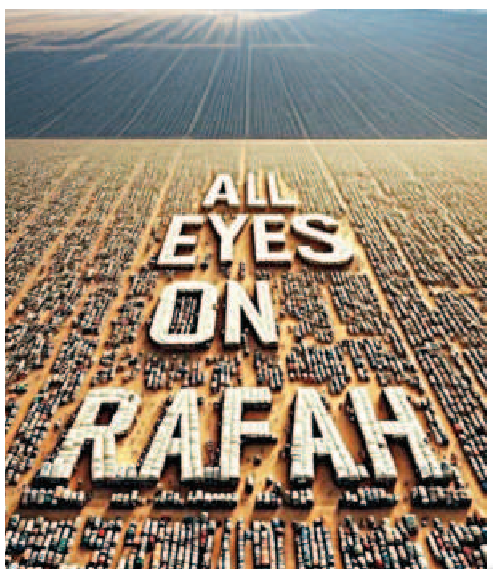
At least 36,379 Palestinians, mostly civilians, have been killed in Gaza in Israeli bombardments and ground offensive since October 7, according to the health ministry in Hamas-run territory.

Israel's retaliatory campaign came after the Hamas attack resulted in the deaths of 1,189 people in Israel, mostly civilians, according to an AFP tally based on official Israeli figures.

The militants also took 252 people as hostages, of which 121 are still held in Gaza, including 37 the military says are dead.

"It is a tragedy for everyone," said Nathalie, who declined to give her last name, referring also to the fate of Palestinians in the Gaza Strip.

"Since everybody is connected, we can see what's happening. We feel that we are hated," the 50-year-old said.



"We have the feeling that we are accused of being colonialists and imperialists. But we see ourselves as refugees," she added, echoing the feeling of many Jews who arrived during the creation of Israel in 1948.

The Palestinians call the creation of Israel as the Nakba -- or "catastrophe" -- when about 760,000 Palestinians fled or were forced from their homes by the war over Israel's creation.

Last month, Israel faced a series of diplomatic setbacks.

While the International Court of Justice ordered Israel to stop its ongoing offensive in Rafah, the chief prosecutor of the International Criminal Court sought arrest warrants for Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Defence Minister Yoav Gallant, along with three senior Hamas leaders.

Ireland, Norway and Spain also recognised a Palestinian state in a coordinated decision on Tuesday, while Slovenia's parliament is due to vote on such a proposal next week.

Political analyst Dahlia Scheindlin said Israelis were aware the war was damaging their global standing.

"(Israelis) think the world is against Israel. They think that many institutions and countries are anti-Semitic, and that there is a double standard," Scheindlin said.

She regretted the "devastating" impact of the war on Gazans, but said Israelis see the ongoing military campaign as an "existential struggle" for their people.

Scheindlin said Israelis have been demoralised over the setbacks at international tribunals after Israel was accused of committing some of the worst crimes in Gaza.

Such crimes "Israelis believed were only ever committed against them", she added.

"So, it's very hard for them to accept this. They fear the isolation."

Israelis are also countering the social media campaign "All Eyes on Rafah," with their own that says "If your eyes are on Rafah, then help us find the hostages".

In a survey by US-based Pew Research Center before the May 26 strike on a camp of displaced people in Rafah, 40 percent of Israelis thought the country would "definitely" achieve its Gaza war goals.

Only four percent of the Jewish majority thought Israel's military response in the Palestinian territory had gone "too far".

But for Christians like Annie Dikbikian, the war has only increased "the hatred" on both sides.

"It's affecting us... as Christians," said the Jerusalem-based hairdresser, who hoped "peace, love, and respect" would return soon.

Indian election: How accurate are exit polls?

AGENCIES

Voting for the 2024 Lok Sabha elections ended yesterday with the conclusion of the seventh phase. Before the final results scheduled for June 4, exit polls show the BJP-led coalition is set to win the election by a big margin.

Most exit polls projected the ruling National Democratic Alliance (NDA) could win a two-thirds majority in the 543-member lower house of parliament, where 272 is needed for a simple majority. A two-thirds majority will allow the government to usher in far-reaching amendments in the constitution.

The exit polls for the 2024 Lok Sabha elections were due to be broadcast from 6:30pm yesterday, 30 minutes after the polling ended.

The actual results for all 543 parliamentary seats will be announced by the Election Commission of India on June 4.

Warning: The exit polls do not always get it right. They have been way off the mark in the past.

Here's a look at a summary of some data on exit polls projections published in various Indian news outlets and the actual results in Lok Sabha elections in 2014 and 2019.

In 2014, predictions for the NDA, BJP-led coalition, were not very accurate. On average, the predictions were off by 55 seats. Some predictions were even further off. Predictions for the UPA, Congress-led coalition, were also quite inaccurate. The average error was just over 50 seats, but the errors varied widely.

In 2019, predictions improved for both NDA and UPA. For the NDA, the average error dropped to about 27 seats, with less variation in errors compared to 2014. For the UPA, the predictions were off by 22 seats on average, with fewer large errors.

In 2014, predictions were not very accurate for both NDA and UPA. By 2019, predictions improved a lot. The errors were much smaller.

This shows that polling methods and data collection got better over time. Polls in 2019 were closer to the actual results.

make mistakes. The media's job is to identify those."

Referring to the country's slide in the World Press Freedom Index, he said that there was incorrect information in the ranking, and the information ministry pointed those out.

"In order to reflect the real picture of the country, they should have followed a well-established research methodology. But this was not the case here.

In his welcome speech, Noab President AK Azad said his association and the Editors' Council have raised concerns over the Cyber Security Act.

"We hope the government will take our concerns into cognisance," he said.

Ittefaq Editor Tasmima Hossain said her newspaper played a crucial role in 1971.

Nihad Kabir, a member of the board of directors of the Sangbad, said, "Newspapers are under pressure from various quarters. We try very hard to stay on the right path ... ."

Prothom Alo Editor Matiur Rahman said, "Free journalism is no longer an easy task around the world and in Bangladesh."

Shihab Malik, executive editor of Dainik Azadi, said his newspaper started its journey in 1960 and will continue to serve the nation.

Manabzamin Editor Motiur Rahman Chowdhury said, "In this country, some things can be said, and some things cannot be uttered. If we speak, there will be problems ... If the laws and regulations that tie our hands are removed, we believe we will be able to write freely."

The Daily Star Editor and Publisher Mahfuz Anam said nine laws work directly or indirectly against the freedom of the media.

"If you had given us more leeway, you would have been served better. This is the relationship between a free press and a government," he said.

Bonik Barta Editor Dewan Hanif Mahmud moderated the event.

UN mission in Iraq to end after two decades

AFP, United Nations

At the request of Baghdad, the UN Security Council unanimously decided Friday that the United Nations political mission in Iraq will leave the country at the end of 2025 after more than 20 years.

The Iraqi government welcomed the decision, saying it reflected progress and stability in the country since the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq (UNAMI) was established in 2003 after the US-led invasion and fall of Saddam Hussein.

But analysts say the mission has struggled to make an impact in areas such as impunity, and that its exit is part of a trend for host nations to reject UN missions.

The UNSC resolution adopted on Friday extended the mission's mandate until December 31, 2025 "after which UNAMI will cease all work and operations."

The mission has about 700 staff, with tasks including advising the government on political dialogue and reconciliation, as well as helping with elections and security sector reform.

Another display of abuse of power

Chattogram councillor found involved in illicit cigarette market

An investigative report by this paper has brought to light another disgraceful case of power abuse by a public official. A councillor of Chattogram City Corporation (CCC) and his brother have been found to be involved in illicit cigarette market, having majority stakes in two companies that have a significant share in this market. As indicated by an ongoing investigation by the NBR's Central Intelligence Cell (CIC), the two companies have been making fake versions of foreign brands and putting counterfeit banderoles on their cigarette packs. These fake cigarettes have entered major markets, including Dhaka and Chattogram, where they are being sold at lower prices compared to the authentic ones.

As this is an illicit trade, the country loses about $100 million in tax revenue, and the two companies are largely responsible for it. CIC officials suspect that they have been evading tax by illegally importing raw materials through phantom entities. What is more surprising is that a city corporation councillor could have carried out such activities undetected. Obviously, his position gave him a great deal of impunity and power to carry on without any hindrance. It is laudable that the NBR took the initiative to investigate allegations that the two companies were selling fake brands of cigarettes. Our report in this regard has further revealed a complex web of illegal activities involving the two.

In the last few weeks, such blatant examples of abuse of power to enhance personal wealth have been exposed through the media. A recently murdered MP was allegedly involved in a massive gold smuggling racket. A former army chief was sanctioned by the US Department accusing him of engaging in corruption and assisting his brother to evade accountability for criminal activities. A former IGP and his family members were accused of amassing 114 acres of land among other possessions.

That these individuals in such prime seats of power could abuse their position for so long and so blatantly demonstrates the lack of accountability of public officials in a system that enables criminal behaviour. It seems being connected to power automatically gives individuals a shield of immunity, allowing them to go on violating the law for personal gain. This serves to amplify the anxiety and insecurity of the ordinary people whose interests these public officials and leaders were supposed to protect.

It should be recognised that relevant state organisations are trying to unravel some of these cases of unbridled corruption. But this is more likely to be the tip of the iceberg for public officials involved in illegal activities. Unless the government clamps down on the criminal activities of all those in powerful public positions, the hydra of corruption will continue to grow exponentially, damaging the country's image abroad and leading to a nation that is haemorrhaging economically and morally.

Sylhet flood victims need urgent help

Govt must critically assess the situation, intervene properly

We're worried about the evolving flood situation in Sylhet that came hard on the heels of another severe calamity in the form of Cyclone Remal earlier last week, the effects of which are still very much felt. While the nation's focus remained fixed on cyclone-hit communities in southern Bangladesh, the north-east—Sylhet district in particular—was hit by flash floods that began on Wednesday night due to torrential rains and onrush of water from upstream in India's Meghalaya. Since then, at least 6.43 lakh people have been marooned across eight upazilas in Sylhet, according to a report by this daily.

The deluge has swept away many houses and submerged schools, roads, farmlands, and fish enclosures in about 48 unions, compounding the suffering of the victims. Acute shortages of food and drinking water have been reported. True, the district administration set up 547 shelters—housing about 3,739 people on Friday, down from 4,802 the previous night—but many more people are in need of shelter, support and rehabilitation. The stories of some of the villagers approached by this daily are heart-wrenching yet familiar, as flash floods triggered by water influx from upstream areas as well as lack of preparation on our side have ravaged these communities many times in the past, most notably during the devastating 2022 flood that went down as a "once-in-122-years weather event" in the region.

While the geopolitics of transboundary river management can complicate things for a region dealing with such events, many after the recent flood have rightly questioned the government's preparations, especially its river dredging programmes which are supposed to help manage water flow and reduce erosions. Experts have also highlighted the importance of preventing encroachments on floodplains that have been quite prevalent in recent years. Clearly, we need to consider both short-term and long-term interventions as we prepare for yet another monsoon season.

Right now, the priority is to ensure that the affected communities in Sylhet, especially those stranded, have food, clean water and medical supplies delivered to them as soon as possible. Since the floodwaters have begun to recede in many areas, the administration must also focus on repairing critical infrastructure including roads and schools. Many have lost their homes and means of livelihood, so they will require financial assistance to rebuild their lives. The district administration and local representatives must engage with all villagers to ensure that they get the help they deserve.

A symbol of our degradation

It is a rare instance in the world when a country is sending its raw materials—jute in the case of Bangladesh—abroad without utilising it themselves

SERAJUL ISLAM CHOUDHURY

A truly unforgettable representation of the poor farmer can be found in the character Gafur from Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay's short story "Mahesh." While a century has passed, this Gafur is still present today, in the same old form, for the kind of suffering may have changed but the cause has not. And the reason is our prevailing social system.

Over a hundred years ago, Gafur fled his village for the city in the dead of night, to work at a jute mill. He didn't want to go at all. Gafur was deeply worried that Amina, his only child—that too motherless—wouldn't survive in the slums where jute mill workers lived. But he still had to go, because he had committed a terrible crime in a village ruled by a Brahmin landlord: he had killed a cow. It wasn't as if the cow belonged to someone else, it was his own. He had named it Mahesh.

As the story goes, Mahesh was extremely close to Gafur, whose ancestors were weavers. The East India Company had swallowed up the looms, so Gafur had to become a farmer. But he didn't have the materials needed to farm. There was no land, and his plough was broken. He had put his trust in Mahesh, who had grown old. There was a severe drought in the village, and drinking water was hard to come by. Amina had a lot of trouble fetching water from the distant tube-well. She had to walk carefully, lest she touched a high-caste Hindu woman by mistake. On a hot summer afternoon, she brought a pitcher of water, and a parched Mahesh broke the pitcher while drinking. Blinded by anger, ego, and grief, Gafur hit Mahesh on the head with the share of his broken plough. Mahesh died immediately after, forcing Gafur to flee the village.

The Gafur of that time, who was from West Bengal, living near the capital Kolkata, could still put his faith in jute. There were many jute mills around Kolkata, jute used to come from East Bengal, while the mills were in Kolkata. It was the only marketable asset of East Bengal to speak of, before and after partition. But East Bengal wouldn't get the profit from the sale of that jute: it went to Karachi, then to Rawalpindi. A new capital was built in Rawalpindi, partly from the money obtained from selling jute. Jute money also started buying weapons, which, in 1971, were used against the unfortunate East Bengal. Being from West Bengal, Gafur was at least able to get a job in a jute mill. If he were a resident of present-day East Bengal, he wouldn't have even gotten that.

There is jute, but no jute mill: in this circumstance, a few mills were set up in East Bengal after 1947. Knowing that there would be good profit, two or three of the 22 famous industrial families of the time invested in the jute industry. And, indeed, the profits were good. Adamjee's mill was said to be the best, not only in Asia but also the world. After Bangladesh's independence in 1971, many mills were closed down. Meanwhile, Adamjee's fall was monumental. However, Adamjee did not fall because of its workers, it fell because of mismanagement.

The Bangalee managers, after gaining independence, embarked on committing such robbery that far from profits, it became "impossible" to manage losses. Adamjee fell, but almost immediately across the border in West Bengal, there was a flurry of new jute mills. And the jute went from Bangladesh. The old system was revived: raw material were from here, but the factories were there. Right after independence, Adamjee's non-Bangalee general manager—who was very efficient—moved to the other side, and was welcomed graciously by industrialists there. Who will confirm whether this was part of an alleged Pakistani conspiracy after independence?

In an independent Bangladesh, jute mills were either closing down one by one or going under private ownership. It was understood that capitalism had been liberated; it would not tolerate any obstacles and would display its ruthless activities. Privatising state factories was government policy. Even though the government changed several times after independence, the policy did not. Those responsible for looking after state industries were the ones who transferred them to private entities. Some officials of Bangladesh Jute Mills Corporation received cash bribes, some were given ownership of the mills. The good people just watched on with their eyes wide open.

After independence, it was even heard that jute has no future: it will walk the path of the once-famous indigo. But that did not happen; it survived, because jute possesses utility. It is eco-friendly. On the contrary, polythene and plastic are engaged in constant hostility against nature. And it's not like only sacks are made from jute: it's also used for making carpets, clothes, and furniture. And that's why jute did not fall to its demise. It is being cultivated in large quantities in other countries. But still, 50 percent of the world's jute is produced in Bangladesh. However, other countries do not want to export their jute. India strictly does not export at all, but Bangladesh does.

It's a rare instance in the world that a country is sending its raw materials to foreign nations without utilising it themselves. Most of the jute is exported to our good friend and great neighbour India. The country procures the best consignment of jute at cheap prices during peak season, while Bangladesh is left with the worst quality of jute, with which it is impossible to produce excellent products. According to experts, 78.54 percent of the total raw jute exports in the world now go from Bangladesh. The market for jute products is growing, but Bangladesh has been cornered. Neither are its jute products of high quality, nor is there any state effort to enter the market.

The main reason why government jute mills are incurring losses is the corruption of managers. They come to the market late to buy jute, by which time the good jute has already been sold. They buy low-quality jute for cheap but show high prices on paper. Jute is bought from areas near the mills but the account states faraway places, so that travel and vehicle expenses are high. The surplus money goes into their pockets, and so, losses are inevitable. As a result, workers don't get their salaries, and frustrated, they go on strike. Production stops, losses mount, and the field is set for the establishment to be padlocked, or sold off to the private sector at a dismal price.

In comparison, private mills are doing well, the main reason being they employ cheap labour. They don't want Gafur; they want Gafur's teenage daughter Amina. Because Amina doesn't know how to negotiate, and if she disagrees, there are other Aminas at the ready. Amina will work like a slave, the way tea plantation workers do. Another secret of private profits is tax evasion. Their skills in this regard are immense. Besides, they can't think of buying rotten jute from the market; they buy the best, and as a result, the product quality is better. It's also heard that some stamp India's seal on their products, hoping to get a slice of that market.

The bustling jute industry of the Pakistan period is now on the verge of destruction. When the country was divided in 1947, many thought East Bengal would not survive. How could it? Where were its factories? It could only rely on paddy and jute. Rice would provide the food, and money would come from jute. Although the plan to get money from jute didn't work out that well, paddy did save us. The main reason behind this wasn't nature, but rather the labour of farmers. The same is true for the high yields of jute.

After independence, the US said Bangladesh would be a basket case, while many others grinned and nodded. But the reason the country did not drown, and even made some sort of progress, is down to the farmers. Most of those who go to distant countries, take on inhumane jobs, and send money back without having proper meals themselves are also children of peasant families.

These families fought in 1971. After March 25, the invaders quickly took possession of our big cities, but faced trouble while attacking the villages. The groundwork for the invaders' defeat was laid in the villages, although the theatre of surrender was staged in the capital. Most of the three million people whose sacrifice we boast of were farmers and their children. Most of the three lakh women who have lost their dignity were the wives and daughters of labourers. This should always be remembered.

Are we ready for generic drug names on prescriptions?

The Institute of Health Economics (IHE) at the University of Dhaka recently held a policy discussion titled, "Can the Use of Generic Names in Prescriptions Effectively Control Aggressive Drug Marketing in Bangladesh?" Dr Syed Abdul Hamid, professor of IHE and moderator of the dialogue, talked to Tamanna Khan of The Daily Star about the pros and cons of using generic drug names.

What are some of the main concerns about drug sales that came up in this discussion?

There are over 250 functional drugs manufacturing companies that need to sell the products they are making. Now, how are they selling these drugs?

Medical representatives or promotional officers of pharmaceutical companies go to doctors, medicine shops, or quacks and request them to write the name of their company's drugs in the prescriptions. Initially, they (medical reps) used to provide samples. According to the guideline (code of pharmaceutical marketing practice), samples as well as leaflets or flyers on the drugs can be given because a doctor needs to know about the drugs.

Later, because of the presence of a large number of pharmaceutical companies, competition increased among them, and at one point, perhaps one pharmaceutical company started giving gifts to doctors on different occasions. This (gift-giving) now reached such an extent that samples are not given to everyone. Only junior doctors or those who do not have a well-established practice in the market receive samples. Those who have well-established practices often receive incentives such as expensive gifts, monthly allowances, cars or flats from pharmaceutical companies to prescribe their products.

The companies also try to differently incentivise those who are not qualified to write prescriptions—such as quacks or pharmacy shops. Top companies, or the brands we consider as good, do not give a lot of incentive to the pharmacies because their drugs are of good quality. Drugstores get a better commission by selling drugs of companies that are not well-known to the public. They get more commission from new companies or companies that do not yet produce drugs of a certain standard.

The way pharmaceutical companies are marketing their products in our country, they end up spending a lot of money on marketing. That cost is reflected in the (drug) price. So, people end up buying medicine at a higher price.

The term 'bioequivalence' came up in discussion. What does it mean?

There are many companies that manufacture drugs. There are variations in their products in terms of quality. All these drugs have the approval of the DGDA (Directorate General of Drug Administration). Since these drugs have been marketed with the DGDA's approval, the quality of these drugs is not supposed to be bad. But the DGDA cannot guarantee that all the drugs in the market are of the same or similar quality. The reason is, before giving permission, the DGDA cannot get a main test conducted, which is the bioequivalence test.

Through bioequivalence, the generic drug's biomass and concentration level in blood plasma are compared to the original researched product. That means how much of the (generic) drug is being absorbed by the body. If it is seen that the difference is within a permissible limit, then it is considered to be a bioequivalent tested drug. If the drug is similar to the original drug in terms of effectiveness and efficacy, then we can assume that the (generic) drug is of good quality.

If all the drugs in the market passed the bioequivalence test, then we could assume that the quality of all these drugs are similar. Under that circumstance, if a doctor writes the generic name and I take it (the prescription) to the pharmacy, all the drugs in the pharmacy will be of good quality, because they are bioequivalence tested. If this test is not done, then if I go to a shop where the brand name is not mentioned, then the pharmacist becomes responsible for suggesting a quality product.

Now the thousands of pharmacies we have in our country do not have any pharmacist. Under this situation, if generic names are written in the prescription, then the power will shift from the doctors' hands to the salesman of the pharmacies. Since they are not trained and educated like their counterparts in other countries, then rationally they will push the low-standard drugs because the bad companies give them more incentive and commission.

Why is it possible to conduct bioequivalence tests on medicine exported from our country, but not on the products sold in local market?

All the countries we export to have bodies like our DGDA and they make it mandatory—that they will accept the medicine only if it passes the bioequivalence test. Most of the companies in our country get the test done from India. But the European or American market specifies the location for getting the bioequivalence tests done. All the products we export are exported after conducting the bioequivalence test. But for the about Tk 200 billion drug market for local consumers, the drugs sold are not quality-tested. The quality of a drug is considered good because it cures diseases, but the drugs are not quality-tested.

The cost of the bioequivalence test is not that much. It is about Tk 20-30 lakh. Now the question is, if we want to do bioequivalence tests for all our products, can we do it in our country? My answer will be "no", because we do not have enough institutions that will conduct the test. Currently, there are three to four functional institutions that can do the test. The number and quality of these institutions need to increase. We will also need a regulatory body to monitor the bioequivalence testing companies, which must have national and international accreditation.

Now the thousands of pharmacies we have in our country do not have any pharmacist. Under this situation, if generic names are written in the prescription, then the power will shift from the doctors' hands to the salesman of the pharmacies. Since they are not trained and educated like their counterparts in other countries, then rationally they will push the low-standard drugs because the bad companies give them more incentive and commission.

How advantageous would the use of generic names be when pharmaceutical companies also market to village doctors and pharmacies, who serve a large population segment?

That is one of the reasons why there is no opportunity to prescribe drugs using generic names in Bangladesh at this moment.

Now, the pharmaceutical companies are running after doctors to make them write their brand name in the prescriptions, then they will run after pharmacies or drugstores to push them to sell their drugs. Currently, only the small companies give more commission. Then if generic names are used, the big companies too will have to give more commission. At present, the doctors are getting the incentive, but then people connected to drug stores will get direct or indirect incentives.

But there is opportunity to write prescriptions using generic names in organisations, where people have the option to buy drugs from within the institutions like they do in Evercare or Combined Military Hospital (CMH). The precondition to implement the use of generic names on prescriptions is that the quality of all our drugs must be similar. All the pharmaceutical companies that produce the same kind of drugs must conduct the bioequivalent test to make the drugs similar.

Multilateral institutions aren't doing enough for climate justice

The Spring Meetings of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank convened during the third week of April, 2024. This is the first time the meeting failed to have an agreed communique, because of dissensus among member states on a number of geopolitical issues. A stock take was done about the evolution of the World Bank's mission to better respond to global challenges. The series of meetings focused on issues like the capital expansion of the multilateral financial institutions (MFIs) for addressing global challenges like climate change and the soaring debt burdens, both of which are related to the functioning of the Bretton Woods system.

First about enhanced financing for global development by the World Bank: a pledge to increase funding by more than $5 billion a year, so this could potentially generate up to $50 billion of investment for tackling global challenges over the next decade. Besides, the 10 heads of multilateral development banks (MDBs) also agreed to generate an additional $300-400 billion over the next decade to finance global development including climate change and SDGs. The MDB heads pledged to boost climate actions that include designing the first common approach to measuring outcomes and aligning their operations to the Paris Agreement goals. Also, they agreed to jointly report on climate financing and their engagement in achieving the new collective goal on climate finance. Another initiative was taken where 11 rich countries committed to a new Livable Planet Fund totalling $11 billion to support the SDGs, which is expected to leverage six to seven times more money over the coming decade. Pressure has been mounting for reforms of the MFIs in the hopes of boosting climate finance through measures such as grants and low-cost loans, special drawing rights, and co-investment with the private sector.

The IMF and the World Bank are taking an increasing interest in climate financing, where spending by the World Bank reached almost $32 billion in 2022. Now the IMF has its Resilience and Sustainability Trust (RST), created last year to provide long-term concessional financing for adaptation and energy transition, under which a number of countries, including Bangladesh, reached an agreement. However, these steps are extremely short of the growing needs for addressing the increasing impacts of climate change. There are estimates of $2.4 trillion a year needed by 2030 to shift on to a decarbonisation track, that is compatible with limiting average temperature increases to 1.5 degrees Celsius.

But the supply continues to witness a shortfall. Still, the Global South does not agree that the long-pledged climate finance of $100 billion goal has been met. Against this, in 2024, debt repayment that developing countries are likely to pay will be over $400 billion, which is $50 billion more than they are expected to get as new grants and loans. So, there is a net outflow of direly needed resources from the Global South, particularly from the LICs. Today, about 60 percent of low-income countries are either in debt distress or at high risk of it. A new UN report on SDG financing shows how prioritising debt over basic services like food, health care and education plagues the developing world, and that for the least-developed countries, debt service will amount to $40 billion annually between 2023 and 2025, up more than 50 percent from $26 billion in 2022. More frequent and destructive climate disasters account for more than half of the debt in these vulnerable countries. Against this, the UN Chief warns of growing inequalities, and trust in institutions and solidarity between developing and developed countries as "low and falling." So, Guterres is calling for mobilising $500 billion a year of additional investments in sustainable development and climate action.

While attending the meetings, President-designate Mukhtar Babayev of COP29 emphasised that climate finance remained the top priority for the Baku Summit, expecting the flow of climate finance to increase by "several multiples." In a similar vein, the UNFCCC (United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change) executive secretary talks of the need for a "quantum leap" in climate finance. So, a small group of nations led by Barbados, France and Kenya met on the side lines to push for more taxes on fossil fuel burning that developing nations could use to deal with climate shocks. Besides, discussions are ongoing about some levies on air travel and maritime transport for mobilising extrabudgetary resources.

A person attends the United Nations Climate Change Conference (COP28), in Dubai, United Arab Emirates.

The meeting also reviewed the Global Sovereign Debt Roundtable (GSDR) initiated last year to accelerate negotiations on debt restructuring through negotiations among major creditors including China and a diverse group of private investors. At the end, the reforms must include the provision of grants for adaptation in the most impacted countries, debt cancellation for the most debt distressed ones, long term concessional loans and changes in the lending practices of MDBs that allow capital flowing back to developing countries. The reform also has to include putting climate-resilient debt clauses in loan agreements, with suspension of debt repayments during the time a country recovers.

But frustrations from the leaders of low-and middle-income countries keep mounting. Mia Mottley, the Barbados Prime Minister who is most vocal about MFI reforms with the Bridgetown Initiative, accuses developed countries of double-speak—manifest in them telling lower income countries to refrain from doing things like not printing money, yet during the Covid-19 pandemic, they did not shy away from it themselves. Sermonising of doing not what they do, but doing what they tell the developing countries to do. She also alleges that the development paradigm still reflects the colonial framework of power relationships. In a similar vein, Amina Mohammed, the deputy UN secretary general, asked whether the responses of the MFIs reflect "one humanity", or if there is a deviation of our "moral compass".

This deviation is evident in the acute dearth of political will, not money. We may recall the lesson that Adam Smith, the father of "classical economics" taught us, that interests either at individual or national levels are bounded with one another. To realise our interests, we need to respect the interests of others in a free market system, upon which our climate regime is founded. Are we doing it? So, the billion-dollar question today before humanity is—how can the moral compass be directed to reverse the dysfunctional world order, as the UN Chief calls it.

Enhancing well-being through therapeutic activities for individuals with Alzheimer's disease

Therapeutic activities play a vital role in enhancing the well-being of individuals with Alzheimer's disease, promoting happiness, relaxation, and overall health. These activities encompass a broad range of actions, from physical presence and social interaction to engaging in arts and crafts or interacting with pets.

Engaging in therapeutic activities can improve cognitive functioning, thereby enhancing the individual's ability to perform daily tasks and reducing the risk of emotional disorders. Moreover, these activities contribute to maintaining or improving the individual's quality of life, which is beneficial for both the person with Alzheimer's and their carers.

While it can be challenging to measure the exact effectiveness of therapeutic activities, it is essential to recognise that responses vary among individuals with Alzheimer's. Therefore, it is crucial to tailor activities to the person's interests, capabilities, and stage of the disease.

Starting therapeutic activities early in the disease progression is recommended, as individuals with Alzheimer's may begin to withdraw from normal activities before it becomes necessary. Customised activity plans based on the person's preferences and abilities should be developed, with regular assessments of hearing and vision to ensure effective communication during these activities.

Throughout the stages of Alzheimer's, various types of activities can be beneficial. In the early stages, cognitive, physical, social, expressive, and memory-based activities, such as trivia, fitness routines, storytelling, and cooking favourite recipes, can be particularly helpful.

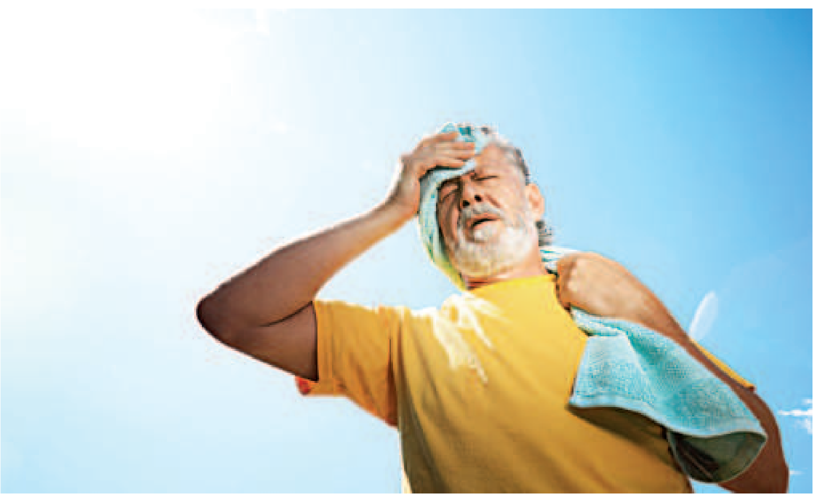
In the moderate stage, daily living tasks like folding laundry and sorting items, as well as activities like pet playdates and arts classes, can provide meaningful engagement. In the severe stage, focusing on sensory stimulation, such as listening to music or enjoying aromatherapy, becomes crucial for promoting quality of life.

Overall, adapting therapeutic activities to the individual's changing needs and abilities is key to maximising their benefits and enhancing their well-being throughout the progression of Alzheimer's disease.

MANAGING EXTREME HEAT

Understanding risks and protective measures

PROF GOLAM NABI



Globally, the environment is changing very rapidly, and one of its effects is the change in atmospheric temperature. In the last few decades, we did not face such hot and humid weather. Nowadays, temperatures surge up to 41–42°C, and due to high humidity, it feels like 44–45°C, which makes our lives miserable, especially for the elderly and children.

In health, the body core temperature is maintained at 37°C by the hypothalamic regulatory center. Heat is produced by cellular metabolism and lost through the skin by both vasodilatation and sweating, as well as through the lungs in expired air. Profuse sweating occurs when the ambient temperature is greater than 32.5°C and during exercise. The evaporation of sweat is a vital mechanism for cooling the body. If we stay for a long time in this weather, the following things happen:

Heat acclimatisation: Acclimatisation to hot climates takes several weeks. Sweat volume increases, and its salt content falls. Increased evaporation cools down the body.

Heat cramps: Painful muscle (usually leg) cramps often occur in well-acclimatised, fit young people when they exercise in hot weather. Cramps are due to low extracellular sodium caused by the replenishment of water but not salt during prolonged sweating. They can be prevented by increasing dietary salt and responding to combined salt and water replacement.

Heat illness (Heat exhaustion): In high environmental temperatures, particularly with high humidity, vigorous exercise in clothing that inhibits heat loss can provoke a sudden elevation in core temperature. Weakness, exhaustion, dizziness, and syncope, with a core temperature >37°C, define heat illness. Temperature elevation is more important than water and sodium loss. Heat illness may progress to heat injury. Management involves removing oneself from the heat source, cooling with cold sponging and fans, and giving oxygen by mask if possible. Oral rehydration with salt and water (ORS) is given in the first 24 hours. In severe heat illness, IV fluids are needed, and isotonic saline is given depending on serum sodium. Careful monitoring is required. Secondary potassium loss must be corrected.

Heat injury (Heat stroke): Heat injury is an acute, life-threatening situation when the core temperature is >41°C. There is a headache, nausea, vomiting, and weakness. When the skin is hot, sweating is often absent but not invariable, even in severe heat injuries. Brain involvement leads to confusion, delirium, and coma. Heat injury develops in hot, humid, windless climates, even without exercise in appropriate clothing. Old age, diabetes, and certain drugs (alcohol, anticholinergics, diuretics, and phenothiazines) are precipitating factors. The pathogenesis of heat injury includes a fall in cardiac output, lactic acidosis, and intravascular coagulation. Management involves removing oneself from the hot area immediately, cooling with sponging and ice packs, and giving fluids with caution, as hypovolemia is often absent. Prompt treatment is essential and leads to rapid and complete recovery; delay may be fatal. Prevention involves acclimatisation, fluid intake, and common sense.

These problems can be fatal and have grave consequences. Although we cannot change the weather or temperature, we can protect ourselves with the following measures:

- Avoid direct sun exposure; use umbrellas or caps when going out.
- Drink plenty of water, and always carry a water bottle.
- Restrict school children's outdoor activities; ensure well-ventilated classrooms with adequate fans or AC if possible. Teachers should ensure children drink frequently.
- Advise the elderly to stay hydrated and indoors.
- Arrange small water tanks in residential areas for street walkers and rickshaw pullers.
- Encourage affluent individuals to distribute bottled water to passersby in their communities.
- Ensure hospitals and clinics are trained to handle heat stroke cases effectively.

MANAGING ECZEMA

Essential tips for relief

Dealing with eczema involves adopting specific habits to alleviate symptoms. Here are some essential tips:

1. Keep your nails short: Trim and file your nails smooth to avoid skin damage from scratching. If necessary, use your hand's side or top to scratch.

2. Cool down: Use a refrigerated washcloth to numb itchy skin and reduce redness. For added relief, store moisturising creams in the fridge.

3. Wear natural fabrics: Choose breathable materials like cotton, bamboo, silk, or Tencel. Avoid wool and synthetic fabrics that trap heat and cause sweating.

4. Stay cool at night: Use all-cotton, bamboo, or silk sheets to regulate body temperature and prevent nighttime itching.

5. Choose loose clothing: To avoid rubbing and irritation, wear loose-fitting clothes. Opt for fabric-covered elastic waistbands and simple bra styles.

6. Wash new clothes: To remove irritating chemicals from new garments, wash them with unscented, mild detergent before wearing. An extra rinse cycle helps eliminate residues.

7. Alter itchy clothes: Remove tags and cover seams with silk strips. Turn clothes inside out at home to avoid itchy seams.

8. Nighttime hand care: Soak hands in warm water, apply fragrance-free cream, and wear cotton gloves overnight to lock in moisture.

9. Shower at night: Take a short, lukewarm shower before bed, and apply moisturiser within three minutes to keep skin hydrated.

10. To avoid drying out your skin, use gentle, fragrance-free soaps without alcohol, retinoids, or AHA.

11. Mind where you sit: To protect your skin on rough surfaces like grass or scratchy upholstery, use a towel or blanket.

12. Relax and destress: To manage stress, which can worsen eczema, incorporate relaxation techniques like meditation, walking, or listening to music.

Implementing these tips can help manage eczema more effectively, leading to improved comfort and symptom control.

Understanding and treating hyperpigmentation

Hyperpigmentation is a common skin concern characterised by dark patches caused by excess pigment within the skin due to increased melanin production. Melanin, responsible for skin colour, can become irregularly dispersed, leading to hyperpigmentation.

Post-inflammatory hyperpigmentation (PIH) often occurs after skin injury or inflammation, particularly in darker skin tones, lasting longer and being more severe. Melasma, another common cause, manifests as tan patches on sun-exposed areas of the face, often linked to hormonal changes and sun exposure. Photoaging, resulting from cumulative sunlight exposure, presents as sun spots or lentigines on chronically sun-damaged skin.

Treating hyperpigmentation requires patience and sun protection. Sunscreen with SPF30+ is essential to prevent exacerbations from UV exposure. While many hyperpigmentation types resolve over time, fading can take months or years.

Topical treatments like hydroquinone, retinoids, and vitamin C, along with procedures such as chemical peels and laser therapy, aid in resolution. Treatment efficacy varies based on the underlying cause, and prescription-strength management may be necessary in some cases.

Consulting a skincare expert helps determine the most suitable treatment approach and ensures safe and effective management.

Rights of disabled children in Bangladesh

RABEYA FERDOUS

Every child has the right to live independently. In Bangladesh, there is a significant population of disabled children, with 1.7 percent of children living with one of twelve defined disability conditions. However, disabled children in Bangladesh often lack proper facilities and face various challenges in their daily lives.

Security: Children need access to their five basic needs - food, shelter, education, clothing, and medical care.

Stability: A stable environment fosters healthy development in children.

Consistency: Maintaining a consistent routine helps children build confidence.

Emotional support: Emotional support from parents enhances a child's trust, respect, self-esteem, and independence.

Love: Balancing love and discipline is crucial for a child's well-being.

Education: Access to education is essential for a child's growth.

Positive role models: Positive role models provide guidance and support for children.

Structure: A structured environment boosts a child's confidence and development.

In Bangladesh, the Disability Act of 2013 aims to protect the rights of people with disabilities, including children. Despite this, disabled children still face challenges, with estimates ranging from less than 1.4% to 17.5% of children in Bangladesh being disabled.

The Disability Act 2013 outlines various rights for disabled individuals, including:

- Full and thriving life.
- Equal recognition and justice.
- Right of inheritance.
- Freedom of expression, opinion, and information.
- Accessibility.
- Participation at social, economic, and national levels.
- Education facilities and participation.
- Job accessibility.
- Compensation for disability during employment.
- Protection and facilities for a safe environment.
- Proper healthcare facilities.
- Legal and educational accommodations.
- Access to social facilities.
- Dependent care and rehabilitation.
- Participation in culture, entertainment, tourism, leisure, and sports.
- Bengali sign language access.
- Right to confidentiality.
- National identification, enrollment, and voting rights.
- Any other rights granted by the government.

Despite government efforts, disabled individuals still face challenges, including social isolation and stigma. However, there is a growing focus on rehabilitation services and improving the situation for disabled individuals in Bangladesh.

USA

USA will be featuring in a T20 World Cup for the first time and also have 12 players in the 30-plus age group.

Corey Anderson, who played the final of the 2015 ODI World Cup for New Zealand, will represent the USA. They also have former Canada captain Nitish Roenick Kumar, who had represented Canada at the 2010 Under-19 World Cup Qualifiers.

CANADA

Like their neighbours, Canada will be making their first ever appearance in a T20 World Cup.

Their squad is packed with experience, with 12 players aged 30 or more. No other team comprise more players in that age category. Discounting the reserves, their 15-member squad contains five players aged 35 or more.

USA promise ‘fearless cricket’ in World Cup debut

AFP, Dallas

The USA will make their debut in the T20 World Cup against Canada on Saturday and vice-captain Aaron Jones said they were determined to play a ‘fearless’ brand of cricket.

Both teams are making their first appearances in the expanded 20-team competition but there is particular pressure on the USA, as tournament co-hosts, with the West Indies, to deliver a strong showing on home soil.

The explosive, short format of the game, is seen by cricket’s leaders as being the perfect version to capture the imagination of mainstream American sports fans and Jones, who was born in New York and later moved to Barbados before coming back to the USA, says the team doesn’t want to be afraid of going on the attack.

“Fearless cricket, positive cricket, smart cricket. I think that’s what we’re really and truly trying to do,” Jones told a press conference.

“We don’t want to regret anything. We want to leave everything out there in the park. And then, obviously, if we come out on top, it’s great. If we don’t come out on top, that’s how cricket goes sometimes. But we don’t want to regret anything,” he added.

The two North American teams have been drawn into a tough group however with India and Pakistan the clear favourites to be the two teams who qualify for the Super Eight stage.

However the results turn out, it is a landmark moment for the USA team to be in an elite competition after decades of being stuck in minor tournaments.

“We’ve been speaking over the last couple of years about playing in World Cups, about getting test status, about taking USA cricket to higher heights,” said Jones.

SAMMY at the helm to renew West Indies hopes

AGENCIES

West Indies begin their T20 World Cup mission under Darren Sammy with a Group C fixture against a relatively feeble Papua New Guinea at the Providence Stadium in Guyana on Sunday.

The Windies are now looking for redemption under the guidance of Sammy, a coach who knows what it takes to win the T20 World Cup after he captained them to the title in 2012 and 2016.

The co-hosts will look to bury the heartbreak of failing to qualify for last year’s 50-over World Cup. The glory years of West Indian cricket are long gone as the team that won the first two editions of the 50-over World Cup did not even make the cut for last year’s tournament in India - the first time ever that they had missed the event.

Sammy was appointed as West Indies’ limited-overs coach in May last year after the resignation of Phil Simmons following their first-round exit at the 2022 T20 World Cup.

While the 40-year-old will be desperate to get West Indies back on top of the world, he hopes his bowlers can step up and make the most of home advantage.

“Bowlers have been under the pump,” the former all-rounder told Reuters in a telephone interview from his T20 World Cup trophy tour in Saint Lucia.

“Look at the IPL (Indian Premier League) right now. Teams are scoring 200 and it’s not a safe total. It tells you that the batters are really dominating T20 cricket now.

“The difference will be some X-factor bowlers. Whether that’s pace, whether that’s mystery spin you’d need that in your armoury in order to defend totals or restrict opponents.”

West Indies have never lacked firepower in the batting department and will be able to rely on the experience of Nicholas Pooran, Andre Russell and Shimron Hetmyer, among others.

In the opposite corner, Papua New Guinea come into the contest with an impeccable record of 14 wins in their last 18 games. They are led by the enterprising Assad Vala and are set to appear for the second time at the major event.

PNG maintained an unbeaten record in the qualifiers, winning six consecutive matches. With plenty of all-rounders in the squad, PNG have a versatile unit that can test the bigger teams in the group.

PAPUA NEW GUINEA

On their path to ensuring a second appearance, PNG went unbeaten, topping the East Asia-Pacific Qualifier last year by winning six consecutive matches on home soil.

They have 10 survivors, including captain Assad Vala, from the 2021 campaign in which they lost all three matches.

WEST INDIES

West Indies have been the first team to win two T20 World Cups, and their current head coach Daren Sammy is Saint Lucia’s first international cricketer and remains the only player in history to have led the team in two victorious campaigns.

No team have defended the T20 World Cup crown yet but West Indies and Pakistan, as holders, advanced the farthest -- till the semifinals in 2014 and 2010, respectively.

SHORT CORNER

Ronaldo left in tears as Al-Hilal beat Al-Nassr to win Saudi Cup
Cristiano Ronaldo was in floods of tears after his Al Nassr side lost the King’s Cup final 5-4 on penalties to Al Hilal late on Friday, extending his Saudi Arabian trophy drought. Ronaldo, 39, then slowly walked off the pitch and sat in the dug-out with tears streaming down his face. Ronaldo failed to score in 120 minutes of the game which remained 1-1 after the end of extra-time but the forward converted his penalty in the shootout.

Shakib’s talent and two sides of Bangladesh cricket’s coin
Bangladesh’s ace all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan is a veteran of eight T20 World Cups, stepping onto his ninth world event in the shortest format. The mercurial Bangladesh star was only 22 when he played his first T20 World Cup. Now at 37, Shakib is the lone member of the current side that played in the first T20 World Cup in 2007.

Dinesh Karthik draws curtains on long playing career
Dinesh Karthik announced his retirement from all cricket on social media, bringing an end to a professional career that began in the early 2000s.“I officially announce my retirement and put my playing days behind me as I square up for the new challenges that lie ahead,” Karthik said in a statement.

BCB reappoints Nawaz as Under-19 head coach
Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) has reappointed Mohammed Naveed Nawaz as the head coach of the new under-19 team and he will also be working as a batting consultant for junior age-group teams, the board said in a press release on Saturday. He has been handed a two-year contract, which will be effective from June 1.

Australia skipper Marsh fit for World Cup opener
Australia skipper Mitchell Marsh has been declared fit for their opening match at the T20 World Cup, but he will not be bowling, coach Andrew McDonald said. The all-rounder headed home from the Indian Premier League in April with a hamstring injury and only made his return this week in two practice matches in Trinidad.

REUTERS, PARIS

Second seed Aryna Sabalenka temporarily put her friendship with Spaniard Paula Badosa on the back burner to secure a hard-fought 7-5, 6-1 third-round victory at the French Open on Saturday and keep alive her hopes of a maiden Roland Garros title.

The pair have enjoyed a strong bond since 2021 but there was no quarter given in a see-sawing first set as they swapped early breaks before Badosa attacked Sabalenka’s powerful serve in the sixth game, edging ahead with a return that hit the net cord.

“It’s tough to play your best friend. She’s an incredible player coming back after injury and I’m pretty sure she’s going to be back on top very soon,” said Sabalenka, who improved her head-to-head record with Badosa to 5-2.

“On court we’re opponents, I’m trying not to watch on the other side, just trying to focus on myself and just bring my best game, but anyway they’re tough matches against her.”

Sabalenka, who is bidding to become the first player since Serena Williams in 2015 to claim the Australian Open and Roland Garros titles in the same season, next faces American 14th seed Madison Keys or 22nd seed Emma Navarro.

Salahuddin’s masterclass to inspire coaches’ evolution

ABDULLAH AL MEHDI

Ariful Alam Khaled came to Dhaka from Chattogram’s Sandwip, an island located in the north-east of the Bay of Bengal, to attend a coaching workshop in Mirpur on Friday. Cricket has seeped into Bangladesh’s consciousness so greatly that the sport managed to wash ashore to Sandwip.

Ariful had set his sight on a coaching classas he aims to deliver something better to his students at Sandwip Cricket Academy. Thus he didn’t hesitate to travel by speedboat to Kumira, Sitakunda before boarding a bus to Dhaka.

As many as 12 students, each with a background different from Ariful, attended Prime Bank and Comilla Victorians’ coach Mohammad Salahuddin’s first workshop on Friday – titled Master the game with Mohammad Salahuddin -- organised by PhysioCare Wellness Centre.

It reflected the passion for cricket in the country, for in Sandwip, money and cricket coaching do not go hand in hand, Ariful informed. There are 150 students in the academy where he teaches but participation is sporadic.

“Yes, it’s a risk as a source of income because people there don’t know that in order to learn to play, you also need to pay. I’m doing it out of passion,” he said.

One of the participants involved former women’s national team skipper Jahanara Alam, who had a women’s Dhaka Premier League game on Saturday but took the time to do the evening workshop nonetheless.

How can we get better as A COACH
SANDWIP CRICKET ACADEMY

“It’s a workshop based on level A. As you know, Australian and England players have already completed level 2 and when they finish playing, they go for level 3. When you have undergone courses, it will help make an impact in your game,” Jahanara told The Daily Star regarding taking the class, adding that coaching was an option for her in the future.

A mentor to many such as Bangladesh ace all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan, Salahuddin wanted to pass on his knowledge and passion. His students seemed mesmerised during his three-hour session.

The dearth of local coaches who have been in national setups had been felt. The national team has not had many local coaches in the head coach role due to one reason or the other.

“Having coached for the last 25 years, I feel I have some responsibility so that coaches coming after me are better than me and can do something good for Bangladesh,” Salahuddin said.

“I think coaching education should be looked at seriously since we haven’t had a world-class coach yet. We have to improve the standards of coaches’ education system and if we don’t, we won’t go forward. We have been playing international cricket for a long time and we have a few players of international standard, but we are yet to get coaches of international standards. It’s not like this sector needs a lot of facilities,” he added.

He felt that local coaches have the ability and need guidance.

“We need more talented coaches than just talented players since you need to nurture talented players. Our local coaches are nursing talents at grassroots level and if they improve, these players would also do well,” he said.

The organisers intend to introduce online classes, further ushering hopes that young coaches like Ariful can attend workshops from afar and take Bangladesh forward.

Noab honours 6 newspapers serving for 25, 50 years

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Newspapers played a key role before the Liberation War and they continue to contribute to the building of the nation, Speaker Shirin Sharmin Chaudhury said yesterday.

She made the remark at an event where the Newspaper Owners Association of Bangladesh (Noab) honoured six newspapers that have been serving the nation for 25 and 50 years.

The Sangbad, Ittefaq, Azadi, and Purbanchal are in circulation for over 50 years while Manab Zamin and Prothom Alo for over 25 years.

Addressing the event as the chief guest, Shirin said Noab is different from other associations because making profit is not the primary goal of the newspapers.

Newspapers are considered the guardians of democracy, she said.

Mohammad Ali Arafat, state minister for information and broadcasting, said, "We are open to criticisms... We have failures and we

Govt missteps led to economic deterioration

Says Prof Muinul

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A series of missteps taken by the government are to blame for the country's deteriorating economy, Muinul Islam, former professor of economics at Chittagong University, said yesterday.

Some quarters, who are now oligarchs by dint of blessings from the ruling class, have played major roles to bring on this crisis, he observed while presenting a keynote paper at a discussion programme.

Bangladesh Workers Party organised the event titled "Economic Reality of Bangladesh: Crisis and Ways of Transition" at the National Press Club in Dhaka.

Some kind of authoritarian rule is going on, and various policies were taken at the behest of some oligarchs, Muinul alleged mentioning some names.

Mentioning the name of one, he

Former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed and his family withdrew at least Tk 70-80 crore within a month from their 33 bank accounts before they were frozen.

A source in the Anti-Corruption Commission, involved with the investigation of Benazir's illegally accumulated wealth, confirmed the findings to The Daily Star yesterday.

The ACC launched the inquiry into Benazir's alleged illegal wealth on April 18, when a three-member committee was also formed to probe the allegations.

"We've identified the [bank] accounts linked to Benazir, his wife Jissan Mirza and their two daughters Farheen Rishta Binte Benazir and Tahseen Raisa Binte Benazir. They include savings accounts, fixed deposit accounts and special notice deposits [SND].

"Some loan accounts were also found. Cash was withdrawn from the deposit accounts before the freezing took effect," the source said.

He further said some of Benazir's accounts were made "zero balance" but did not specify the number. "He might have anticipated that a directive to freeze his accounts may be issued," the source assumed, adding, "We're yet to learn the exact amount withdrawn from the bank accounts, but it could cross several hundred crores."

ACC Commissioner (Investigation) Md Jahurul Haque confirmed this information to The Daily Star, but he didn't specify the amount withdrawn.

"We've already frozen immovable and movable assets. But we discovered that money was withdrawn from their accounts beforehand."

He added that the investigation officers are working in accordance with legal procedures and following the High Court directives. "We've made significant progress in a

Violating multiple PMO directives, she took 11 trips in 12 months

BAHARAM KHAN and SAJJAD HOSSAIN

The frequency of the foreign trips taken by Agriculture Secretary Wahida Akhter has sparked discussions among fellow civil servants about her last visit and what could be her next destination.

In just the past year, Wahida went on 11 foreign trips, including six between May and December last year, violating a government directive on foreign visits, according to documents.

From May-December 2023, she went abroad six times, while from January-May 2024, she went five times.

On June 19, 2011, the Prime Minister's Office issued a circular titled "Permission to travel abroad and ancillary matters to be followed", which states that a secretary shall limit overseas travel for official work to a maximum of four times a year.

However, there has recently been a growing trend among civil servants of taking such trips abroad to attend conferences and workshops or to participate in knowledge-sharing programmes. Many of the trips yield little result, as most of the officials who go are not even directly linked to the topics for which the trips are organised.

Of Wahida's 11 trips, two were funded by the government and nine by the trip organisers.

All the trips combined, she spent at least 47 days abroad and was engaged in workshops, roundtables, discussions, bilateral meetings, and contract signings.

The secretary's participation in events other than contract signings and bilateral meetings was also a violation of another PMO directive that says junior or field-level officials shall get prioroty when it comes to events like workshops, roundtables and discussions.

Abdul Awal Majumdar, a former secretary and civil service researcher, said such frequent visits by a secretary was not only a violation of government directives but also sent a wrong message to the junior officials.

"Except for the foreign affairs and ERD [economic relations division] secretaries, I don't think anyone else has work that requires more than three to four foreign trips a year," he told The Daily Star.

Questioning the monitoring in this regard, he asked, "Why is the government giving permission

Flooding in Sylhet city worsens

MINTU DESHWARA

More areas of Sylhet city are getting flooded.

Parts of the city were flooded Thursday night and the situation was deteriorating. The Surma was flowing above the danger level there.

Sunil Singha of Machimpur neighbourhood in Sylhet city told this paper that he woke up to 2 inches of water in front of his house yesterday morning.

Taltala, Mendibagh, Machimpur, Terorotan, Taltala, Jatarpur, Upashahar and other adjacent areas were yesterday found flooded.

Sylhet city's fire service and civil defence station at Taltala was flooded, and the firemen had to relocate their essential equipment.

Sahadat Hosain, of Taltala area, said water of the Surma was flooding the low-lying areas via the drainage network and canals.

Executive Engineer Deepak Ranjan Dash of Sylhet Water Development Board said Surma was flowing 83cm above the danger level in Kanaighat and the Kushiara was 193cm above at Amalshid, causing the flooding in Sylhet.

According to the district administration, 6,09,733 people in 59 unions of Sadar, Companiganj, Goainghat,

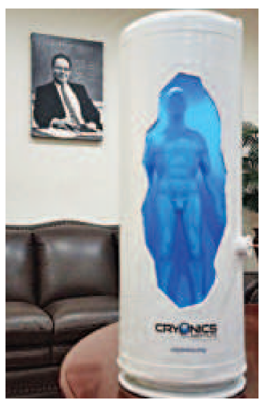
Man frozen after death hoping to return to life

THE INDEPENDENT



A Sydney man has become the first in Australia to have his body cryogenically frozen after his death in the hope that he could be brought back to life in future.

Australian firm Southern Cryonics announced last month that it had successfully frozen its first client at a reported cost of $170,000 in the hope of bringing him back to life.

The man, who died earlier last month in his 80s, is dubbed 'Patient One' by the company.

Immediately after his death, the body was transferred from the hospital's cooling room to a funeral home, packed in ice.

Then a team including clinical perfusionists and a doctor "worked tirelessly for 10 hours" following special protocols to stabilise the body.

"The patient was securely wrapped in a special sleeping bag that stays intact in liquid nitrogen. Patient 1 was then cooled to dry ice temperature and transported to our Holbrook facility," the company said.

Woman dies by suicide after loan sharks gangrape her

2 suspects held

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

Police yesterday arrested two people on charges of raping a woman, who later died by suicide, in Kurigram's Char Rajibpur upazila.

The arrestees are Md Jaynal Abedin, 48, of Jahir Mandolpara village, and Md Alam Hossain, 40, of Tangaliapara village, said Md Ashiqur Rahman, officer-in-charge of Rajibpur Police Station.

The victim's family told police that she and her husband, residents of Collegepara, had taken a Tk 20,000 loan from Jaynal a few months ago.

As they could not repay the loan, he and three others had allegedly been raping the woman for two months.

On May 22, the victim, who is the mother of a three-year-old child, told some of her relatives and neighbours and even recorded herself saying, "I was blackmailed, I was gang-raped."

Two days later, the couple ingested poison together, police said.

'SUPERB FESTIVAL' beckons in unique T20 World Cup

ABDULLAH AL MEHDI

The world will take notice as the 2024 T20 World Cup, set to be played in USA and the West Indies, gets to the red carpet in what would be the very first cricket World Cup in the USA.

The USA will be playing their first World Cup in any format, and even though the tournament will only be in the USA for a short time with the majority of the action taking place in the West Indies, the challenges will be numerous for the newest co-hosts. However, there will also be opportunities for associates to showcase what they possess. associate nations are coming up fast in this fast-paced format. Cricket analyst Nazmul Abedeen Fahim, a mentor to many of Bangladesh national team stars along with Bashar, feels that the tournament's associate sides have something unique to offer.

"What's great about this World Cup is that it's a 20-team tournament, and the fact it is logical has been proven by the associate nations since they are not lagging behind," Fahim said, highlighting that "Ireland, Netherlands and Canada are coming at us fast".

The competitiveness is something greatly triggered by the format performance is critical.

"It's a superb festival and people from all around the world would come to watch. It would have an influence on world peace and harmony," Fahim added.

Both Bashar and Fahim pointed out that USA's performance have a crucial part to play in cricket's exposure in the country.

"If their [USA's] performance is above average even if they do not make the second round, it will keep cricket alive. If they make second round, that kind of performance would be very required for getting funding, popularising the sport.

#T20WorldCup

USA's historic T20I series victory over Bangladesh just ahead of the tournament would help get the sparks flying.

As with any World Cup, there will be something unique to look forward to, and experts from Bangladesh believe that this event will have something to offer in terms of greater cultural diversity, team competitiveness, host teams' performance, and cricket's exposure to the USA market.

Modern T20 is a game of batters and runs. Speaking to former national selector Habibul Bashar, now head of operation of Bangladesh Cricket Board's (BCB) women's cricket, he focused on wickets having a great impact.

"This world cup is a bit unique since it's being hosted by a non-Test playing country and a Test-playing country. It's being played in conditions in USA that are unknown to everyone. How the tournament will go will depend on the conditions and the wickets," Bashar said.

The game of T20 has found exposure in different parts of the world and the itself. The Netherlands, for instance, delivered a blow in a warm-up fixture against Sri Lanka.

Bashar believed that T20 cricket has availed opportunities to players from associate nations to upskill and challenge more established counterparts, adding Bangladesh's challenge too would be great in the Group D they were placed in.

"Our group is very open. Netherlands beat South Africa and Bangladesh in the ODI World Cup last year and their players regularly perform well in county cricket. They are experienced than many in the World Cup. They are always playing, same in the case with Ireland players who are not bad in T20s as they play in Vitality Blast and been playing power cricket," Bashar highlighted.

With teams like South Africa and Sri Lanka in Group D, alongside Bangladesh, Nepal and Netherlands, it could make for the most exciting group phase in the entire World Cup.

Cricket's flavour finding a place in USA would help expose the game to a wider audience and the new co-hosts'

"There is a lot of depth in sports that have major foothold in USA. It will be a really difficult thing for cricket to make a space of their own. Cricket is a comparatively complicated game. There is no local interest as such. It will be difficult," Fahim adds.

For Bangladesh too, it would be a unique opportunity to find themselves in a format where the associates challenge for further identity in cricket's latest World Cup that is certainly to add new flavours to the palette.

SMASH THE RECORDS!

MILESTONES IN SIGHT

INDIA
BANGLADESH

- Bangladesh all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan and India captain Rohit Sharma are set to make their ninth appearance in the ICC T20 World Cup in the USA and the West Indies, becoming the only cricketers to take part in every edition of the tournament. After Shakib and Rohit, West Indies' Chris Gayle and Dwayne Bravo, and Bangladesh's Mushfiqur Rahim and Mahmudullah have taken part in the greatest number of T20 World Cups, as quartet appeared in the first seven editions of the tournament.
- India captain Rohit Sharma holds the record of playing the most number of matches in the ICC T20 World Cup, having appeared in 39 games in eight editions. Bangladesh's Shakib Al Hasan is hot on Rohit's heels, as the all-rounder has played 36 matches in eight T20 World Cup appearances. Australia's David Warner is third in the list amongst active cricketers, having played 34 games in the tournament.
- India superstar Virat Kohli tops the list for the most runs in T20 World Cups, accounting for 1141 runs in five editions. He was the highest run-getter in the 2014 edition with 319 runs in six matches – the highest by any batter in a single Men's T20 World Cup. Another active player on this elite list is Kohli's teammate and India captain, Rohit. The opening batter is not very far behind Kohli, sitting in fourth spot with 963 runs. A series of explosive innings from him could propel him to a higher rank on this list.
- Among the top five wicket-takers, which mainly consists of four spin-bowling experts, Bangladesh's left-arm spinner Shakib holds a substantial lead. He is the sole active player within this elite group and three more scalps will take his tally to a remarkable 50 T20 World Cup wickets.

RECORDS ON THE BRINK OF BREAKING

- Virat Kohli has scored 103 fours in the ICC Men's T20 World Cup and is just behind Sri Lanka's Mahela Jayawardena's 111 fours.
- With 47- and 50-ball centuries, Chis Gayle currently holds the top two spots for the fastest century in the Men's T20 World Cup. With the expanded teams in this edition and the high strike-rates witnessed already this year, expect this record to be broken in this edition.
- AB de Villiers currently sits at the top of the table for most catches as a fielder in the Men's T20 World Cup with 23 catches to his name. David Warner is next on the list with 21 catches.
- Pat Cummins led Australia to history last year when they won the ICC Test Championship and ICC Men's Cricket World Cup in 2023. In the Caribbean this year they have the opportunity to become the first team in history to hold the ICC Trophies in all three formats of the game at the same time if they manage to win the 2024 T20 World Cup.

TOURNAMENT'S KEY INFO

- The ninth edition of the ICC Men's T20 World Cup will feature a record number of teams, with 20 different sides represented in a tournament. The 20 teams are separated into four groups of five for the first stage of the event, with each team playing a minimum of four matches against their other group members during that initial group stage.

- The top two sides from each group then progress to the Super 8s stage of the event, with the bottom three teams from each group eliminated.
- The remaining 8 teams are then split into another two groups during the Super 8s phase, with a total of four teams progressing to semis. The semi-finals will be played out between the top two teams from each Super 8s group, with the winners then progressing to the one-off final in Barbados on June 29.
- 41 matches will be played in the Caribbean across six different nations, with semi-finals in Trinidad and Tobago and Guyana, before the title decider scheduled to be played in Barbados on June 29. Any match that finishes in a tie will see a Super Over be played and if the Super Over is a tie, subsequent Super Overs will be played until there is a winner. There is also additional time available to ensure the completion of the semi-final and final.

THE BIGGEST T20 EVENT UPON US

ICC MEN'S T20 WORLD CUP WEST INDIES & USA 2024

Cricket is steadily gaining popularity in USA. The ICC is eager to tap into this potential market. Golam Nowsher Prince, Suhrawardi Shuvo, and Aftab Ahmed, three former Bangladeshi cricketers who are now engaged in USA cricket in various roles, shared their experiences with Ramin Talukdar of The Daily Star.

Road to realising ICC's AMERICAN DREAM

STAR SPORTS DESK

It is no surprise that the West Indies will co-host the T20 World Cup 2024, given the Islanders' rich legacy in the sport. But what really adds spice to this ninth edition of the event is that the United States of America (USA) has emerged as the tournament's co-hosts. It is the first time the USA, an associate member in cricket, will organise a major cricket tournament.

When the USA was selected as one of the hosts, there had been sceptics who questioned the International Cricket Council's (ICC) decision, while most viewed it as a masterstroke from the game's governing body in its attempt to tap into the world's wealthiest sports market.

USA has prepared to stage 16 matches, including the highly anticipated India-Pakistan encounter on June 9 at the brand-new 34,000-seat Nassau County International Cricket Stadium in Long Island, New York.

ICC, for its part, is investing big in the sport's future in the USA, particularly the New York region, home to several hundred thousand people with links to cricket-playing countries, notably India and Pakistan.

It's no wonder that the India-Pakistan showdown is already sold out, with each ticket now topping USD 1,000 online.

But once the stadium is dismantled in July, local cricket will likely return to its struggling state. Despite having around 10,000 players, the sport has no dedicated stadium in New York, which will stage World Cup matches alongside Dallas and Florida.

Cricket boasts billions of fans worldwide, but few in the lucrative North American market, where fans are more likely to see New York Yankees slugger Aaron Judge pick up a bat than Rohit Sharma, Virat Kohli, or Jos Buttler.

"This is the start of a journey," International Cricket Council (ICC) CEO Geoff Allardice told Reuters. "The awareness that we're bringing in more elite cricket to the USA is something that's been a strategic priority for us."

There had been a lot of buzz surrounding the launch of Major League Cricket in the United States last year, and the fact that 2028 Los Angeles Olympics will feature the T20 format for the first time. And therefore, a well-organised 20-team jamboree might help cricket acquire traction in a sporting scene dominated by baseball, basketball, ice hockey, and American football.

The centuries-old English game has a devoted following all around the world, but the USA, which has long preferred American football, basketball, and baseball as its national pastime, has been a stubborn holdout. But the scenario may transform when the USA has its moment in the cricketing sun in co-hosting the World Cup.

ICC chief executive Geoff Allardice said: "The USA is a strategically important market and these venues give us an excellent opportunity to make a statement in the world's biggest sport market."

The tournament, which counts Jamaican track hero Usain Bolt as an ambassador, is a dream come true for the USA immigrants, who comprise much of the sport's USA fan base and are more used to watching the action on television than in their own backyard.

In 1994, the USA hosted the FIFA World Cup when football was much less popular than baseball, American football, and basketball. And yet, 3.5 million fans watched the matches from the stands.

USA Cricket had expressed interest in hosting the T20 World Cup during the ICC cycle beginning in 2023, citing the presence of a sizable South Asian diaspora, which could ensure crowded stadiums around the country.

Everyone is now waiting to see how the marquee event affects USA, an impact that could go on to stretch the landscape of the sport to an even wider panorama.

"Cricket is no longer an unknown game in America. It's gaining popularity, with many boys and girls playing, especially on weekends. There are major and minor leagues here, totalling around 400. Yes, in a country dominated by baseball and basketball, cricket is finding its footing. Immigrants, mostly Indians, are the main architect behind this success. Apart from India, there are players from Bangladesh, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, and Nepal."
Former Bangladesh pace bowler Golam Nowsher Prince

"America has started a school cricket tournament similar to our popular Nirman School Cricket Tournament. I believe this will greatly enhance the game's popularity. I expect full galleries during the matches."
Former Bangladesh left-arm spinner Sohrawordi Shuvo

"Just let the game be included in the Olympics, and you'll see a huge impact. When explaining cricket to authorities, their first question is if it's an Olympic sport. Inclusion would change the game's dynamics here."
Former Bangladesh batter Aftab Ahmed

From fringes to big dance

ASHFAQ-UL-ALAM

It took 28 years, but Frank Nsubaga has finally made it to the big stage.

Nsubaga, an all-rounder of Uganda's T20 World Cup team, has been around for a while. He first ventured into international cricket in 1997 for a team called East and Central Africa, a side that represented Malawi, Tanzania, Uganda, and Zambia.

His first tournament in international cricket was the 1997 ICC Trophy in Kuala Lumpur, the tournament that launched Bangladesh's ascendency to full membership.

Nsubaga, who was just 16 at the time, played two of the four group-stage matches, all of which ended in defeat for the African side.

That was his first heartbreak in international cricket, the first of many failures in pursuit of a chance to compete in the World Cup.

That team has long disappeared from the face of cricket, but Nsubaga is still here. He resumed his international career for Uganda in 2004 and has been a part of the side for two decades now.

Nsubaga was seemingly destined to join the rank of cricketers who toiled away at the backwaters of cricket for decades, gave their life to the game but never got their moment in the sun.

But then a miracle happened. Well, calling it a miracle may be a stretch, but it certainly was an upset.

Uganda stunned Zimbabwe in the Africa qualifiers, a result no one saw coming, and claimed a spot in the ICC T20 World Cup 2024.

Nsubaga and the spirited Uganda side will compete in their first major ICC event in the forthcoming T20 World Cup, a tournament where for the first time nine associate nations will be on display.

ICC's decision to make the T20 World Cup a 20-team affair opened up more slots for teams like Uganda and players like Nsubaga to experience the high of competing in a World Cup.

Papua New Guinea captain Assad Vala is another such example. A top-order batter, who has been around since 2005, had led his team to their maiden T20 World Cup in 2021.

But in that edition, they were slotted in the first round, an unofficial qualifying phase where associates competed against lower-ranked full members and only the top two teams of each group made it to the second round, where the big boys had automatically qualified.

The ICC has done away with that tournament structure, as in this edition the associates and full members will begin their campaigns from the first round, meaning Vala and his team will finally get to compete in the actual World Cup.

The stories of Nsubaga and Vala are of homegrown players who have worked for decades for an opportunity to represent their country in a World Cup.

But in the world of associate cricket, almost all teams have players from other countries and in many teams, they even outnumber the homegrown cricketers.

Alpesh Ramjani, Nsubaga's teammate, is one such player. Born in Mumbai, Ramjani played for age-level teams in Mumbai but had given up on his cricket dream, taken up a job, and was playing corporate cricket on the side.

But after losing his job during the Covid-19 pandemic, he moved to Uganda for employment and tried out for the national team, hoping to restart his cricketing journey in a different country.

In less than three years, from just another player in the Mumbai circuit, Ramjani has now become a star all-rounder at the associate level, even making it to ICC's T20 Team of the Year for 2023.

Then there are players like ex-New Zealand international Corey Anderson and former South Africa cricketer David Wiese, who now play for USA and Namibia respectively.

Both Anderson and Wiese are past their prime but with a move to the associate level they have extended their international careers and have an opportunity to make a difference in sides that are in pursuit of joining the league of the full members.

From a neutral fan's perspective, the inclusion of nine associates in a World Cup may seem like an overkill, as it increases the odds of seeing dead rubbers.

The associates can spring up surprises in the tournament, as they have done in past editions, but that doesn't change the fact that they are here more to make up the numbers than to compete for the trophy.

But before writing these teams off as unnecessary inclusions, spare a thought for the individuals making up the sides, some of whom have spent decades for this opportunity while others have moved to a different country for a second chance, and applaud from the sidelines as they fulfil their World Cup dreams.

THE BIGGEST T20 EVENT
UPON US

SHAKIB, FIZZ
key in Bangladesh's bid to turn fortunes

NABID YEASIN

Ardent followers of Bangladesh cricket might laugh out at the notion that there still lies signs of positivity in the Tigers' recent run of form, especially now that the Test-playing nation have hit the nadir in the shortest format with a deserved series loss to associates USA in the build-up to the ICC T20 World Cup.

However, when trying to map out the chances of how far a team could go in the upcoming T20 mega event, there actually is one thing -- at least statistically -- that propels Bangladesh ahead of most nations. Bangladesh boast a 60 percent win ratio in their last 10 T20Is, a figure that is only bettered by India (70 percent) and matched by Australia.

But in reality, Bangladesh are probably the one team that would not be able to take anything positive even from the positive signs -- the few that could now be unearthed -- into the showpiece T20 event.

While it goes without mentioning that Bangladesh's pedigree in all formats is far off from India and Australia, both of whom will be heading to the USA and the West Indies as title contenders, the Tigers now find themselves fearing yet another subpar outing in the T20 World Cup.

However, if Bangladesh are to recover from the slump, two of their leading performers in T20s -- star all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan and ace left-arm paceman Mustafizur Rahman -- would need to be at their very best.

Shakib and Mustafizur are the two faces that had the most impact in imprinting Bangladesh's presence in the ever-evolving global T20 landscape -- with them playing almost regularly in lucrative franchise-based T20 tournaments around the world, including the Indian Premier League, the highest revenue-generating project in this regard.

Mustafizur, especially, comes fresh off a successful stint in the recently concluded 17th edition of IPL. The left-arm pacer's 14 wickets in nine matches for Chennai Super Kings (CSK) this season is only bettered by his best-ever showing in the tournament -- 17 wickets in 16 matches -- that came in his maiden IPL appearance in 2016 and had helped Sunrisers Hyderabad win their only title.

With Mustafizur recalled for national duty -- a reality that was deemed as 'disappointing' by CSK coach Stephen Fleming -- compounded by a few injuries and unavailability of other key players, the joint record five-time IPL winners failed to make it to the playoffs for only the third time in the tournament's history despite winning half of their matches this season.

While Mustafizur was a party to Bangladesh's horrendous failure in defending 54 runs off the final four overs that led to the Tigers losing their first-ever T20I played against a feeble USA last month, he did outperform himself with a record six-wicket haul in the third and final T20I.

Although it was in a dead rubber and against a USA side missing four key players, Mustafizur setting a new benchmark for bowling excellence in Bangladesh cricket -- his six for 10 in four overs now being the best-ever bowling figure and the only instance of a six-wicket haul by a Bangladeshi -- will not only act as a morale boost for the player but should also give Bangladesh hopes of seeing the ace pacer carrying on his form into the T20 World Cup.

While Mustafizur's performance with the ball in hand, especially in the death overs, would go a long way in Bangladesh's ability to restrict teams to a total that they find comfortable chasing, it is the experience and the big-name stature of Shakib that would determine at what stage Bangladesh could eventually end up in the T20 mega event.

Shakib, who has been at the summit of all-rounder rankings in at least any of the three formats for the most part of the past decade, had recently been knocked off that pedestal when he was pipped by Sri Lanka's leg-spinning all-rounder Wanindu Hasaranga.

The poster boy of Bangladesh, Shakib, has also been far from his usual self with the bat in hand -- his last fifty in T20Is coming back in October 2022, against Pakistan in a tri-nation series including hosts New Zealand.

How Shakib managed to chop one onto his stumps, failing to help Bangladesh to coast to a win when 20 was needed off just 18 deliveries with four wickets in hand in the second T20I against the USA last month raised a lot of questions as to how much he is now invested in the Tigers' stake at any stage of a game.

His quirky replies following that game, including his blatant admission of 'not knowing what's going wrong with the team', only added to those burning queries regarding the current elected lawmaker of Bangladesh.

But come tournament time, when Shakib is involved in the team, a lot of hopes for the side unsurprisingly hinge on the all-rounder. This time will be no different and Shakib will need to be much more involved with the side that has gone into the T20 World Cup under a young captain in Najmul Hossain Shanto and with a number of youngsters like Towhid Hridoy, Tanzid Tamim, Rishad Hossain, Jaker Ali and Shoriful Islam all of whom would largely benefit from the all-rounder's experience in such a grand stage.

The omens might not be all good for Bangladesh, but if there is some hope, it is that both Shakib and Mustafizur would be able to make their presence felt come June 8, when the Tigers open their World Cup campaign against Sri Lanka in Dallas.

MEET THE T20 WORLD CUP 2024 CAPTAINS

INDIA
ROHIT SHARMA
Skipper Rohit Sharma believes India's powerful middle order can end their global title drought at this T20 World Cup. India have not secured a global title since the 2013 Champions Trophy.

PAKISTAN
BABAR AZAM
Pakistan, dangerous in major tournaments, may struggle to win their first T20 World Cup since 2009 after recent changes. But with their pedigree in the shortest format, don't yet just rule them out.

ENGLAND
JOS BUTTLER
No team have ever defended the T20 World Cup title, and England do not have to go far back in the record books to understand the magnitude of the task facing them in the West Indies and USA.

AUSTRALIA
MITCHELL MARSH
Australia enter the tournament with an aging squad but retain the confidence that won them last year's Test and ODI championships. If they win, they would be the first to hold all three major trophies.

NEW ZEALAND
KANE WILLIAMSON
Kiwis excel at handling challenges one at a time, a strategy that has proven effective in major tournaments. The Black Caps have reached the semifinals in four of the eight T20 World Cups and lost the 2021 final.

ROVMAN POWELL
Co-hosts West Indies aim for a third title and to redeem themselves after missing last year's 50-over World Cup. Having won it in 2012 and 2016, they seek to be the first to win three T20 World Cup titles.

SOUTH AFRICA
AIDEN MARKRAM
South Africa's power hitters could make them contenders for this T20 World Cup, but their bowling remains a concern. Their World Cup struggles in both formats are well-known, tempering expectations.

SRI LANKA
WANINDU HASARANGA
Sri Lanka won the 2014 edition after being runners-up in 2009 but since then the islanders have been underachievers. But as they so often do in major tournaments, they can surprise anyone.

AFGHANISTAN
RASHID KHAN
Afghanistan's presence with nine players in this season's IPL underscores their reputation in T20 cricket. Led by Rashid Khan, their team is packed with versatile players and game-changers.

BANGLADESH
NAJMUL HOSSAIN SHANTO
Bangladesh aim to rewrite their T20 World Cup history. Bangladesh had lacked notable achievements in T20 World Cups, with their most memorable victory against Windies in 2007.

Essentials now luxuries as the poor reel from price shock: CPD

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

People in Bangladesh have been forced to spend more on food compared to consumers in other countries, and the prices of essentials have surged to such an extent that they have become luxury items for many, the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD) said yesterday.

It lists 16 countries where GDP (gross domestic product) per capita is higher than that of Bangladesh, yet consumers in those nations spend less on food compared to the latter.

The countries are Algeria, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Laos, Morocco, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, Uzbekistan, and Vietnam.

The average annual expenditure on food per person was $924 in Bangladesh in 2022 whereas it was $882 in Brazil and $874 in Colombia. Their GDP per capita is more than twice that of Bangladesh, according to an analysis of the CPD.

"We are a lower-middle-income country, yet we are spending more on food. It shouldn't be. What kind of economy do we live in?" asked CPD Research Director Khondaker Golam Moazzem at a media briefing on the state of the economy at the office of the think-tank in the capital.

Bangladesh has been experiencing higher inflation for nearly two years, exceeding inflation rates in many developed and developing economies. The burden falls heavily on poor and low-income households because of the erosion of purchasing power.

In 2022-23, the average inflation rate was 9.02 percent, far higher than the average of 6 percent in recent years. The Consumer Price Index grew by an average of 9.73 percent in the first 10 months of the current financial year.

In Bangladesh, food prices have

Despite Tk 1.22 lakh crore allocation in 16 years, BR struggles to expand services

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

A whopping Tk 1.22 lakh crore was poured into Bangladesh Railway for its development over the last 16 years, but the agency still faces a crippling crisis brought by ageing locomotives, carriages, and a shortage of staff due to what experts say are poorly planned and delayed projects.

More than half the locomotives, carriages and freight wagons are over 20 years old, which affects railway's reliability.

Railway's fleet of 318 locomotives is far smaller than needed and 43 percent percent of it is over 40 years old. The shortage is so severe that the state-run transport agency has not been able to launch two new trains named and approved by Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina in December last year.

The crisis is only going to deepen because no new locomotive is likely to arrive in at least the next three years, officials said.

The Dhaka-Jashore rail line via the Padma Bridge is set to open in July, but BR is not likely to be able to fully utilise the expensive infrastructure due to lack of staff and carriages.

In 2023, the BR opened four new routes with a combined length of over 250km, but there is not enough trains to operate on the tracks.

Requesting anonymity, several BR officials said the government's main focus in recent years has been expansion of lines while

'I've reached worst point of my cursed life'

Says Prof Yunus after court appearance

COURT CORRESPONDENT

Nobel Laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus yesterday said he was at the worst point of his cursed life because of the will of the gods and goddesses.

"It's been a long time since I was thrown out of Grameen Bank. A probe body has been formed to investigate me. There is no respite, one thing is coming after another," he told reporters after appearing in court for a hearing in a case filed over misappropriation of Tk 25.22 crore of Grameen Telecom Workers' profit participation fund.

MIGRANT WORKER EXPLOITATION

The agencies picked by KL to blame

Say industry insiders; Dhaka tells UN experts it wanted more competition

PORIMOL PALMA

Dhaka wanted to allow all 1,520 licenced recruiting agencies to send manpower to Malaysia, but Kuala Lumpur selected only 101 agents, which industry insiders say are involved in manipulation and exploitation of migrants.

In response to a letter by four UN experts on March 28, Bangladesh's Permanent Mission to the UN in Geneva said Bangladesh and Malaysia signed a memorandum of understanding (MoU) on December 19, 2021, for labour recruitment.

In pursuance of the MoU, the Malaysian human resources ministry wrote to the Bangladesh's expatriates' welfare ministry on January 14, 2022, regarding selection of 25 Bangladeshi recruiting agencies.

In response, the expatriates' welfare ministry on January 18, 2022, wrote to the Malaysian ministry requesting it to keep the opportunity open for all the licenced Bangladeshi recruiting agencies.

"The hon'ble minister flagged that this open opportunity would ensure transparency and fairness compatible with the relevant International Labour Organization (ILO) standards as well as the Competition Commission Act, 2012, of Bangladesh," said the letter from Bangladesh permanent mission.

In a joint working group meeting on March 20, 2023, Bangladesh stressed the same request. In reply, Malaysia increased the number of recruiting agencies from 25 to 101 as per their choice and mandate, including state-owned Bangladesh Overseas Employment and Services Ltd, it added.

An ode to Jaishtha

RBR and MANNAN MASHHUR ZARIF

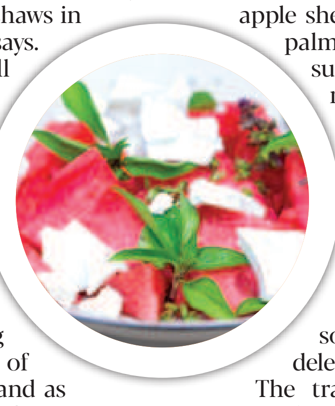
On any given Jaishtha or high summer day, fruit vendors ply the streets of the city selling delicious seasonal fruits. Jaishtha -- the second month of the Bangla calendar, is also called "mishtimash" or "madhumash" because of the wide array of fruits available during this time. It is as if the season compensates for the discomfort of the hot and humid climate with the sweetness of deshi fruits.

The season's first harvest of mangoes, jaam, jamruls, and litchis have already made their "red carpet" appearances in bazaars, roadside vans, and super shops. The creamy bites of ripe jackfruit, citrusy kagoji lebu or limes, various kinds of melons boasting a triad of flavour like our patenga watermelons and muskmelons or banggi, and other seasonal deshi fruits are all making their short seasonal rounds.

Fruit vendors are seen at the turn of every lane, their dexterous hands cutting juicy pineapples. The small pieces, mixed with some rock salt and kasundi, makean unmatched treat!

"This is a seasonal business for me," says Abdul Mutalib, a vendor seen selling a van full of pineapples in Kakrail. A rickshaw puller by profession, Mutalib has amassed a small amount which he chose to invest in the trade.

"I hope to earn significantly more by selling fruits this summer. Besides, I get to avoid pulling rickshaws in the summer heat," he says. When asked what he will do when the season is over, he said "I really do not know!" with a smile. "Pull rickshaws maybe."



Mangoes may be the most craved fruit of the season but taal (toddy palms or ice apples) are not lagging either. The jelly-like flesh of raw taal is scooped out and as one bites onto them, the fruit spritzes out a sugary sap that takes down a few degrees off your body temperature, it seems. Rich in antioxidants, this pulp makes its way to our city kitchens and is used to prepare various desserts.

When fully ripe, raw taal transforms into a fruit with a pulp that has a slight hint of bitterness to its otherwise sugary, dense edible mash. Dollops of crude, palm-sugar jaggery rolled in flour tortillas is the best breakfast of summer mornings! Palm rice flour fritters are as easy to make as banana fritters and can be munched hot from the wok. Coolers like a glass of ice apple sherbet and a spoonful of palm rice pudding are what summer vacations were made of at grandparents' home.

Supriya Das, a resident of Shantinagar, looks forward to the season for a special reason. "We have an age-old ritual of treating our sons-in-law with the most delectable fruits," says Das. The traditional Hindu ritual, Jamai Sasthi, ends with an elaborate Bengali feast which will be celebrated on June 8.

"There was a time when I used to buy fruits from the local bazaars and street vendors. Now, everything has become easier due to Facebook and I order directly from the traders of Rajshahi. The fruits get delivered to my daughter's in-laws in cane baskets. It's a hassle-free arrangement for me," Das adds.

The mango dealers of Chapainawabganj have adjusted to the needs of the time, and rather than relying on vendors in Dhaka, have set up seasonal, online businesses selling mangoes directly. They make promises of delivering only the best from the harvest.

And, this is just the beginning. Soon makeshift stalls on footpaths will start dealing in mangoes -- "chemical free and fresh from the gardens". Whether they sell the real stuff or is this just another gimmick, one cannot say with certainty.

Mangoes, litchis, jaams -- we all have our personal favourites. There was a time when people used to visit their ancestral homes to get a taste of the delectable fruits of the seasons, straight from the trees. People used to bring fruits like mangoes in sacks as they returned to the city.

Those days seem to be gone now. Our lives are now seemingly easier, and experiencing the proverbial "Mamar Bari" is now only a poem found in school textbooks!

CHEQUE FRAUD

Evaly's Rassel, Nasrin get one year in jail

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

A Chattogram court yesterday sentenced former CEO of the controversial e-commerce platform Evaly, Mohammad Rassel, and his wife and Evaly co-founder Shamima Nasrin, to one year in jail in a cheque fraud case.

Chattogram Seventh Joint Metropolitan Sessions Court Judge Mohiuddin handed down the verdict in the absence of the accused, said plaintiff lawyer advocate Shahriar Yasir Arafat.

He said the court also fined the couple Tk 1.80 lakh and issued arrest warrants against them as they are absconding.

According to the case statement, Jasim Uddin, a resident of the Panchlaish area of the city, paid Evaly Tk 1.10 lakh in April 2021 for the purchase of a motorcycle.

However, Evaly did not deliver the bike. Later, Evaly gave him a cheque, which was rejected by the bank.

Following that, the victim filed a case against Rassel and his wife with the Chittagong court on October 2, 2021.

On September 16, 2021, Rassel and Shamima were arrested from their Mohammadpur residence in the capital in a case filed over fraud and embezzlement.

Shamima was released on bail in April 2022, and Rassel was released on bail on December 19, 2022.

NHRC demands probe, punishment for rape of woman, her suicide

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The National Human Rights Commission (NHRC) has ordered an investigation into the gang rape and subsequent suicide of a woman in Kurigram following her family's inability to repay a loan.

This directive was given in a press release issued by the NHRC yesterday.

According to a complaint filed by the victim's uncle at Rajibpur Police Station in Kurigram on May 31, the woman and her husband, residents of Collegepara, had taken a Tk 20,000 loan from one Jaynal Abedin a few months ago. As they could not repay the loan, Jaynal and three others raped the woman for two months.

On May 22, the victim, who is the mother of a three-year-old child, told some of her relatives and neighbours and even recorded herself saying, "I was blackmailed, I was gang-raped."

Two days later, the couple ingested poison together, police said.

On information, locals came to their aid and took them to the hospital. On May 29, the woman died but her husband survived.

procurement and maintenance of trains were neglected.

Since most of the BR's workshops and loco sheds are very old and lack staff, the regular maintenance and repair jobs take longer than usual, and the standard of work is subpar.

Amid Covid-19 pandemic and a few years prior to that, the BR suspended operations of at least 99 local, commuter and mail trains due to shortage of locomotives, carriages and staff. Very few of the services resumed after the pandemic.

Currently BR is implementing 32 projects of which deadline for 22 have been extended at least once. Some of the other 10 projects are also running behind schedule, BR documents show.

Deadlines for some projects were extended by over 10 years.

MONEY PIT

Between 2008-09 and 2023-24 fiscal years, the BR received Tk 1,22,542 crore under the Annual Development Plan, according to documents.

As of March this year, the BR spent Tk 87,232 crore, meaning the agency could not utilise 27.81 percent of the allocated money.

The economic life of a locomotive is 20 years, officials said. But 167 (53 percent) of its engines are over 20 years old.

Out of 2,017 carriages, 982 are over 20 years old and 934 are over 35 years old.

BR's workforce size is roughly half of what is needed to ensure proper service. The agency employs 24,403 people against 47,637 authorised posts, according to BR data from March.

Of the 23,234 vacant posts, 20,666 are for third- and fourth-grade employees.

After years, BR began hiring in third- and fourth-grade positions in 2022, and has recruited 5,342 people so far.

CHRONIC SUFFERING

The prime minister in December 2023 approved new intercity trains between Dhaka and Noakhali, Lalmonirhat and Sylhet.

The BR launched the Dhaka-Lalmonirhat Burimari Express in March, but the Dhaka-Sylhet Tanguar Express and Dhaka-Noakhali Subarnachar Express services have not been started.

The scarcity of locomotives and carriages was there when the plans were made. But the aim was to launch the new trains ahead of the general election because of the demand from local representatives.

The two new train services on the Dhaka-Cox's Bazar route following the inauguration of Chattogram-Cox's Bazar line intensified the scarcity. As a result, the BR could not launch new trains.

Besides, the BR had a plan to introduce three more intercity trains on Dhaka-Cox's Bazar route, but it could not do that due to the shortage of metre-gauge locomotives.

Rather, the railways suspended operations of commuter trains on Chattogram-Cox's Bazar route, which was launched just before the Eid in April, on Thursday due to locomotive and manpower crises.

The BR is expected to open Dhaka to Jashore rail line via Padma Bridge next month.

According to a feasibility study on the project, at least 24 pairs of trains can be operated on the line daily once the entire 169km line is ready. But only five pairs of trains are operating on the partially opened line between Dhaka and Bhanga.

The BR wants to introduce new trains or increase frequency of the trains in the south-western region, and operate more freight trains, particularly from India, to effectively utilise the line.

But BR will face a manpower and carriage crisis, officials said.

LOCOMOTIVE CRISIS PERSISTENT

In the 1969-70 fiscal year, the BR had 486 locomotives. The number came down to 268 in 2019 when 72 percent of the engines were over 20 years old.

The crisis was so serious that BR in April 2019 sought to "hire" or "get as courtesy" 20 locomotives from India.

Between 2019 and 2023, BR added 40 broad-gauge and 30 metre-gauge locomotives under three projects and 30 "little used" Indian broad-gauge ones to its fleet.

But the addition could not give enough respite as BR had to replace many ageing locomotives.

Besides, the authorities have launched around 11 pairs of new intercity trains in the last five years, intensifying the scarcity.

Last year, the BR had to cancel two of its projects -- one to buy 70 metre-gauge locomotives and another for overhauling 21 metre-gauge locomotives.

Currently, it has only one project under which 30 metre-gauge locomotives will be procured. The deadline of the project is June 2028, meaning BR may not get those within the next three-four years, an official said.

In the last five years, it collected 350 metre-gauge and 150 broad-gauge carriages under three projects and overhauled 90 carriages, BR document shows.

A project for procuring 200 metre-gauge carriages was cancelled due finance related problems.

Despite the addition of around 600 carriages, the crisis is holding back BR from operating more trains, they said.

Currently, it has one project for procuring 200 broad-gauge carriages. The BR on May 19 signed a contract to procure the carriages, and as per the contract, it would get the carriages in between 20 to 36 months.

AUTHORITIES' SAY

Addressing a programme at the Rail Bhaban on May 28, Railways Minister Zillul Hakim said railway service could not be expanded due to shortage of manpower and carriages.

When this correspondent asked why they cannot do this despite receiving a huge allocation, he said, "We are working...We are working fast and cordially."

The government is going to import 460 carriages soon and existing carriages are being repaired, he added.

The minister said they were building a workshop in Rajbari with a capacity to repair and maintain 2,000 carriages a year.

Recruitment is taking a long time due to many obstacles, and it takes two to three years to complete the procedure, he added.

"We are not sitting idle," he said.

Siam texted

Police's NCB wing, Siam was arrested in Nepal.

According to police sources, Kathmandu police want to hand Siam over to Bangladesh police.

A three-member team led by Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (DB) of the DMP, went to Nepal on Saturday after learning that Siam was in custody.

However, there is no extradition treaty between Bangladesh and Nepal.

Sources said that since Siam used a Bangladeshi passport to enter Nepal, efforts were being made to have him deported.

Meanwhile, a special team of West Bengal CID investigating the murder case filed in Kolkata went to Nepal following Siam's arrest. India has an extradition treaty with Nepal, and the West Bengal police want to take Siam into its custody, said sources.

Investigators said Siam made his journey to Nepal on the instructions of Aktaruzzaman, the absconding alleged mastermind of the murder.

Aktaruzzaman, who is believed to be in the US, also went to Nepal before returning to the US.

Meanwhile, ADC Shahidur Rahman, a member of the Bangladesh police team in Nepal, was transferred yesterday with 11 other ADCs.

He was the supervising officer of the investigation into MP Azim's abduction case.

The Police Headquarters issued a circular in this regard without mentioning any reason for the transfer.

remained volatile. In April 2023, food inflation was 9 percent and soared to 13 percent in August last year before slipping to 9 percent in February this year. It went up to 10 percent in April.

This means many households in the low-middle-income nation have been struggling to make ends meet since food costs consist of a much higher share in their total consumption basket.

"Daily essentials have now become luxury goods," said Moazzem.

The CPD analysed the average daily prices of 34 essential food items in Dhaka from January 1, 2019, to May 19, 2024, and found that the price increase ranged between 10 percent and 310 percent.

The price of the fine variety rice has gone up by 17 percent and the medium-sized grain by 15 percent during the five-year period. The price of coarse rice, mostly consumed by the poor, has climbed 30 percent.

"The price of coarse rice has increased more than the varieties consumed by the rich. As a result, businesses are making more profit from the larger segment of consumers," Moazzem said.

Citing its previous reports, the CPD said the price of three common types of rice sold in the markets of Dhaka has been consistently higher than that of Thai and Vietnamese rice.

Similarly, the price of lentils has gone up by as much as 95 percent since January 2019. Loose flour was up 40 percent and packaged flour witnessed a price increase of 54 percent.

The price of unprocessed flour and processed flour has jumped 60 percent and 45 percent, respectively.

According to the CPD, both unprocessed and processed flour started rising in Dhaka before the outbreak of the Russia-Ukraine war.

"This indicates that there may be other domestic causes behind the increase, which warrants a comprehensive investigation by the Bangladesh Competition Commission."

Unrefined soybean oil price shot up by 84 percent to Tk 150 per litre while bottled soybean oil increased by 56 percent to Tk 163.

The CPD said prices in Dhaka's markets are higher than that in the world market. In April, the price of soybean oil in the international market was Tk 105 per litre.

"We don't understand why there is such a big difference in prices, and the inflated prices don't make sense even after considering import duties," said Moazzem.

"There needs to be a probe to see if there is any involvement of big importers or groups which control many segments of the market."

The price of palm oil more than doubled between 2019 and May this year.

The CPD also cited the yawning gap in sugar prices.

In Dhaka, sugar is selling at Tk 130 per kg, an increase of 152 percent from Tk 52 five years ago.

In April, the price of sugar in European countries was Tk 39 per kg while it cost Tk 96 in the US and averaged Tk 50 in the global market.

"We can't comprehend how the price of sugar can rise by 152 percent in five years," said Moazzem.

The price of local and imported onions rose by 164 percent and 167 percent, respectively. Likewise, the price of local garlic shot up by 310 percent, imported garlic by 221 percent, and ginger by 205 percent, according to the analysis.

'I've reached worst point of my cursed life'

Prof Yunus said, "I have nothing to do here. The gods and goddesses determine who should be cursed ... We have to appease them through a lot of hard work."

He did not say whom he meant by gods and goddesses.

Earlier, Judge Syed Arafat Hossain of the Special Judge's Court-4 of Dhaka set June 12 for issuing an order on charge framing against Prof Yunus and 13 others, said Belal Hossain, bench assistant of the court.

Before the charge-framing hearing yesterday, Prof Yunus, following some of his colleagues, entered the dock, an iron cage-like enclosure for the accused inside the courtroom.

He stayed there for a while and came out and sat on a bench. He was in the courtroom for the entire hearing, which lasted over three hours.

"For the first time, I had to stand in an iron-cage court dock ... I'll never forget this ... It is a part of this cursed life," said Prof Yunus.

"Two Nobel prizes -- one in my name and another in the name of Grameen Bank -- were given. Both have equal dignity. It was not awarded jointly, rather both are independent [awards]. There is no precedence in world history of one Nobel laureate filing a case against another ... It's written in our destiny, it's a part of the curse we have been carrying," he said.

" ... There might be complaints, but the complaint they filed using harsh language to attack me is baseless ... I have been accused of misappropriating the money which I have paid," he said.

"All the allegations against me and my colleagues have left a deep scar in my heart. It hurts because my family has been attacked. Our lawyer will say why we have to bear this curse," Prof Yunus said.

"As a citizen of the country, I want to ask why false cases are filed against anyone. My colleagues have dedicated their lives for the betterment of the humanity, why should they be harassed? Why should they enter the iron cage [court dock]?" he added.

Yesterday, the 14 accused, including Prof Yunus, also filed petitions with the court seeking discharge.

During yesterday's hearing, ACC Public Prosecutor Mosharraf Hossain Kazol argued for framing charges against the accused, while defence lawyers, including Abdullah-Al-Mamun and Mohammad Shaheenoor Islam, asked the court to discharge the accused.

On April 2, the Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court of Dhaka transferred the case to the Special Judge's Court-4 of Dhaka after accepting the charges pressed against the 14.

On May 2, the special judge's court granted them bail.

On February 1, Investigation Officer Gulshan Anwar Prodhan, a deputy director at the ACC, placed the charge sheet before the Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court.

The 13 other accused include Grameen Telecom Managing Director Nazmul Islam, directors Ashraful Hassan, Naznin Sultana, Parvin Mahmud, M Shahjahan, and Nurjahan Begum.

On May 30 last year, Gulshan filed the case with the ACC's integrated district office in Dhaka.

BUDGET 2024-25

Focus on economic stability: CPD

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The primary focus of the government in the fiscal year 2024-25 budget should be on austerity measures and stabilising key macroeconomic indicators, particularly inflation and the exchange rate, according to Centre for Policy Dialogue.

Bangladesh Bank introduced policy measures like market-based interest rates to manage inflation and bolster reserves.

"The success of these policies will depend on consistent contractionary fiscal policies," said Khondaker Golam Moazzem, research director of the CPD.

CPD recommended focusing on fiscal space, prioritising expenditure, ensuring good governance, and protecting vulnerable groups in public finance management for the next fiscal year.

At a CPD briefing titled "State of the Bangladesh Economy in FY2023-24," Moazzem said if the government doesn't reduce fiscal spending, monetary policies won't effectively control inflation or bolster forex reserves.

However, increased spending on social safety nets is necessary due to inflation's impact on the poor and fixed-income groups.

The lack of alignment between fiscal and monetary policies hampers their effectiveness in Bangladesh, he noted.

On the other hand, contractionary monetary policy causes sufferings for the private sector as it makes their business, and lifestyle costly and tougher, the economist said.

EXPANSION OF JHENAIDAH-JASHORE HIGHWAY

Progress slow, still Tk 2,912cr more sought

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

Although the expansion work of Jhenaidah-Jashore Highway is yet to gain momentum, the project authority has sought a 70 percent hike in project costs.

The project deadline, which originally was December 2023, has already been extended to June 2026. Now, the project authority has again sought a six-month extension.

If approved, the project cost will rise to Tk 7,100.31 crore from Tk 4,182.05 crore, while the deadline will be December 2026, shows official documents.

The project authority said the rise in land prices and adding an interchange in Jashore's Chachra area are the main reasons behind cost rise.

The Project Evaluation Committee of the Planning Commission is scheduled to hold a meeting over the revised proposal on June 6, sources said.

Till March, the project saw physical progress of 12.25 percent.

In November 2020, the government approved the project to turn the 48.5km Jhenaidah-Jashore highway into a four-lane highway with service lanes on both sides. World Bank will provide the lion's share of the cost as loan.

The highway is part of a 260km road corridor -- Hatikamrul-Banpara-Kushtia-Jhenaidah-Jashore-Navaran-Satkhira-Bhomra -- that would be developed into a four-lane one aiming to improve cross-border connectivity.

When the Jhenaidah-Jashore expansion project was placed before Ecnec in November 2020, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina expressed serious discontent after the road authority proposed the project's tenure to be five years.

Following her directive, the project period was cut to three years and December 2023 was set as the deadline.

In a rare move, the authorities appointed a project director within five days of the project's approval. However, the authority could not start project work within 2023.

Project Director Zabid Hasan said, "We could not complete the project due to ground reality."

The project was taken based on a feasibility study done in 2015, but there was no detailed design, he said, adding, "So, we had to hire consultants, draw detailed designs, and hire contractors to start the work."

He said they have already hired contractors for three packages and the contractors have already mobilised their workforces.

He hoped to get all the land for the project within this year.

WHY THE COST HIKE?

Planning Commission document shows to complete the project, the project authority has asked for an additional Tk 2,912.1 crore, of which Tk 1,831.81 crore is for land acquisition, even though no additional land would be procured.

Zabid Hasan mentioned that the land acquisition cost outlined in the approved Development Project Proposal (DPP) in November 2020 was calculated using the market prices from 2015.

Ensure gender balance in the newsroom

Speakers tell event

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Challenges for women journalists are increasing even with the proliferation of mass media, said Speaker Dr Shirin Sharmin Chaudhury at an event yesterday.

Ensuring cyber security for female journalists is one of the major challenges, and technical skills are required for that, she said.

"Organisations working for the rights of women journalists should play a pivotal role in addressing all the challenges women face," she added, urging the Bangladesh Women Journalist Centre to focus on cyber security training for female journalists.

The Speaker made these remarks as the chief guest at the 4th National Conference of the Bangladesh Women Journalist Centre at the International Mother Language Institute in the capital.

With the theme "Pen as a Tool to Achieve Equality Between Women and Men," the conference was organised by BWJC.

Presiding over the event, BWJC President Nasimun Ara Haque Minu said despite the visibility of women journalists, their numbers are not increasing as they should.

She emphasised that women journalists still encounter challenges such as job loss and professional discrimination.

She also presented a 14-point demand that included ensuring that at least 30 percent of journalists in all media houses are women, promotion opportunities

Will work with countries that support our dev: PM

BSS, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said her government will work with countries that support Bangladesh's development and prosperity, regardless of their involvement in conflicts.

"I first consider the development of my country. I will move ahead with those who will help us in our country's development," she said.

The prime minister was distributing awards among the first, second and third winners in several categories in the national level competition of making a one-minute video documentary titled "Amar Chokhe Bangabandhu" (Bangabandhu in my eyes) at Gono Bhaban.

Hasina also reiterated that Bangladesh does not want war, but peace.

75pc slum dwellers use firewood for cooking

Shows study; it affects health and environment

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Around 75 percent of households in Dhaka slums rely on firewood for cooking, according to a recent study by Bangladesh Resource Center for Indigenous Knowledge, a non-profit organisation.

Slum residents also use plastic, polythene, wood dust, garment waste, kerosene, and tree leaves as cooking fuel, which impacts their health and pollutes the environment, the study said.

Among 469 households in 18 Dhaka slums, 42 percent have access to pipeline gas. Of the pipeline gas users, only 53 percent have formal connections, it also said.

Twenty-eight percent of households use cylinder gas. The average expenditure of a family on cooking fuel is Tk 1,514 per month -- 11 percent of their average monthly income.

Also, 57 percent of urban poor in Dhaka use a common cooking facility.

Regarding health risks, 14 percent of households link cooking smoke to coughing, while 25 percent connect it with symptoms such as cough, asthma, and chest discomfort.

Furthermore, 11.73 percent associate both asthma and coughing with cooking smoke, while 49 percent link health issues beyond respiratory ailments to it, the study revealed.

The study titled "Present Energy Use by Urban Poor and Challenges for Adoption of Renewable Energy: Situation in Dhaka City" was presented at a national dialogue yesterday, at The Daily Star Centre.

BARCIK, and Center for Atmospheric Pollution Studies and Coalition For The Urban Poor jointly organised the event.

Speakers said the urban poor should get access to cooking fuel and electricity at a cheaper cost. Besides, there should be opportunities for them to get renewable energy like solar power and community-based biogas plants in the slums, they added.

Speaking as the chief guest, Dhaka University Emeritus Prof Nazrul Islam criticised Rajuk for neglecting the urban poor in its plans.

Star report saves rural library

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

The Sarpukur Jubo Forum Pathagar, a library located in Tiparbazar area of Sarpukur union in Lalmonirhat's Aditmari upazila, has recently been renovated.

Previously in a dilapidated condition, the library, which houses 15,000 books, was in danger of collapsing.

Following a report titled "Library with 15,000 books on verge of collapse" published in The Daily Star on May 20, Shaheen Hussain, director of Robin Printing & Packages Ltd in Dhaka, donated Tk 50,000 for the renovation.

Jamal Hossain, 24, founder president of the library, said, "We have been trying to build a permanent structure for our library. Over the past four years, we have constructed 13 pillars for a three-story library building on five decimals of land. However, due to a lack of funds, we have been unable to construct the roof."

The land for the library was donated by Abdul Sattar, a farmer from Tiparbazar village.

Shaheen Hussain, donor from Dhaka, said, "I will do my best to support the construction of the library's permanent structure."

The library, initiated by Jamal and a group of schoolchildren in 2014, started with 10 books. It now serves as a vital resource for the local community.

UNIVERSAL PENSION SCHEME

MPO-listed teachers, staff to be included

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has taken the initiative to include teachers and staff of Monthly Payment Order (MPO)-listed private educational institutions in the universal pension scheme.

To implement this initiative, the government formed a 14-member committee, its convener Additional Secretary of Secondary and Higher Secondary Division (Secondary-2) Rabiul Islam told this newspaper.

He said the committee was formed to prepare recommendations to permanently resolve the existing complexities of the welfare fund and retirement benefits for MPO-listed teachers and staff, and to bring them under the universal pension scheme.

"We already had a meeting regarding the implementation of the initiative today. Initially, we discussed identifying problems and looking for possible solutions in incorporating these teachers and staff into the pension scheme," he added.

The government will take steps accordingly based on those recommendations. If everything goes well, private school teachers will also receive pensions like those of government employees, he added.

Asked if the existing retirement and welfare trusts will be dissolved if the pension scheme is implemented, Rabiul replied, "We are not discussing it in our committee. The government will decide."

In April, the issue of including private teachers and staff under the universal pension scheme was raised at the second meeting of the Parliamentary Standing Committee on the Education Ministry.

Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhury instructed that a report be prepared and presented to the parliamentary committee. On May 6, the ministry formed the committee.

The committee also includes representatives from the Ministry of Finance, the National Pension Scheme, and officials from various educational departments. They are instructed to submit a comprehensive report within a short period.

Asked about any possible date for submitting the report, Additional Secretary Rabiul Islam said, "We just held our first meeting today. We will try to submit the report and recommendations as soon as possible."

Currently, there are nearly 30,000 MPO-enlisted schools, colleges, madrasas, and technical educational institutions. These institutions employ over 5 lakh teachers and employees. Since 1990, they have been receiving benefits from the welfare trust and retirement benefits from 2005. Under these two schemes, teachers receive a lump sum payment based on their length of service.

The government rolled out the universal pension scheme in August 2023 with an aim to bring all citizens aged above 18 under the coverage.

Progress slow

In the meantime, new land acquisition law came into force in 2017, which stipulates that landowners will get three times the actual price, which was twice the price in previous law.

Moreover, land prices have increased in the last few years, resulting in a hike in land acquisition costs, he said yesterday.

He said their project was supposed to end some 100 metres away from Chachra intersection on Dhaka-Bhanga-Narail-Jashore Benapole highway.

"RHD is going to turn the Bhanga-Benapole highway into a four-lane highway but it would take some more time. So, we will build an interchange at Chachra point for seamless vehicular movement at this intersection," he said.

If the interchange has to be built under Bhanga-Benapole highway expansion project, it will take some more time, which will increase the construction cost of the interchange, he said.

"So it was decided that the interchanger would be constructed under our project and it would cost around Tk 500 crore," he said.

Consultants are now designing the interchange, whose length would be around 3km, he said.

An interchange, also known as a grade-separated junction, is a set of roads usually designed on several levels. It allows vehicles to move from one highway to another without having to stop.

He said incorporating the interchange is the reason behind seeking six months more time for the project.

Besides, hike in dollar rates, increase in the height of some bridges following the vertical limit set by Bangladesh Inland Water Transport Authority, and construction of a flyover near Jashore cantonment are other reasons behind the cost hike, show project documents.

Sundarbans: no time lizards have been swept away by an 8 to 12-foot tidal surge.

SALINITY INTRUSION

Saline water intrusion into freshwater ponds in the Sundarbans has led to a crisis of fresh water, impacting both wildlife and human communities.

Dr Abu Naser Mohsin Hossain, divisional forest officer of Sundarbans West Forest Division, said 14 ponds in the division are now submerged in saltwater. "Desalination will be a major challenge," he added.

Mihir Kumar Doe, conservator of forest in Khulna circle, echoed him.

INFRASTRUCTURAL DAMAGE

The Forest Department estimates infrastructural damages at over Tk 6 crore. Sundarbans West suffered Tk 2.15 crore in losses, while Sundarbans East incurred Tk 3.50 crore in damages, according to Nurul Kabir, DFO of East Sundarbans.

The nipa palm forests spanning 11km were severely affected by the cyclone, with a tidal surge of up to 12 feet for nearly 36 hours. Eleven kilometers of Golpata forest in Burigoalini, Nalian, and Baniakhali areas of the west forest department sustained severe damage.

Naser reported damages to one pontoon gangway, 18 jetties, roads, barracks, solar plates, wireless towers, and generators.

Nurul Kabir mentioned damages to forest offices, patrol posts, freshwater ponds, and jetties, with 20 forest stations and 50 ponds affected, making quantification difficult.

Estimates on the number of trees uprooted were not made as of filing this report, but forest officials say it was not as much as previous super cyclones.

WHEN WILL SUNDARBANS RECOVER

Naser said while infrastructural losses can be recovered, the damage to the forest's biodiversity is irreparable and difficult to quantify.

"The Sundarbans might need 30-40 years to restore its natural balance," he added.

Dr Wasiul Islam, a forestry professor at Khulna University, expressed confidence in the Sundarbans' ability to recover within its ecosystem if left undisturbed.

He suggested employing scientific methods in post-disaster management.

Islam also suggested that effective protection against poachers and providing a conducive environment could help replenish animal populations like deer in the Sundarbans.

that. Now, you are blaming the government. You can't do that," he said.

He said it's important to look at whether the government provides impunity to anyone after the allegation of corruption proves true.

Quader said the government does not interfere in the operations of the Anti-Corruption Commission and fully supports the investigation into the corruption allegations against Benazir.

Asked if it was a failure of the law enforcement or intelligence agencies for not finding out about Benazir's corruption, Quader said, "If there was any failure [on their part], they would also be brought to book. Every criminal will be tried. No leniency will be shown," he said.

of Institute of Architects Bangladesh, said without the slum residents, it is impossible to achieve the clean energy goal of 2030 or 2040.

Prof Adil Mohammed Khan, president of Bangladesh Institute of Planners, advocated for shifting slum residents to formal housing and integrating them into urban plans.

Prof Khosru Mohammad Salim, director of Green Energy Research Center, suggested bio-plants as a viable energy solution for slums.

Chairman of CAPS Prof Ahmad Kamruzzaman Majumder presided over the programme, where pro-Vice Chancellor of State University Prof Nawzia Yasmin, DNCC Chief Town Planner Maksud Hashem, and Joint Secretary of Bangladesh Poribesh Andolon Aminur Rasul also spoke.

Focus on economic

CPD noted that the employment elasticity of GDP is declining, indicating that economic growth in Bangladesh isn't creating enough jobs. They observed a shift in employment from agriculture to industry and services sectors, with a reversal during the pandemic.

CPD recommended focusing on fiscal space, prioritising expenditure, ensuring good governance, and protecting vulnerable groups in public finance management for the next fiscal year.

The government must prioritise curbing illicit financial flows to prevent leakages. Efforts to reduce tax evasion should also be intensified, CPD said.

It also recommended continuation of directives to limit "unnecessary and luxury" public expenditure, including government vehicle purchases and international travel.

Additionally, the focus should shift towards improving factors like labour and capital productivity, skills, technology incorporation in exports, and the overall business environment to enhance competitiveness, as export earnings growth has been slowed despite currency depreciation incentives, CPD added.

Muntaseer Kamal, a CPD research fellow, warned that rising loan repayment and interest payments are increasing pressure on the external sector. He emphasised that controlling imports alone won't effectively boost foreign exchange reserves without addressing hundi and capital flight.

Kamal stressed the need for strong political will to halt capital flight.

The demands also included presence of anti-sexual harassment committees, a code of conduct for interactions with female staff, a gender policy, and active measures to prevent online harassment.

Parveen Sultana Jhuma, general secretary of BWJC, Akhter Jahan Malik, finance secretary of BWJC, journalist leader Manjurul Ahsan Bulbul, Jatiya Press Club general secretary Shyamal Dutta, Dhaka University Prof Robayet Ferdous, and Prof Dr Md Habibullah Talukder Ruskin, project director of Gonoshasthaya Samaj Vittik Cancer Hospital and Research Centre, among others, spoke at the event.

Sundarbans: no time to heal between cyclones

Remal claims 138 animal lives, causes infrastructural damages, contaminates ponds

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

In 2007, Cyclone Sidr ripped through the Sundarbans, the world's largest mangrove forest. The forest took the brunt of the storm, saving human lives by slowing down its destructive force.

However, it paid a heavy price. One-fourth of the forest area was damaged, with 8-10 percent completely destroyed and 15 percent partially damaged. Infrastructure within the Sundarbans was severely impacted, with offices, communication towers, and watercraft destroyed. Wildlife suffered immensely, with loss of habitat, displacement, and scarcity of food and water.

Two years later, Cyclone Aila struck. Around 40 percent of the forest's vegetation was destroyed, and 30-35 percent of the mangrove cover was damaged. The impact on wildlife was devastating, with endangered species such as tigers facing habitat disruption and food scarcity.

The Sundarbans continued to face the wrath of cyclones like Bulbul and Amphan. Each time the forest began to recover, another cyclone hit.

Then came cyclone Remal. Trees were uprooted, and a 10-12 ft tidal surge submerged the forest for nearly two days.

As the water recedes, the full extent of the damage is becoming clear. Carcasses are being recovered while the forest floor is littered with uprooted trees.

The Sundarbans is already grappling with the negative impacts of climate change, including rising salinity and extreme weather events like cyclones.

Given the repeated battering by cyclones and the ongoing effects of climate change, experts wonder how long it will take for the Sundarbans to recover. The answer? Maybe decades.

And before it fully recovers, there might be another cyclone waiting to strike... maybe next year or the year after.

DAMAGE TO WILDLIFE

According to the Forest Department, a total of 138 animals were found dead, including 134 deer and 4 wild boars. Additionally, 18 deer and one python were rescued and released back into the forest.

Experts said the actual number of dead animals could be higher. Countless wildlife, particularly deer, boars, snakes, and monitor

Over 200 fishing trawlers damaged

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, from Barguna

Tidal waves and strong winds under the influence of Cyclone Remal damaged more than 200 small and medium fishing trawlers in Barguna's Patharghata.

The trawlers sustained partial and complete damage despite taking shelters in different canals in the upazila during the cyclone. More than 400 fishermen are facing difficulties due to that.

Golam Mostafa Chowdhury, president of district fishery trawler owners' association, and Dulal Hossain, general secretary of district fishing trawler workers' union, confirmed it.

During the cyclone, the big trawlers from the district, which go fishing in the Bay, were anchored at different wharves amid the ongoing 65-day ban on fishing since May 20.

The small and medium-sized trawlers were used in fishing in Bishkhali and Baleshwar rivers and sought shelter in canals during the cyclone, they said.

The tidal surge and strong winds over a 30-hour long span during and after the cyclone left more than 200 of those trawlers damaged.

"I was along with two others on our small trawler to catch fish near the coast. The trawler got completely damaged in the cyclone, leaving us destitute," said Faruq Hossain, a fisherman from Chhonbunia.

Patharghata UNO Roknuzzaman Khan said, "I will discuss with the higher authorities on how to help the affected fishermen."

FLOOD IN SYLHET

Situation improves but many areas still waterlogged

MINTU DESHWARA, from Sylhet

While the rivers in Sylhet continue to flow above the danger level at different points, the flood situation in the district has shown signs of improvement, with water levels in the Surma and Kushiyara gradually receding.

Visiting Gowainghat, Companiganj, Kanaighat and Zakiganj upazilas, the most affected areas in the flood caused by downhill runoff of water from the hills, it was seen that the floodwater was receding.

"Between May 27 and May 29, there was more rain than usual due to the influence of Cyclone Remal. Also, there was heavy rain in Cherrapunji of Meghalaya, India on May 30. This resulted in flashflood and a rise in the water levels of the rivers in the district," said Deepak Ranjan Dash, executive engineer of Water Development Board in Sylhet.

"However, since then the rains reduced significantly. Cherrapunji received no rainfall in last 24 hours, and 54mm rain the day before. So, the flood situation is gradually improving. If it does not rain heavily, the situation will improve further in the next 3-5 days," he added.

According to BWDB sources, Surma river was flowing above 71cm in Kanaighat yesterday, down from 83cm on Saturday, while Kushiyara was flowing about 129cm above Amalshid Point yesterday compared to 193cm on Saturday.

Meanwhile, erosion and potholes on different roads have been becoming visible as water receded in some areas, including Raigarh section of Darbast-Kanaighat road and Kanaighat-Surighat road in Kanaighat upazila, and Gowainghat-Salutikar, Gowainghat-Jaflong and Radhanagar-Jaflong roads in Gowainghat upazila.

Local representatives said numerous mud houses in many villages collapsed, fish got washed away from ponds, and the crops were damaged in inundated fields due to flood.

"Upazila level officials of different departments concerned are on the ground in flood-affected and risky areas. Residents are being warned to safely evacuate their homes, markets and shops in flood-prone areas. A total of 56 shelters are ready in 13 unions of the upazila," said Md Towhidul Islam, UNO of Gowainghat upazila.

Meanwhile, the district administration said in a

Benazir must return home if found guilty

Says Quader

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday said former IGP Benazir Ahmed has to return home if found guilty of corruption, and the government will not compromise on the issue.

"Will there be no trial if he is not here [in Bangladesh]? Was a tax evasion case not filed against Tarique Rahman [BNP acting chairman] because he is abroad? Was the verdict not delivered?" said Quader.

He made the remarks at a press briefing held at the AL president's Dhanmondi political office.

In response to a journalist's query, Quader said it would not be appropriate to blame the government for the corruption committed by Benazir.

"Did any media write about Benazir's corruption before Kaler Kantha did it? No one [before] dared to do

Two children die in road accidents

STAR REPORT

Two children were killed in road accidents in two districts yesterday.

In Rangpur, a four-year-old girl was killed and her grandmother injured as a truck ran them over at Hajirhat.

The deceased is Shefa Akter, 4, daughter of Saddam Hossain of Sadar upazila. The injured -- Bilkis Begum -- received treatment at a hospital.

The accident happened when Bilkis was taking Shefa to a grocery shop, said OC Rajib Bosoniya of Hajirhat Police Station.

In Thakurgaon, a four-year-old boy was killed as an easy bike hit him while he was crossing a road at Shingia village in Sadar upazila.

The state should be more respectful towards filmmakers:

KAMAR AHMAD SIMON

Internationally acclaimed director Kamar Ahmad Simon is rather well-versed in the art of dealings on the international film festival scale. Over the years, he has accumulated numerous awards. To add to his repertoire, his fourth and much-awaited film 'Shikolbaha' (Silence of the Seashell) has recently been nominated for the prestigious Golden Goblet Award in the main competition of the Shanghai International Film Festival, which is Asia's largest film festival.

SHUCHISMITA TITHI

Following the release of Shunte Ki Pao! (Are you Listening!), the director patiently has been waiting for censor clearance for a year for Anyadin... (Day After...), the second film of his Water trilogy series. The unfortunate turn of having to wait for clearance came after he had already toured the film at various international festivals, back in 2022.

Kamar Ahmad Simon recently visited The Daily to speak about himself, his water film trilogy, filmmaking techniques, and other related subject matter.

Tell us about the journey of constructing your famed 'water trilogy'.

The water trilogy is made up of Shunte Ki Pao!, Anyadin..., and Aro Kichu Jibon. The first film premiered in 2012, followed by Anyadin.... Filmed from 2013 to 2019 – it debuted at International Documentary Film Festival Amsterdam (IDFA) in 2021 after a two-year post-production. The film received grants from IDFA and Sundance and won awards at Locarno. In 2022, Anyadin... was showcased at various festivals, earning a Golden Eye nomination in Zurich and a Harrell Award in Camden.

In our country, viewers often look for stars on movie posters before deciding to watch a film and since my films don't feature any stars, I've always focused on making the film itself the star.

The language of your films has a distinct feature, which in hindsight might make many refer to them as documentaries. Is this language your own, or inspired by someone else's work?

Adwaita Mallabarman's novel, Titash Ekti Nodir Naam, inspired by seaside life, feels real yet is celebrated as literature, not non-fiction. Individuals are continually driven, inspired, and influenced by various factors on a subconscious level. For me, a pure source of inspiration is Bengali literature. I consider myself a dedicated student of Bengali literature since I first began reading novels in the seventh grade, although I can no longer make time for it.

Apart from that, if anything has moved me, it is SM Sultan's paintings. During my time as a Buet student, I visited an exhibition featuring SM Sultan's paintings. Standing before a towering 30-feet canvas of his work remains a vivid memory, leaving an indelible impression on me. Since then, I immersed myself in Sultan's life and art, finding great inspiration.

For instance, the inception of the movie Shunte Ki Pao! was sparked by an image on the front page of The Daily Star, depicting people using their bare hands to block a broken dam—a scene reminiscent of Sultan's paintings.

I craft my films with a specific purpose: to immerse the audience so deeply that they forget they're watching a movie. For example, during the filming of Shunte Ki Pao! I experimented with multiple cameramen before picking up the camera myself to create haunting, unsettling frames with a slightly shaky quality. I aimed to evoke unfiltered emotions that viewers couldn't access directly but could experience through the film.

In your film, characters exist under their real names, resembling real individuals on-screen. For example, in 'Shunte Ki Pao!', there's a scene where a mother teaches her child at home. How did you familiarise the people of a region like Sutarkhali with being filmed? How long did it take, and what challenges did you face?

I prefer creating films directly on the location with the people involved, rather than hiring outside actors and constructing sets. Shunte Ki Pao! was a lengthy process of about three and a half years. After exploring various locations, I settled on Sutarkhali. It took around six months to acclimate the locals to the camera, requiring multiple visits back and forth.

Initially, when I arrived, everyone was dressed up, expecting a fancy arrangement. But I'd turn off the camera and engage in conversation instead of filming. After repeating this process several times, they began to think, "He talks about movies but doesn't make them." Once they relaxed and got used to my approach, I began shooting. It demands patience, strategy, and a lot of learning. It's a form of practice.

Is there an update on the clearance situation of 'Anyadin...'? Numerous directors opt to release movies on OTT platforms due to censorship hurdles or prolonged waiting periods. Would you tread that way?

I have directed Shunte Ki Pao! and Anyadin... for the big screen, not tailored for small screens. I aim to showcase the films in theatres, hence keeping my patience with censorship. Regarding the complexity faced by directors, the state should be more respectful towards filmmakers. This isn't just about me, it's about all directors. Removing a movie from its timely narrative is akin to erasing time itself and, in a way, erasing the filmmaker.

Are our independent and young filmmakers turning more to festivals?

I think a person only steps out when the local audience fails to appreciate their [filmmakers'] talent and understand their message. If someone wants to express themselves through a film but faces obstacles, they seek alternative avenues. Think about it, attending events organised by the likes of the IDFA Institute might become the reason why someone like me gets noticed by the media. In retrospect, this highlights our cultural issue of neglecting local creatives otherwise. Whenever a Bangladeshi film reaches a globally respected platform, it becomes a representation of Bangladesh itself.

The world is inherently Eurocentric, and for those of us from post-colonial nations, it feels like we're still in a heavily colonised environment. By screening my films in major local theatres, I can connect with audiences within my own country. Once a person receives the appropriate acknowledgement from local audiences, they can never really leave the domain. Even then, my audience still values my international reach.

However, I do hold certain criticisms — directors nowadays are less concerned about the type of film they create, why they create it, or what message they try to convey. Personally, I believe that art has never existed, nor will it ever exist, solely for its own sake. Art always has a purpose.

US masterclass a lesson for Tigers

the board for the loss of two wickets.

But then began the Aaron Jones show, as the USA batter along with his partner Andries Gous lit the Grand Prairie Stadium on fire, as the hosts made 120 runs off the next six overs to flip the script on the Canadians.

Jones, especially, wreaked havoc against the Canadians, hitting as many as 10 sixes and remaining unbeaten on 94 off 40 balls, powering the hosts to the target with seven wickets and 14 balls to spare.

The USA-Canada game was a clash between two sides who played the game with the same positive intent, with the Americans outdoing their neighbours, unlike the clash between Bangladesh and India, which was clearly a mismatch.

In the warm-up match, which took place in the newly built Nassau County Stadium in New York, Bangladesh suffered a 60-run defeat against India, making only 122-8 chasing 183.

Although the match in itself was inconsequential, as it was not recognised as a T20I and both teams fielded more than 11 players, Bangladesh's batting was an eyesore, devoid of any positive intent with the exception of Mahmudullah's 28-ball 40.

After losing three wickets for 10 runs, it never seemed like Bangladesh could get anywhere near the target, even though India captain Rohit Sharma used just two overs of Jasprit Bumrah, didn't complete the quotas of Kuldeep Yadav and Ravindra Jadeja and used three overs of part-timer Shivam Dube, who took 2-13.

The Tigers failed to bat positively in a match where there were no stakes, while associate teams like the USA, who just last month handed Bangladesh a 2-1 series defeat, and Canada displayed positive intent and fearless cricket that the Bangladesh players and coaches often talk about.

Even after the defeat against India, Bangladesh captain Najmul Hossain Shanto spoke about having faith in their capabilities in T20s, even though barring some series wins at home and one away series win against the West Indies in 2018, the Tigers have nothing to show for in T20Is. Every metric indicates a clear dearth of ability alongside a lack of intent in the Bangladesh team when it comes to T20s. It's high time for the players and the management to put their heads out of the sand and acknowledge it.

16,970 workers missed deadline

Expatriates' Welfare and Overseas Employment, said the workers who failed to reach Malaysia will be able to file their complaints with the newly formed probe body.

"We also plan to return the money to workers who could not go to Malaysia."

Several migrant workers, who were unable to go to Malaysia as they did not get air tickets despite having all valid documents, said they had mortgaged land, sold cows, and borrowed money from banks and relatives to pay the recruiting agencies.

"It was my dream to go to Malaysia and get a well-paying job so that I could provide financial stability for my family. My dreams have now been dashed as I failed to arrive in the country within the deadline," said Manikganj's Anisul Islam.

Like Anisul, several thousand others were also devastated after having to return from the Dhaka airport, failing to fly to Malaysia on May 31, the deadline for entering the country.

In March, Malaysia announced May 31 as the deadline to bring in foreign workers from 14 countries, including Bangladesh.

The country resumed hiring Bangladeshi workers in 2022 after a four-year suspension over allegations of irregularities in the recruitment process.

Between August 2022 and April 2024, nearly 4.50 lakh Bangladeshis migrated to Malaysia.

Last year, Malaysia was Bangladesh's second-largest overseas job market after Saudi Arabia.

Remittance jumps 32pc

remittance inflow rose ahead of Eid-ul-Azha as the country's migrant workers typically send more money home ahead of the major religious festival for Muslims.

On the other hand, the remittance inflow increased because some banks started offering higher rates than the official rates for collecting remittances, they said.

Banks are now offering Tk 117 to Tk 120 per dollar in case of collecting remittances after the introduction of a new exchange rate system -- "crawling peg".

On May 8, the central bank introduced the crawling peg exchange rate system and allowed banks to buy and sell US dollars freely at around Tk 117 in line with the prescription of the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

Bank officials said the remittance inflows are not up to par considering the record number of manpower exports.

In 2023, a record 13.05 lakh workers went abroad for jobs, up 15 percent year-on-year, according to data from the Bureau of Manpower, Employment and Training.

The remittance inflow was $2.16 billion in February, up from $2.11 billion in January, according to the central bank data.

Bankers said if the inflow continues to rise in the upcoming months, it will be a relief for the government by helping to boost the country's foreign exchange reserves.

Azizul was staying in Bogura on a two-month vacation and was supposed to leave for Chattogram on Saturday night.

Before that, he took his wife and son out for shopping on Saturday afternoon. Later, he took them to the hotel and killed them sometime during the night, police said.

Ashamoni's family has demanded the highest punishment for Azizul.

ACC to make list of those who aided Benazir

Benazir's properties, like the Bhawal Resort in Gazipur."

These individuals reaped benefits when Benazir was the Dhaka Metropolitan Police commissioner, director general of Rab, and the IGP.

The ACC investigation team found that Benazir bought many pieces of land at prices much lower than the market value.

A list of sub-registrars who helped Benazir is being prepared, sources said.

ACC Chairman Mohammad Moinuddin Abdullah told The Daily Star yesterday, "Our investigation team is completely independent.

"They will investigate the way they think fit. The team will also interrogate individuals, whose names will come up for aiding and abetting Benazir."

The ACC team suspects that some bank officials might have helped Benazir withdraw Tk 70–80 crore from 33 bank accounts before they were frozen.

On April 25, the ACC wrote to the Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU) seeking information on Benazir's bank accounts. The ACC received a response on May 20.

The accounts were frozen three days later, but during this period, Benazir withdrew the money.

The ACC will investigate whether the banks submitted Cash Transaction Reports and Suspicious Transaction Reports to the Bangladesh Bank.

Banks and other financial institutions have to report to the BFIU about cash transactions of Tk 10 lakhs and above. They have to file a Suspicious Transaction Report if they feel something is off.

On April 18, the ACC decided to launch an inquiry into the allegations of amassing illegal wealth by the former police chief after a Bangla daily ran reports on this.

It also formed a three-member committee to probe the allegations.

On May 23 and May 26, Dhaka Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court ordered authorities to confiscate his assets under 202 deeds and freeze his bank accounts.

The agencies picked by KL to blame

The issue of recruiting foreign workers in Malaysia came to the fore again as there have been numerous reports of joblessness, indebtedness and other forms of exploitation in Malaysia, which halted the foreign workers recruitment on May 31.

Between August 2022 and May 2024, about five lakh Bangladeshi workers went to Malaysia. UN experts in their letter to Bangladesh and Malaysia said the Bangladeshi migrants had to pay $4,500 to $6,000 as recruitment fees.

They even wrote about the bribes in recruitment process involving the Malaysian government officials, agents, and even Bangladesh high commission in Malaysia.

They called for measures to protect the thousands of Bangladeshi workers who face destitution and risk detention. They also enquired about the measures both the countries were taking regarding bilateral cooperation, policies, and investigations to improve the migrants' situation.

With none of the countries responding in 60 days, the UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights made public the letters on May 27. Later, Malaysia's Permanent Mission to the UN in Geneva replied on May 28 and the Bangladesh mission the next day.

Among other things, Bangladesh mentioned how Malaysia played the role in selecting the 101 Bangladeshi recruiting agencies.

Recruitment industry insiders alleged that those who could pay hefty sums to leaders of the syndicate of 101 agencies were selected for the recruitment job.

The Bangladesh mission said the recruitment process and procedures had been agreed upon centred on an online-based system -- Foreign Workers Centralised Management System (FWCMS), which is developed and operated by the Malaysian government.

"As a result, there should be no scope for sending any Bangladeshi workers to Malaysia using false employment visas," the letter said.

According to Malaysian media, controversial IT company Bestinet is contracted by the Malaysian government to maintain the FWCMS.

Industry insiders said Bestinet President Aminul Islam Abdul Nor is a key figure behind the foreign workers' recruitment syndicate and manipulation.

The letter of Bangladesh to the UN experts says in the initial stage of the labour recruitment in August 2022, Bangladesh High Commission in Malaysia used to inspect the employer companies before attesting the job demand letters -- an exercise meant to verify the genuineness of the jobs.

Later, the high commission suspended the process as the Malaysian foreign ministry officially requested the Bangladesh mission not to conduct such company inspection saying the matter fell under the jurisdiction of the competent Malaysian authorities, the letter mentions.

In joint working group meetings, Bangladesh raised the issue of non-placement of newly migrated Bangladeshi workers and requested the Malaysian authorities to take necessary remedial actions.

The letter added that Malaysia's Department of Labour (DoL) has prohibited 48 employers from recruiting foreign workers, including from Bangladesh.

In the letter, Nadzirah Osman, Malaysian permanent representative to the UN in Geneva, said the DoL relocated 1,664 foreign workers in 2023 and 910 workers this year to new employers.

It said Malaysia restricted the entry of foreign workers in the formal sector since May 31 to close the loopholes of exploitation and allow the government to reassess the country's foreign workers' needs.

She reaffirmed Kuala Lumpur's commitment to protect the rights of migrant workers in the country.

opened fire on targets in central Rafah, a jet fired a missile at a house in the western Tel al-Sultan district and artillery shelling targeted the southern Brazil neighbourhood, witnesses said.

In the occupied West Bank, two Palestinian teenagers were killed by Israeli gunfire, the Palestinian health ministry said.

Elsewhere in Gaza, Israeli helicopters fired at targets in Gaza City's Zeitun and Sabra areas, and an air strike hit a house in the city's east, AFP reporters said.

Three people were killed including a woman and a child, when an air strike hit a family apartment in Gaza City's Daraj neighbourhood.

MALNUTRITION HITS GAZA

Palestinian mothers search for milk

AFP, Deir El-Balah

Amira al-Taweel scoured pharmacies in northern Gaza for milk to feed her child, but could not find a single bottle to satisfy his hunger.

"Youssef needs treatment and milk, but there' none available in Gaza," the 33-year-old mother told AFP at Al-Aqsa Martyrs hospital in central Gaza where her son was admitted suffering from malnutrition.

"I feed him, but no milk as it's not available. I feed him wheat (flour) which makes him bloated," she said, as Youssef lay on a narrow bed, his frail body receiving desperately needed medication through intravenous tubes in his feet.

At least 32 people, many of them children, have died of malnutrition in Gaza since the Israeli offensive began on October 7.

But aid agencies warn that the situation is even worse when it comes to children. On Saturday, the World Health Organization said that more than four in five children had gone a whole day without eating at least once in 72 hours.

The rise in malnutrition among Gaza's children is largely a result of humanitarian aid that enters the Palestinian territory not reaching its intended destination, aid agencies said.

At Al-Aqsa Martyrs hospital, mothers were concerned about their malnourished children.

After Youssef and another baby boy, Saif, were admitted, their mothers sat next to them, worrying about how long they could survive on the food the hospital provides.

Won't ditch Ramaphosa to form coalition

Says S Africa's ANC

REUTERS, Johannesburg

South Africa's once dominant African National Congress (ANC) acknowledged that it had been humbled by an election that ended its 30-year majority but vowed not to replace President Cyril Ramaphosa as a condition to forming a new governing coalition.

Official results from Wednesday's vote, due yesterday evening, will confirm the end of the ANC's unchallenged grip on political power and start the clock on a race to strike a deal with one or more opposition parties.

Military ready to stop Taiwan independence

Warns China defence chief, calls for greater exchanges with US

AFP, Singapore

Chinese Defence Minister Dong Jun warned yesterday that his military is ready to "forcefully" stop Taiwan independence but called for greater exchanges with the United States.

The remarks at an annual security forum in Singapore followed the first substantive face-to-face talks in 18 months between the two countries' defence chiefs.

"We have always been open to exchanges and cooperation, but this requires both sides to meet each other halfway," Dong told the Shangri-La Dialogue where he met with US Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin on Friday.

"We believe that we need more exchanges precisely because there are differences between our two militaries."

Dong and Austin met for over an hour at the luxury hotel hosting the forum, which is attended by defence officials from around the world and in recent years has been seen as a barometer of US-China relations.

After the meeting, Austin said that telephone conversations between US and Chinese military commanders would resume "in the coming months", while Beijing hailed the "stabilising" security relations between the countries.

This year's Shangri-La Dialogue comes a week after China held military drills around self-ruled Taiwan and warned of war over the US-backed island following the inauguration of President Lai Ching-te, who Beijing has described as a "dangerous separatist".

"The Chinese People's Liberation Army has always been an indestructible and powerful force in defence of the unification of the motherland, and it will act resolutely and forcefully at all times to curb the independence of Taiwan and to ensure that it never succeeds in its attempts," Dong told the forum yesterday.

PROVINCIAL POLLS

BJP retains power in Indian state bordering China

REUTERS, Guwahati

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi's Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) has won the regional vote in Arunachal Pradesh, a state bordering China, while a local party swept to power in Sikkim, a Himalayan state, officials and politicians said yesterday.

Provincial elections in Arunachal Pradesh and Sikkim were held on April 19, simultaneously with the first phase of the national polls.

The BJP comfortably retained power in Arunchal Pradesh by winning 45 of the 60 seats.

Modi on social media X said the people of Arunachal Pradesh had given "an unequivocal mandate to politics of development".

A senior BJP politician Ashok Singhal said the results were a "curtain raiser" ahead of national election results that will be declared tomorrow.

"This is just the trailer ahead of the real show on June 4. The massive victory that PM Modi will win has started with Arunachal Pradesh," he said.

Iran's Ahmadinejad to run in polls

REUTERS, Dubai

Iran's hardline former President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad has registered to run for president in the country's June 28 election, organized after the death of Ebrahim Raisi in a helicopter crash last month, Iran's state television reported yesterday.

However, he could be barred from the race: the country's Guardian Council will vet candidates, and publish the list of qualified ones on June 11.

Must our migrants pay the price every time?

The govt cannot treat our remittance warriors with such apathy

The level of apathy demonstrated towards our migrant workers—on the backs of whose remittances our economy is built—by the government is abhorring. Over 16,000 migrant workers failed to reach Malaysia before the deadline of May 31, as mismanagement by government authorities and local recruiting agents made their departure impossible. In early March, Malaysia announced that it would be closing its doors on aspiring Bangladeshi migrants—along with workers from 13 other countries—because of anomalies in the worker recruitment process. The government had pledged to address such anomalies when Malaysia resumed hiring Bangladeshis—after a four-year hiatus—in August 2022 and had even signed a memorandum of understanding (MoU) to that effect.

The government, however, failed to keep its promise and migrant workers, who were supposed to spend no more than Tk 78,990 for the whole process, had to spend around Tk 5 lakh on average. The reason for this, according to industry insiders and researchers, is that a syndicate of 100 Bangladeshi recruitment agents, who were selected by the Malaysian authorities, created a monopoly-like situation, which ensured workers had no other way of getting to Malaysia without spending hefty sums. It has been further alleged that several members of the Bangladesh parliament, their relatives and political leaders are beneficiaries of the clique, and even the Bangladesh High Commission in Malaysia get a cut. These are extremely serious allegations that demand immediate investigations.

On top of failing to address such serious corruption, the Bangladesh government has been so lackadaisical in its response to Malaysia's deadline that hundreds of migrant workers had to wait for hours at the Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport to catch flights, only to return home devastated. Many aspiring workers had gone to the airport without tickets after receiving assurances from local recruiters—no doubt, having paid hefty sums—that they would be given tickets on time. Following this massive debacle, the state minister for welfare and overseas employment said the government would look into the incident and take action against those responsible. But why hasn't the government investigated and punished anyone responsible for the mismanagement and corruption that has been ongoing in regards to labour migration to Malaysia over the years? And given its woeful track record, can anyone believe the government will do so now? And as for the migrants who failed to leave as a result of the government's mismanagement this time, who will compensate them for their sufferings and expenses?

The amount of corruption and mismanagement plaguing the entire labour migration process clearly indicates that it goes up to the highest levels of our government. And it is indefensible that our hard-working migrants are having to pay the ultimate price. We have said this repeatedly, and we will say it again: the government must investigate all of the allegations thoroughly and hold those responsible to account.

To be born poor and a woman!

The govt needs to do more to protect the marginalised

There is no doubt that we, as a nation, have failed to protect our women and children, as evident by the statistics on rape, murder and other gender-based violence in this country. The magnitude of women's vulnerability once again came to the fore through a recent report in our daily. A woman in Kurigram died by suicide after loan sharks repeatedly gang-raped her over a period of two months, because she failed to repay a loan of Tk 20,000.

That such an incident could take place in a country that boasts of economic growth with a per capita income of $2,650 (approximately Tk 3 lakh) and where loan defaulters, who owe crores of taka, go scot-free, feels like a cruel irony. It is obvious that the fruits of our so-called economic progress did not reach this woman and her family. But what really sealed her fate was her identity as a woman in a country where toxic masculinity reigns supreme and impunity for gender-based violence is commonplace. Consequently, the perpetrators used rape as a weapon to "punish" not just her but her husband, who also ingested poison but survived.

We need to take a long hard look at the nation we have become—one without equity, justice or hope for the poor and vulnerable. All our proud proclamations of economic development and women's empowerment ring hollow against the horrific injustices suffered by the victim. The government must rethink its current priorities; after all, what's the point of development if it is going to leave so many behind? What does it say about our justice system that a woman would rather take her life than seek redress?

We cannot allow this tragedy to become another statistic. The criminals in this particular case must be brought to book quickly and meted out exemplary punishment so that no one dares to commit such crimes again.

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

Tiananmen Square massacre

On this day in 1989, the Chinese government called in the military to put down a pro-democracy demonstration carried out by more than 100,000 people in Tiananmen Square in Beijing, resulting in hundreds of deaths.

FY25 budget should focus on the right priorities

Dr Sayema Haque Bidisha
is professor at the Department of Economics of the University of Dhaka. She is also a research director at the South Asian Network on Economic Modeling (SANEM).

SAYEMA HAQUE BIDISHA

The national budget of FY2024-25 is set to be announced at a time when Bangladesh's economy is going through a difficult phase, facing high inflation and declining foreign exchange reserves. These challenges have partially been attributed to the falling value of the taka against the US dollar and a declining trend in remittance earnings and modest export inflows. While analysing the challenges of the upcoming budget, there are certain long-standing issues that need to be addressed—namely sluggish private investment, increased debt burden, dismal revenue mobilisation, inefficient implementation of development projects, lack of effective governance in the financial sector, etc. Resource allocation of the budget must also address the fundamental issues of reducing poverty particularly in the face of high inflation, managing rising inequality, sustaining growth, and generating employment. Though Bangladesh's budget structure is shaped on the basis of medium-term budgetary framework (MTBF), a certain degree of adjustment based on the short-term priorities are feasible too.

The most important task for the upcoming budget is to determine the priorities and manage resource allocations accordingly. The top priority must be bringing the inflation rate down to a tolerable level, instead of focusing on accelerating growth or ambitious and costly large-scale investment programmes. In April this year, the point-to-point inflation rate was as high as 9.74 percent, which put not only the low-income but also the middle-income people under serious pressure. Besides, though it is not within the direct purview of the budget, restoring macroeconomic stability through careful planning and strategising is of paramount importance. As for the forex reserves, since the hike in August 2021, we observe a steady decline with the gross reserves, which stood at $18.61 billion on May 21, 2024. In recent months, the gap between the supply and demand of dollars in the current account has widened along with the decline in the financial account balance, putting an upward pressure on the price of the greenback. While the artificially retained exchange rate was at Tk 110 till May 8, the market rate exceeded Tk 116, causing a faster depletion of forex reserves. Finally, very recently, the Bangladesh Bank set the crawling peg mid-rate (CPMR) at Tk 117 per US dollar, up from Tk 110.

Against this backdrop, the revenue and expenditure strategies should be aligned with the priorities. To contain the unprecedentedly high inflation, necessary downward adjustments of VAT, regulatory duties, import taxes, etc could give some relief to ordinary people. A one-percentage-point cut in the source tax on incomes from the supply of essential food commodities, as expected to be proposed by the government, is a right step. In order to compensate the deficit in revenue for this tax cut as well as to broaden the fiscal space, a massive reform is needed, gradually shifting the focus towards direct taxation.

As part of tax reform initiatives, digitalisation at every level of monetary transactions and making the revenue collection mechanism fully automated is essential. In addition, decentralising the tax system and tax offices, arranging tax fairs at different localities with certain incentives, severe penalty in case of corruption or harassment of clients, making submission of tax return certificates mandatory, making the surcharges more progressive, redesigning income tax brackets, making excise duties more progressive, etc can have important implications. Redesigning wealth tax in a progressive manner should be seriously considered too. Given the rising trend in income inequality, such reforms in direct taxation should be implemented with even greater emphasis.

In order to provide some comfort to the low-income groups, a massive shift is needed in favour of safety net allocations. The open market sale (OMS) activity should be expanded significantly by increasing the number of OMS trucks, including more items on the list, and subsidising those items by a greater margin. Besides, initiatives like rationing and fair price shops need to be introduced and operated. Revisiting the beneficiary selection criterion is also needed to correctly identify the vulnerable people. Though the government is planning to increase the number of beneficiaries along with the per capita allocation of several safety net programmes, given the high inflation rate, a multi-fold increase is needed to the allocation.

The government can also incentivise the private sector through small tax rebates to safeguard the interests of existing workers through monthly ration, subsidised mid-meal, etc. Besides, the safety net programmes need to be revisited while focusing on the urban poor living in slum areas. While analysing the safety net budgets, we should however keep in mind that it includes allocations for pension earners as well as interest payments of savings certificates. It is therefore crucial to track the amount of safety net allocations of these payments, which are actually directed towards those at the grassroots level. To combat the rising inflation, policy directions for effective market monitoring should be outlined in the budget. Initiatives for a quick implementation of the National Social Security Strategy (NSSS) should also be considered.

While considering the priorities for the next budget, though the target of macroeconomic stability is not a directly related fiscal target, important changes can be made through carefully designed strategies. For example, in order to encourage dollar inflow, there is a 2.5 percent incentive for remitters. Though this step has increased the inflow of remittances in the short term, as long as there is any divergence between the official and the unofficial rates, remitters will have monetary incentive to send remittances through the informal channels. Therefore, it is important to consider non-monetary incentives for the remitters, and in the long run, it is crucial to eventually move towards a market-driven unified exchange rate regime. However, in this regard, it is crucial to have effective background management of the relevant institutions.

Another reason for the increased flow through informal channels is the existence of the informal hundi market, based on black money. To channel foreign currency through formal means, strict measures should be taken to constrain the syphoning of black money through informal channels. To boost trade-related taxation as well as to put a constraint on the outflow of foreign currency, luxury commodities need to be taxed at even higher rates.

Allocations in different expenditure heads must be done in a careful manner while curtailing lesser important expenses and prioritising expenditure for social infrastructure, e.g. education, healthcare and social safety net. Despite low revenue mobilisation, these expenditure heads should not be compromised. With the twin macro concerns of the government, e.g. forex reserve depletion coupled with the falling value of the taka, the central bank has taken different contractionary policy stances to tame down inflation. As a result, the pace of job creation has slowed down. Consequently, the upcoming budget must prioritise incentivising the micro, small and cottage industry through tax rebates, subsidies of different forms, etc for small-scale job creation.

VISUAL: SHAIKH SULTANA JAHAN BADHON

Due to the forex crisis, careful consideration is also needed in case of any large-scale investment, and the priority should be to concentrate on quick completion of the ongoing ones. Given the narrow fiscal space, it should also be kept in mind that larger deficits and associated domestic financing can fuel inflation, whereas costly foreign financing can have further negative implications on the overall macro scenario. A more balanced approach in case of deficit financing while focusing more on long-term multilateral financing sources instead of costly bank financing is a better approach at this stage.

Finally, although the national budget is a tool for resource allocation and management, it is also expected that, given the prevailing challenges in certain important institutions, the upcoming budget will offer specific policy directions to tackle such underlying challenges of the economy, especially those related to low revenue mobilisation and irregularities in the financial sector.

The untold agony of Cyclone Remal

Can you imagine living under the open sky, bereft of shelter, having lost your home to the sudden and merciless onslaught of a cyclone? For those who have not experienced such devastation, it is difficult to imagine such a dire situation. Government assessments to date indicate that at least 150,000 homes have been destroyed or damaged across 19 districts, affecting an estimated 639,000 people, of whom about 274,000 are children. Despite technological advancements that allow us to monitor a cyclone's trajectory, including its source, wind speed, estimated landfall time, and lead time, structural mitigation measures have not kept pace, as evidenced by Cyclone Remal.

The floodwaters left half a million people stranded. Significant damage was inflicted on agricultural land, shrimp and fish enclosures were swept away, road connections were severed in some locations, and salty water seeped in, depleting freshwater supplies. Many survivors are now compelled to live in cramped, filthy, temporary shelters or improvised housing. Some people may even find it difficult to rebuild their homes and lives while being displaced for prolonged periods.

While the cyclone tore through the nation's coastal regions, at least 26 people in Khulna, Satkhira, Barishal, Patuakhali, Bhola, and Chattogram lost their lives, mostly from collapsing walls and falling trees. The tidal surge triggered by the cyclone flooded many areas, leaving settlements underwater as embankments broke. The people whose houses were destroyed by the storm mostly took refuge with neighbours or relatives. Though awareness campaigns and preparations for the disasters led to at least 800,000 people being moved to cyclone shelters, significantly decreasing the death toll, the loss of lives during Cyclone Remal raises questions.

As you may recall, a young man wrote the words "We want dam, not relief" on his chest in a photo that went viral on social media right after the cyclone. This image effectively illustrates the precarious nature of reconstruction and rehabilitation efforts. In addition to disaster preparedness, dams and levees require prompt maintenance and reinforcement. Significant infrastructure vulnerabilities were revealed by the recent cyclone. Many houses in the coastal region are not constructed to withstand strong winds and torrential rain, resulting in extensive damage and the eviction of residents. Disaster management professionals have long emphasised the need for constructing stronger, more climate-resilient homes for vulnerable populations in these areas.

Widespread and protracted power outages resulted from substation damage and power line damage triggered by cyclone winds and flooding. Emergency response operations were hampered by damage to communication towers and networks, leaving isolated communities unable to request support. In at least 45 districts, the cyclone prompted blackouts and hindered telecommunication services. The initial statement from the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission (BTRC) stated that 22,218—or 48 percent—of the 45,601 towers had been out of order. Another report indicated that the cyclone left 1.73 crore people without electricity.

Every cyclone invariably causes a great deal of suffering. Even though the death toll is frequently highlighted in post-cyclone assessments, the impact of disasters cannot be fully appreciated based solely on this statistic. Beyond fatalities, a large number of people suffer injuries that may necessitate ongoing medical care and rehabilitation. Survivors may experience trauma, anxiety, and depression, and they may lose their homes, livelihoods, and loved ones—all of which are often disregarded in the aftermath.

The disruption in daily life extends to various facets of existence. The closure of schools, destroyed and damaged, impedes children's education, potentially causing long-term detriments to their development. Economic activities are halted as businesses face destruction and farmers lose their crops and livestock, leading to financial instability and poverty. The environmental impact is also significant, with the destruction of natural habitats and contamination of water sources posing additional long-term challenges.

Structural measures, such as repairing and reinforcing dams and levees, are critical to mitigate the impact of cyclones as they play a vital role in controlling floodwaters and protecting communities from inundation. Addressing the broader implications of cyclones also requires a holistic approach that includes psychological support for survivors, restoration of livelihoods, and rebuilding of community networks. Efforts should also focus on improving housing standards and developing sustainable agricultural practices to enhance resilience against future storms.

We need to ensure that impacted communities receive food, clean water, medical attention, and temporary housing as soon as possible. At the same time, start repairing and fortifying vital infrastructure, such as levees, roads, electricity lines, dams, and dwellings, using designs that are climate-resilient. The government, other national and international organisations should come together providing financial support, reestablishing livelihoods, and resurrecting local businesses to aid in the economic recovery. We have no chance of easing the suffering that results from natural disasters unless we make all-encompassing and persistent efforts.

Spare us the hypocrisy

BLOWIN IN THE WIND

SHAMSAD MORTUZA

Those who are familiar with my writing know that I am not a big fan of bureaucracy, either civil or military. Although I recognise the advantages of comprehensive systemic checks and balances for prudent decision-making, I believe the system primarily depends on institutional memory. Any incoming officer with idealist vision and indomitable passion to change the system soon learns that conformity and compliance are the rules of the game. They become a cog in the wheel, repeating what they are supposed to do.

In one series of Asterix, there is a satirical depiction of a young Roman officer who gets surprised that his colleagues are better off documenting everything in triplicate on stone tablets rather than going to fight. As a young soldier, he is dying to meet and kill his enemies. However, once battered, he simply picks up his chisel and begins writing reports in stone. The Roman centurion in Asterix in Spain experiences a harsh reality. The Romans taught the British. The British taught the use of carbon papers in typewriters to do the triplicates. Today, a digital CC is enough. And bureaucracy has not changed much.

Interestingly, I am writing this piece while sitting in what was once considered to be the Western tip of the world: A Coruna in Spain. The Galician flag represents the westernmost trading port with a setting sun. The Romans called the tip of the Iberian peninsula Cape Finisterre, to denote "finis terrae" (End of the Earth). Hence, Julius Caesar thought it important to build a lighthouse, named after Hercules, on the shore of the North Atlantic, thinking this was the place where the world ends. The belief was so strong that one of Jesus Christ's apostles, St James, wanted to be buried here, which led to the construction of Santiago de Compostela. His disciples brought his remains from Jerusalem, and later, in the ninth century, they built a cathedral in his honour. But it is also from Spain; Christopher Columbus dared to cross the Atlantic Ocean to open new frontiers for the West.

So here I am sitting in Spain, at the juncture of the end of the old world and the beginning of the new world. Here, I am surfing the internet to get news from home. This investigative report by DW on our military personnel who serve in the UN Peace Corps is available. The gist of the report is pretty straightforward: some of the military soldiers participating in these missions in various conflict-ridden territories around the world were allegedly involved in extrajudicial killings while they were serving in the Rapid Action Battalion (Rab). DW sought a comment from the UN to verify the allegations, but the international bureaucratic organisation responded by stating that it was not feasible for them to conduct a background check on every member of their troops involved. The DW report was fuming at the idea that Bangladesh earned $4.5 billion from its military personnel who might have been guilty of human rights violations.

> DW's attempt to act as the moral police from a Western perspective leaves me wondering: are you overlooking the broader picture? I understand the burden of guilt with which Germany treads the Holocaust memory carefully. But how can you discuss human rights violations when you have nothing to say about 40,000 dead in Gaza?

At the height of political arson and anarchy that engulfed the country, Rab came into existence. Crossfire became a buzzword, and every day our national news parroted the same old narrative of killing in self-defence. I asked one of my army friends why they used the same narrative every time there is a crossfire. He replied candidly that their legal team had suggested it. Their plights bear a striking resemblance to those of the Roman soldier in Asterix: documentation precedes action. But facts remain: Rab's intervention helped us get out of a dark phase of a national crisis. Indeed, there are allegations of institutional and individual abuses of power, such as the contract killings by individual officers in Narayanganj. There are reports of the forced disappearance of political activists. Another DW report stemmed from the flow of such missing individuals.

However, DW's attempt to act as the moral police from a Western perspective leaves me wondering: are you overlooking the broader picture? I understand the burden of guilt with which Germany treads the Holocaust memory carefully. But how can you discuss human rights violations when you have nothing to say about 40,000 dead in Gaza? How do you respond to soldiers killing 45 refugees in a refugee shelter in Rafah, a father clutching his daughter's decapitated body against an inferno, or when 600 inmates perish by 2,000-pound bombs? At a time when the world is witnessing genocide, which will eventually need a UN intervention, you criticise a country that supplies soldiers for the most difficult areas where your own soldiers do not want to go? You criticise a government that earns its salaries through hard work in hazardous conditions. They are not your e-genies, trading in cryptocurrencies to make billions. Haven't you heard about what the British soldiers or the Americans have done in Kenya or Iraq? You must pick Bangladesh to prove your moral superiority. Seriously?

Human rights violations are a universal phenomenon. I find it problematic when individuals selectively promote certain ideas with the intention of harming a country's reputation and economy. A single accident at a garment factory can trigger—and rightly—a flurry of compliance issues. But as our entrepreneurs will tell you, our Western buyers will not give them any extra cent for the investments the factories are making in improving their working conditions. They will shove tons and tons of bureaucratic certificates at you to force you to comply. In the end, they will see their own benefits.

I am not a big fan of bureaucracy. I chose academia because I could distance myself from it. At a time when the International Court of Justice faces daily defamation and neglect by the West—the same West which has reached its nadir, revealing its hypocrisies daily—we require visionary global leaders who can defy the established hierarchy and devise a solution to protect human rights across the board. Change must come from the centre. If you fail to do so, there will be new centres to form new circles.

As I sit here at the intersection of the West, I begin to envision a future free from hypocrisy.

SBTi debate has major implications for RMG suppliers

MOSTAFIZ UDDIN

A row has broken out about the Science Based Targets initiative (SBTi), a corporate climate action organisation, which could have significant implications for garment manufacturers around the world, depending on how it plays out. The SBTi is the world's best-known initiative that supports global enterprises in their efforts to reduce carbon emissions in line with sciences aligned with global agreements such as the Paris Agreement. Many of the world's largest fashion brands have set science-based targets for 2030 and beyond.

The biggest challenge in meeting these targets has been in reducing Scope 3 emissions—in supply chains, essentially. For fashion brands, reducing the amount of CO2 emissions related to garment production and textile processing is a huge task, especially given that so much of this manufacturing takes place in countries that use "dirty" energy such as fuel and gas.

Up until now, the SBTi has indicated that in order to meet their science-based targets, signatories must make absolute reductions in their carbon emissions. In order to do this, they would need to support their supply chains in the transition to renewable energy sources.

This is no easy task. It also explains why fashion brands have been in prolonged conversations with their suppliers in recent years to look at how they can measure and reduce carbon emissions.

Recently, however, the SBTi issued a statement suggesting they would, moving forward, allow voluntary carbon offsetting schemes to contribute to CO2 emissions reduction targets in supply chains. This news was significant for the fashion industry as many brands are indeed struggling to reduce Scope 3 emissions while also hitting business growth targets.

The SBTi said that, when properly supported by policies, standards and procedures based on scientific evidence, the use of environmental attribute certificates for abatement purposes on Scope 3 emissions could function as an additional tool to tackle climate change. Consequently, SBTi decided to extend their use for the purpose of abatement of Scope 3 emissions.

After the SBTi issued this statement, there was a huge uproar among environmental activists. They claimed that by allowing carbon offsetting to contribute towards emission abatement, the SBTi was taking a huge risk. Why? Because it has long been argued that carbon offsetting schemes are not trustworthy and poorly regulated.

Indeed, in recent years, we have seen a number of scandals whereby such schemes were shown to be bogus and/or contributing very little to environmental causes. Environmentalists are also concerned that many such schemes take place in remote parts of the world, so are difficult to monitor.

After the backlash, the SBTi responded quickly and issued another statement. This time, it said it was reviewing the situation and would update its guidance later this year. For now, it seems that we are back to a situation where carbon offsets are not allowed to be used in lieu of absolute reductions in carbon emissions.

Why is all this important? It's actually a huge debate for fashion supply chains—and suppliers in Bangladesh.

If the SBTi were to choose to allow carbon offset schemes to be used to help brands meet their climate goals, the pressure to directly cut supply chain emissions would be greatly reduced. I am not suggesting that fashion brands would take the easy road and rely solely on offsets in order to meet their climate targets. What I do think, however, is that brands would suddenly feel they had breathing space after several years during which they have struggled to balance business priorities with the need to reduce their carbon emissions.

So what now? From what I have learnt so far, even many Western nations are finding it challenging to meet the ambitious climate goals they have signed up for. Shifting to renewable energy is a slow and cumbersome process. We are talking about a completely new way of doing things as we dismantle the energy infrastructure which fuelled the industrial revolution.

I am all for progress and as many of my colleagues and friends will know, I have spent more than a decade championing environmental causes. I am also, however, a pragmatist. The way I see it, the only way some industries are going to reduce their emissions in the short term is to stop growing, period. This would mean recession and major societal upheaval. Do we want that?

Perhaps there is a middle way. Maybe the climate offsetting schemes that have been discredited in the past could be improved. What if countries collectively pump billions into tree-planting and reforestation? What if huge amounts of money is invested in new carbon capture technologies so we can find out whether they work or not, and the level of impact they can have? I see no reason why such schemes could not at least provide a partial solution. There is always a way, but I agree fully that poorly regulated offset schemes cannot be allowed to derail environmental goals.

My advice to the SBTi would be to open up a debate on this issue. Invite the experts on board and ensure that all discussions take place in an open and transparent manner. These issues affect us all, and discussions around them should not take place behind closed doors.

SCIENCES of Difference

Most of the scientific professions of the late colonial period were dominated by Bengalis. This enthusiasm had also inspired an almost-irrational faith in the transformative capacity of science and technology.

PROJIT BIHARI MUKHARJI

In 1935 Hemendrakumar Ray gave us a disturbing glimpse into an uncanny future. In a novel that is more a moral treatise on national science than histrionic pulp fiction, Ray described a fictional nation of Bengalis in the deepest heart of east-central Africa. An ancient shipwreck, he narrated, had left a hapless but plucky group of Bengalis in the deeply forested region. Undaunted, they had proceeded to build an incredibly advanced and supremely powerful civilization. They had not only remade their hostile environs, but indeed had remade themselves. Their bodies, tastes, reproductive modes—all had been modified to make them more efficient. Efficiency and national progress had been established as the sole criteria for all walks of life. Individual likes and dislikes were entirely expunged. Worst of all, basic human sympathy and fellow feelings had been subordinated to the cult of scientifically mandated efficiency. People, especially those who were marginal to the body politic, were considered expendable and subjected to deadly scientific experimentation. With the decay of the softer, nobler sentiments had also come a hubris. So much so, that these advanced Bengalis had come to mock and look down upon the Bengalis who had remained back in Bengal and not partaken of these tremendous technological advances. Ray, tellingly, called his novel Amanushik Manush.

However farfetched the dystopian Bengali colony in Africa might seem, the moral and ethical tensions articulated by Ray were incredibly cogent to mid-twentieth century Bengal. An enthusiasm for science and technology had grown with leaps and bounds across the subcontinent. But since many of the flagship educational institutions of the colonial era were situated in Bengal, predictably this enthusiasm was perhaps greatest amongst Bengalis. Most of the scientific professions of the late colonial period were dominated by Bengalis. This enthusiasm had also inspired an almost-irrational faith in the transformative capacity of science and technology.

Of all the myriad branches of science the one where this transformative potential of science was most conspicuous was Anthropology, more specifically Physical Anthropology. It claimed for itself the ability to adjudicate and clarify the knottiest of human conundrums: who are we? How do we relate to our neighbors? Etc. Indeed, the object of this science were not things, but beings. Fellow human beings. Yet, ironically, the way in which these human subjects were studied turned them into little more than objects. Measured, bled, quantified, and classified, with little reference to their individuality or their biography, in the hands of physical anthropologists at the time, their subjects became little more than biological objects. Rather than their dignities, desires, dejections, distresses, or dreams, these subjects came to be defined by a series of bodily measurements that could be used to determine their placement in one classificatory category or another.

Of the deluge of bodily measurements that cascaded through early and mid-twentieth-century Physical Anthropology, one that stood out most in terms of its novelty, future-promise, and claims to scientific objectivity, was blood group frequencies. Blood groups had first been discovered in the first decade of the twentieth century. The First World War and the need for blood transfusions on the battlefields had helped refine and develop the knowledge about blood groups. It was during these widespread experimentations with blood grouping on the battlefront that a Polish medical couple, Ludwig and Hanna Hirszfeld, working with British and French imperial troops claimed to have discovered a connection between blood groups and racial identity. The Hirszfelds claimed that the frequency with which different blood groups, i.e., A, B, AB and O, appeared in each racial group varied. Based on this they formulated a racial scale called the 'Biochemical Race Index'. Based on this index, they further hypothesized that blood group A had likely originated in Europe and blood group B in South Asia. Hence, a higher proportion of group A in a population, to the Hirszfelds, meant a closer biological connection with Europeans.

Though the specific conclusions of the Hirszfelds were frequently refuted, their basic method quickly caught on and, in less than a decade, gave rise to the entirely new discipline of seroanthropology. Between 1919, when the Hirszfeld study was published, and 1939, in a mere twenty years a whopping 1,158 seroanthropological studies were published in the UK, US and France alone. Many other studies were published in Germany, Japan, British India and elsewhere.

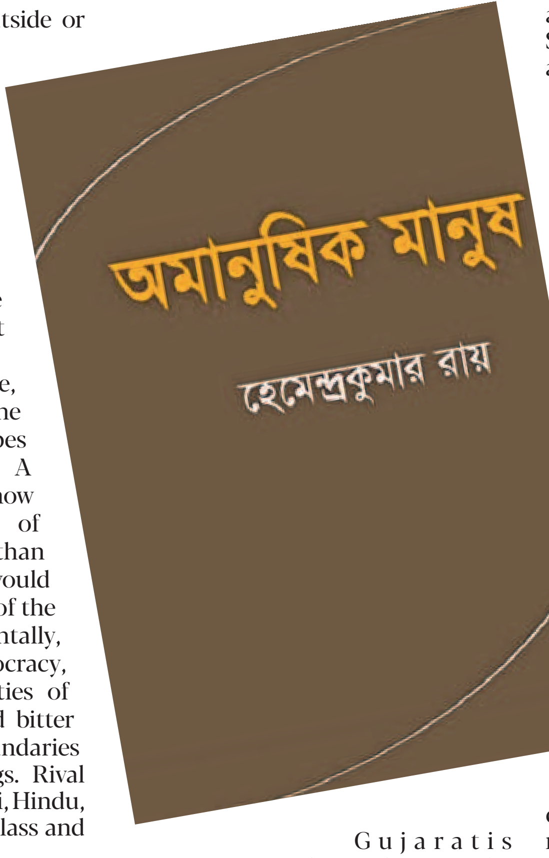
The twenties and thirties were epochal decades in the history of Bengal. The end game of empire played out slowly and with unexpected twists and bloody turns. On the one hand, the scientific services and state bureaucracies were progressively 'Indianized' after the WWI. This allowed a lot of Indian scientists to work within, rather than outside or on the fringes of, the state. On the other hand, the nature of mass politics and electoral democracy introduced by the Government of India Acts of 1919 and 1935 gave rise to bitter and often violent clashes along communal and caste lines. As a result, there emerged a tension amongst the educated classes.

The promise of science, ensconced firmly within the state apparatus, stoked hopes of a technocratic future. A future where science, now deployed in the interests of national uplift rather than imperial subordination, would lead to the future prosperity of the nation as a whole. Contrapuntally, the nature of electoral democracy, pegged as it was to identities of caste and religion, produced bitter disputes about the very boundaries of future national groupings. Rival nationalisms—Indian, Bengali, Hindu, Muslim etc. competed with class and caste based political movements, in defining distinct and different visions of a political future.

Faced with these orthogonal tendencies, many scientific men thought that science could supplant the messiness of politics in settling questions of group identity and political belonging. The polymath Sir Brojendra Nath Seal had long-advocated a scientific approach to settling issues of national composition and future development based on concrete, measurable numbers. But he had never gotten further than the idea. The challenge of how to turn something as complex as human political identities into simple numbers was left to his juniors to work out. Two young men in particular were drawn to Seal's suggestions. Both would go on to be scientific stalwarts in their own right.

One was the eminent statistician, Prasanta Chandra Mahalanobis. The other was the founding director of the Anthropological Survey of India, Biraja Shankar Guha. Mahalanobis and Guha had distinctly different political visions. Mahalanobis emphasized that all Bengalis, irrespective of caste or religion, were biologically closer to each other than people from neighboring provinces. Guha refused to even count most of the so-called lower caste and tribal groups as 'Bengalis', reserving that label only for upper caste—though including both Hindu and Muslim—Bengalis. Yet, where Guha and Mahalanobis and many others agreed was that they thought various sorts of bodily measurements, and often seroanthropology, could settle the issue.

This technocratic dream inspired political parties to directly invest in and publish anthropometric surveys. The Maha Gujarat Society, a group demanding the break-up of the erstwhile Bombay State into separate Gujarati-speaking and Marathi-speaking regions, for example, employed a Cambridge-trained Bengali anthropologist, D.N. Majumdar, to determine whether the tribal peoples of the Dang forests were closer to Gujaratis or Marathis. Likewise, the Hindu Mahasabha, a prominent Hindu nationalist outfit, officially published a Bengali book titled Bangalir Nritattwik Parichay [Anthropological Identity of the Bengalis] by Atul Krishna Sur.



Far from ending the technocratic dreams of scientifically determining political futures, the end of empire in 1947 gave further encouragement to it. Pressed directly into the service of postcolonial nation-building several seroanthropologists now emphasized the medical benefits of studying the biological differences between different social groups. Some even went so far as to suggest the eugenic mechanisms to control the reproduction of specific castes which had been shown to have higher percentage of certain inheritable diseases like sickle cell malaria.

The founding premise of these studies was that communities that had lived cheek and jowl next to each other could be objectively and accurately distinguished from each other using strictly biological criteria. The fiction of perfect and sustained endogamy undergirded the possibility of such demarcation.

The polymath Sir Brojendra Nath Seal had long-advocated a scientific approach to settling issues of national composition and future development based on concrete, measurable numbers. But he had never gotten further than the idea. The challenge of how to turn something as complex as human political identities into simple numbers was left to his juniors to work out. Two young men in particular were drawn to Seal's suggestions.

A major stumbling block in the perpetuation of such fictions was the fact that as Bengalis themselves, many of the scientists would have known of numerous examples of how such perfect endogamy does not work in practice. Upwardly mobile families for instance, if they managed to become affluent, were often able to marry into higher-status groups. Migrants too were often able to marry locally. Practices such as adoption or levirate were also known to exist. Finally, no matter what the community rules exhort, there is hardly any human community where reproduction is entirely limited to the marital family. Extra-marital liaisons, particularly between affluent men and poorer women, have long been part of rural societies. All of this would have been well-known to most of the researchers. Yet, when they sought to approach community identities as discreet biological facts, it was as if they had to willfully suppress their own social memories.

The tragedy of this forgetting emerged in a little Bengali book authored by Sasanka Sekhar Sarkar. Sarkar was one of the most prolific and inveterate seroanthropologists. Eventually becoming a professor of the Calcutta University, he did much to establish seroanthropology as a popular academic discipline. Yet, late in life, he authored a book titled Lokgatha, a collection of folktales and stories collected throughout his life. Introducing the collection, he recalled his own grandmother and the stories she would tell. He insisted that it was these stories that were the true history and heritage of mankind and insisted that they could not be isolated as belonging to any one discrete community or the other. He lamented that Bengali grandmothers no longer had as large a stock of stories as they once did and neither could contemporary grandmothers narrate these stories with as much verve as those of yore. It seemed as though, having spent a rich and successful career insisting that humans could be defined entirely by their measurable biological inheritances, Sarkar at the end of his life was grasping for an alternate vision: a vision of kinship that was not simply genetic, but rather built upon a stock of shared stories and memories of telling stories.

Ray's Amanushik Manush shared a similar vision. Deeply influenced by Tagore and a close friend of Kazi Nazrul Islam, Ray had authored works of science fiction as well as the supernatural. Like Tagore he was smitten by science's ability to stoke our curiosity and wonder, but he was equally suspicious of its humbug and wary of its ability to disenchant complex social worlds.

Amanushik Manush was not a very successful novel. Few today, beyond kalpabigyan aficionados, know of it. By contrast the technocratic dreams for determining and shaping political futures thrived. Under Mahalanobis and Guha, leading scientific institutes such as the Indian Statistical Institute and the Anthropological Survey of India, conducted largescale biological studies of group difference in postcolonial India. Social groupings were refigured as biological differences. As seroanthropology evolved into technologically more sophisticated population genetics, castes and communities were reimagined as 'gene pools'. Faced with this ascendant faith in technocratic definitions of human identities, Ray's exhortations appeared quaint at best and inconsequential at worst.

Today as genetics, increasingly institutionalized through legal cases on paternity, immigration etc., progressively becomes the dominant way to define kinship, Ray's forgotten dilemma continues to haunt us. Who is an amanushik manush? Is it one who has forgotten to see their neighbors as complex human beings? Or is one who has been reduced simply to a biological assemblage of genetic traits? Is it the scientist or the subject who is studied that loses her humanity in the end? Indeed, what is it that makes us human or inhuman? Is it our biology? Or our history?

REAL DID what Real do best: Win

NABID YEASIN

"When you don't kill Real Madrid, Real Madrid kill you," Xavi Hernandez, who had to come up against Real Madrid a number of times in his career both as a Barcelona player and manager, had said just last year.

Borussia Dortmund became the latest side to be stung harshly by this aforementioned reality as they conceded two goals to see Real Madrid do what they do best -- win the Champions League for a record-extending 15th time at Wembley on Saturday.

Dortmund had caught the Spanish giants napping in the first half of the final. Edin Terzic's men were tactically superior, creating the most chances -- with Dortmund's seven attempts to Real's two during that phase -- and did everything right, except for killing the giants when they had them on the ropes.

"We missed out on scoring and then conceded the goal. That's how they [Real Madrid] always do it," said Dortmund defender Mats Hummels, who, along with Marco Reus, also had his heart broken in another Champions League final 11 years ago against Bayern Munich at the same venue.

Real Madrid did not look near their best in the first 45 minutes, with Toni Kroos unable to set the tempo, Vinicius Junior and Rodrygo not finding a clear way through -- and the sole credit for cornering Los Blancos must be given to Dortmund.

With the way Vinicius was attempting to manoeuvre his way past right-back Julian Ryerson, Terzic realised Dortmund needed to change things within the first 20 minutes of the game. He then had his players line up in a three-man backline -- Hummels and Nico Schlotterbeck playing a bit wider with Emre Can coming in between to do the dirty work. That helped Ryerson play up the field with the other full-back Ian Maatsen playing more as a playmaker, making the midfield heavy in numbers and closing the gaps to diminish any chance of Real Madrid exploiting while moving forward.

Owing to this tactical genius, Dortmund saw three clear-cut goal-mouth chances. Having been found through Real's defence, Niclas Fullkrug hit the bar before Karim Adeyemi wasted two golden opportunities.

One of those Adeyemi attempts was parried out by Los Blancos' goalkeeper Thibaut Courtois -- a player who had missed most of the season due to injuries but was backed strongly by Real manager Carlo Ancelotti to start the final. But the best of the lot was when Adeyemi had slipped past Dani Carvajal, went around Courtois, and still was not able to put it into the net with Carvajal running back and amending for his mistake with a sliding block.

Terzic was reduced to saying that his side "deserved a little bit more" but lacked "killer instinct".

That missing 'killer instinct' came back to haunt them, as it so often happens to the opponents of Real Madrid, once Ancelotti's men came back into the game with much more purpose in the second half.

Ironically, it was Carvajal who put Real ahead from a masterful Toni Kroos corner in the 74th minute, redeeming himself to the point of becoming the first defender to score in a final since Sergio Ramos in 2016 against Atletico Madrid.

What happened next is something very typical -- a repeat of the old script of Real killing the game in just a few minutes. Within nine minutes of the first goal, a misplaced pass from Maatsen -- perhaps still recounting how they missed those open chances and were a goal down – saw former Dortmund man Jude Bellingham receive the ball and feed it to Vinicius as Real put the final nail in the coffin.

Even Vinicius' finish was not a clean one, getting bumped off the ground before going past Dortmund keeper Gregor Kobel. But the important part is that Real did what Dortmund could not -- they killed the game when they had the chance.

Hummels credited Real's quality of being clinical when needed but also said that "it took them a bit of luck today". But maybe it is time for Dortmund, Hummels, and all the other clubs including Manchester City, Bayern, PSG, and Chelsea who at least had once to be at the wrong end of a similar storyline that 'luck' has very little to do as this is what Real Madrid do -- somehow or someway, they win.

- Carlo Ancelotti has now won a record-extending fifth European Cup/Champions League title, the most by any manager. The Italian won three of those titles with Real Madrid – the joint-most by a manager with a single club alongside Bob Paisley (Liverpool) and Zinedine Zidane (Real Madrid) - and led AC Milan to the title twice.
- This was the sixth Champions League win by Madrid's quartet of Toni Kroos, Luka Modric, Dani Carvajal, and Nacho, taking them taking them level with Paco Gento (6) for most European Cup/Champions League wins in history.
- Real goalkeeper Thibaut Courtois was just the second player to make his first start of a Champions League campaign in the final, after Ryan Bertrand for Chelsea in 2011-12.
- Right-back Dani Carvajal became the first defender to score in the final after his former teammate Sergio Ramos headed one in against Atletico Madrid in 2015-16. Making his 89th Champions League appearance, it was Carvajal's second goal in the competition.
- Real became the 12th different side to go unbeaten in their European Cup/Champions League title win. This was their first time in that regard and the 16th occasion overall in which the competition has seen an unbeaten champion. The Los Blancos also became the second Spanish side to do so after Barcelona achieved the feat in 2005-06.

> This squad leaves me very satisfied because we don't always play our best but we never give up. Tomorrow this club will enjoy another fantastic, then to rest, the players will go to the Euros, Copa America, then we will return with same desire. We're a family. Working in a family is a lot better than working in an industry.

Hasaranga & Co face fearless Proteas

Sri Lanka will rely on their exceptionally varied bowling attack to tame the unrestrained batting power of South Africa in their Group D T20 World Cup opener in New York on Monday.

They will be eager to get onto the points table at the earliest too as some tricky teams like Netherlands, Bangladesh and Nepal are clubbed with them in the group.

South Africa have spread all their cards on the table as the team selection indicated the most likely route they would take in this ICC showpiece.

A batting line-up consisting of captain Aiden Markram, wicketkeeper-batter Heinrich Klaasen, Quinton de Kock, David Miller and Tristan Stubbs could be a nightmare for any bowling attack.

Klaasen and Stubbs have been in roaring form of late. In this World Cup cycle, the right-hander has averaged 41 and struck runs at 182.

In the IPL 2024 too, Klaasen made 471 runs from 16 matches at a strike rate of 171 for the Sunrisers Hyderabad.

Stubbs has been equally impressive for the Delhi Capitals, amassing 378 runs from 14 matches and he made them at a strike-rate of 190.

Both these gifted power-strikers come in the middle order when the spinners are in operation, and to add to Lanka's worries, they are phenomenal against the tweakers, especially Klaasen.

In the run-up to the World Cup, the 32-year-old from Transvaal has averaged 59 against spin and made runs at an eye-watering strike rate of 191.

It will certainly worry a set of Lankan spinners such as captain Wanindu Hasaranga (economy 7.42) and Maheesh Theekshana (6.71), both of whom had to battle injuries in the recent past.

So, Sri Lanka, who have not reached the knockouts of a T20 WC after their triumph in 2014, will be eager to try a couple of overs from pacers Matheesha Pathirana and Dilshan Madhushanka in that phase when Klaasen and Stubbs are looking for acceleration.

However, Lanka might take heart from the fact that the Proteas went down 0-3 to the West Indies in a recent T20I series at Kingston.

Lanka will also hope that the New York pitch will continue to offer some help to the bowlers as it had happened in Saturday's warm-up match between India and Bangladesh, where a few deliveries did not rise above the ankle and knee level.

Beyond that, the Lankans are also one of the teams that have played a good number of T20Is this year. In 2024, they have a series wins over Zimbabwe and Afghanistan at home and Bangladesh away.

In fact, they have won six of the last nine T20Is.

But those external factors will not have much bearing on a fresh day and Lanka know that their batters too will have to come good against the African rival.

They have the experienced Angelo Mathews, the explosive Kusal Mendis and the rock-solid Dhananjaya de Silva to bank on while the former captain Dasun Shanaka can make a few quick runs down the order.

The SA attack does not have that much variety in their bowling unit as it largely revolves around pacer Kagiso Rabada and left-arm wrist-spinner Tabraiz Shamsi.

Anrich Nortje is still finding his range after coming back from an injury and had an underwhelming IPL where he conceded more than 11 runs an over.

The SA management will hope that the pacer will regain his rhythm on the biggest stage and that will have a major say in avoiding another below-par outing in a World Cup.

Oman face Namibia

In a Group B clash at Bridgetown, Namibia, a dominant force in the African Qualifiers, will be hoping for a winning start against Oman.

However, it would not be that easy for Namibia as Oman had run it close in April, before conceding the five-match series 2-1.

Hence, Oman, who are making their third appearance in a T20 WC, will be hoping for a better outcome this time.

16,970 workers missed deadline for reaching KL

Many of them could not get air tickets despite having valid papers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Despite getting clearance from the Bureau of Manpower, Employment and Training (BMET) a total of 16,970 migrant workers could not reach Malaysia before May 31, when the deadline for workers to enter the Southeast Asian country ended.

"As of May 31, the BMET granted clearance to 493,642 workers; of them, 476,672 could leave for Malaysia by the deadline. This means that around 16,970 individuals were unable to go," State Minister Shofiqur Rahman Choudhury told reporters at the Ministry of Expatriates' Welfare and Overseas Employment at New Eskaton in the capital yesterday.

When asked about the ministry's next move, the state minister stated that a six-member probe committee had been formed to investigate why workers with valid visas did not get tickets to Malaysia.

"Those who are responsible will be brought to book," Shofiqur said, adding that the probe body will submit the report within seven days and steps will be taken based on its recommendations.

He further said that they were working to reopen the Malaysian labour market and would sit with the Malaysian High Commissioner in Dhaka on June 5 to decide their next course of action.

Remittance jumps 32pc in May

Migrants sending home more money ahead of Eid

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Remittance inflow to Bangladesh rose 32.35 percent year-on-year to $2.25 billion in May of this year as the country's migrant workers sent more money home ahead of Eid-ul-Azha.

The remittance receipts were $1.7 billion in the same period last year, according to Bangladesh Bank data.

May's receipts were also 10.29 percent higher than that of the previous month.

In March, $2.04 billion entered Bangladesh as remittance, central bank data showed.

In the last 11 months from July (2023) to May (2024) of the financial year 2023-24, the remittance inflow was $21.36 billion, up 10 percent from $19.42 billion in the same period of the previous financial year.

ACC to make list of those who aided Benazir

DIPAN NANDY

An Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC) investigation team is now making a list of police officials, land officials, politicians, and others who aided and abetted former inspector general of police, Benazir Ahmed, in committing corruption.

Once the list is made, the ACC will quiz the individuals.

The sub-registrars of Dhaka, Gopalganj, Madaripur, and Gazipur land offices are likely to be among them, as Benazir and his family own properties in those districts.

A high official at the ACC requesting anonymity told The Daily Star, "Benazir committed corruption with the assistance of many individuals, as it would not have been possible to indulge in corruption to such extent alone. Most of his aides are police personnel."

The official said, "Some police officers even co-own some of Israel accepts Biden's Gaza truce plan

Claims Netanyahu aide, says a lot of details to be worked out; 60 more Palestinians killed in Israeli airstrikes

AGENCIES

An aide to Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu yesterday confirmed that Israel had accepted a framework deal for winding down the Gaza offensive now being advanced by US President Joe Biden, though he described it as flawed and in need of much more work.

In an interview with Britain's Sunday Times, Ophir Falk, chief foreign policy advisor to Netanyahu, said Biden's proposal was "a deal we agreed to — it's not a good deal but we dearly want the hostages released, all of them".

"There are a lot of details to be worked out," he said, adding that Israeli conditions, including "the release of the hostages and the destruction of Hamas as a genocidal terrorist organisation" have not changed.

- Hamas 'positively' views Gaza proposal set out by Biden
- UAE President, Qatar Emir discuss truce proposal
- Death toll in enclave rises to 36,439

Israel's defence minister Yoav Gallant said yesterday that Israel would not accept Hamas continuing to rule Gaza at any stage during the process to end the offensive, and that it was examining alternatives to the group.

For now, fighting again rocked Gaza overnight and yesterday, with the military reporting more air strikes and ground combat, and Palestinian officials reporting yet more deaths, reports Reuters.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 36,439 people have been killed in the territory since the offensive began on October 7. The toll includes at least 60 deaths over the past 24 hours, a ministry statement said.

Across Gaza, the military said it had struck "30 terror targets, including military infrastructure, weapons storage facilities and armed terrorist cells that posed a threat to IDF (army) ground troops".

Palestinian group Hamas, meanwhile, said it "views positively" what Biden on Friday described as the Israeli plan.

United Arab Emirates President Sheikh Mohammed bin Zayed Al Nahyan and Qatar's Emir Sheikh Tamim bin Hamad al-Thani discussed in Abu Dhabi proposals for the ceasefire deal that were laid out by Biden, the UAE state news agency (WAM) reported yesterday.

Heavy fighting has flared in far-southern Rafah, where Israel sent tanks and troops in early May, ignoring concerns for displaced civilians sheltering in the city.

Man kills wife, son over family dispute

STAR REPORT

Police yesterday arrested a man over the murder of his wife and 11-month-old son at a hotel in Bogura's Banani.

The deceased were identified as Ashamoni, 22, wife of army soldier Azizul Haque, and their only son Abdullah Hel Rafi.

"In primary interrogation, Azizul told police that he killed his wife on Saturday night over a domestic dispute. He later murdered his only son, saying he could not take care of the child very well without his wife," Shahidul Islam, officer-in-charge of Shahjahanpur Police Station, told this newspaper.

Azizul used a fake name to rent a room at the hotel on Saturday night.

The hotel authorities got suspicious when Aziz checked out of the room without his wife and son, so they called the police.

The police later arrived at the hotel and recovered the bodies from the room

Siam texted from MP's phone after his killing

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN AND RASHIDUL HASAN

Siam Hossain, a suspect in the murder of Jhenaidah-4 MP Anwarul Azim Anar, went to India via Nepal and returned to the Himalayan country after killing the lawmaker at a Kolkata flat.

Siam assisted hitman Amanullah, alias Shimul Bhuiyan, say investigators.

MURDER

He was also responsible for disposing of the body parts, they said.

In a letter on May 25, the Detective Branch (DB) of the Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP) informed the assistant inspector general of the Bangladesh Police's National Central Bureau (NCB) about the new findings.

Bangladesh Police's NCB wing then wrote to NCB Kathmandu the next day, seeking their assistance and cooperation in the arrest of Siam.

The Daily Star obtained copies of the letters, which also stated that Siam was the one who dumped the bones of the lawmaker into a canal. He then roamed around with the lawmaker's phones to confuse law enforcers about the whereabouts of Azim, the letters said.

This was why Azim's phone was found active until May 16 night. Several text messages were sent to different numbers from Azim's phone, which said the lawmaker was going to Delhi and was in meetings with VIPs there, said investigators.

US masterclass a lesson for Tigers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Pitting two associate teams in the opening match of the ICC T20 World Cup, even though one of them were co-hosts USA, was a risk as there was always a chance that the tournament would start with a whimper.

However, yesterday's USA-Canada match proved to be an ideal tournament opener, with both teams showing intent with the bat, providing plenty of T20 entertainment for the fans with the hosts in the end coming out on top.

Only the most ardent of cricket fans from this part of the world tuned in to watch the match which began at 6:30 am Bangladesh time, and were treated to an excellent game of T20, unlike what they had to go through the previous night in Bangladesh's warm-up game against India.

In the World Cup opener in Texas, Canada posted 194-5 after being sent to bat first, a seemingly daunting target for the USA, whose previous highest-ever chase in T20Is was 169 against the same opponents.

USA's chase was in the doldrums eight overs in, with only 48 runs on

Power, agriculture to drive up subsidies

REJAUL KARIM BYRON and ASIFUR RAHMAN

The subsidies and incentive expenditures in the upcoming budget are going to be more than that of the current fiscal year.

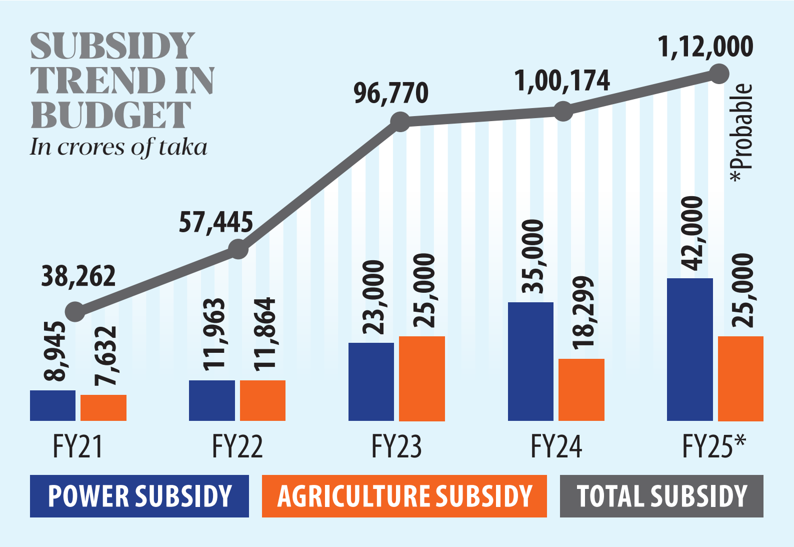
The subsidies are mainly increasing in the power, energy, and the agriculture sectors.

Even though the government plans to raise power tariffs four to five times a year, the highest subsidy allocation is likely to go towards the electricity sector.

Finance ministry officials said the increased subsidy allocation was largely due to the arrears in the power and agriculture sectors.

In the upcoming fiscal year, which begins on July 1, the subsidy allocation is likely to be Tk 1,12,000 crore, up from Tk 1,00,174 crore in the outgoing fiscal year.

Of the sum to be set aside for 2024-25, the power sector is likely to get Tk 42,000 crore. The government has earmarked Tk 35,000 crore for 2023-24.



Before 2021-22, the subsidy allocation for the power sector was between Tk 7,000 crore and Tk 9,000 crore.

Khondaker Golam Moazzem, research director at the Centre for Policy Dialogue, said the main reason behind the rising subsidy allocation in FY25 is the higher energy prices in the international market and elevated capacity payments.

He said the government has planned to increase power tariffs

17,000 workers' fate up in the air

Even with clearance, they could not go to Malaysia

JAMIL MAHMUD

Despite getting emigration clearance, around 17,000 aspirant migrant workers could not fly to Malaysia before the May 31 deadline due to alleged mismanagement in the recruitment process.

Their fates now hang in the balance.

> "If the government wants to compensate the workers, it should return the exact amount they had to pay throughout the process, which could be higher than the government-fixed cost."

Under the existing labour migration situation, the recruitment process for these workers had started much earlier and each had to pay hefty sums to secure jobs in Malaysia.

Many had to travel to Dhaka from other districts for different purposes, including pre-migration medical tests.

Some even made sure to be present at Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport in the capital on Friday, the day of the deadline.

Inflation hits seven-month high

Higher food prices largely to blame

MD ASADUZ ZAMAN

Inflation, fuelled by higher food prices, climbed 15 basis points to 9.89 percent in May from 9.74 percent a month earlier, figures from Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics showed yesterday.

This is the highest rise on the Consumer Price Index in seven months.

Food inflation surged 54 basis points to 10.76 percent from 10.22 percent while non-food inflation slipped 15 basis points to 9.19 percent from 9.34 percent in April.

In fiscal 2022-23, the average inflation rate was 9.02 percent, far higher than the average of 6 percent in recent years.

The Consumer Price Index grew by an average of 9.73 percent in the first 11 months of fiscal 2023-2024, which was 8.64 percent during the same period a year ago, BBS data showed.

"The persistent high inflation is continuously pushing the low-income groups against the wall," said Mustafa K Mujeri, executive director of the Institute for Inclusive Finance and Over 6 lakh people stranded in 761 villages

MINTU DESHWARA

The flood situation in Sylhet has further worsened owing to incessant rainfall since yesterday and the subsequent onrush of water from upstream, resulting in immense public sufferings.

As a result, fresh areas in the district, including a large part of the city, were inundated yesterday.

The newly inundated areas in the city include -- Jatarpur, Mendibagh, Jamtala, Taltala, Sheikhghat, Kalapara, Majumdarpara, Laldigihipar, Dargamoholla, Munsipara, Hawapara, Nayorpool, Sonarpara, Baluchar, Mirer Maidan, Police Lines and Sagardighirpar.

With the further deterioration in the flood situation, around six lakh people from 761 villages under 10 upazilas remain marooned, said Sheikh Russel Hasan, deputy commissioner of Sylhet.

Many roads have been submerged, snapping communications at many places.

Benazir's abuse of power a cause for grave concern

Says TIB, demands action against those who abetted, protected the former IGP

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Transparency International Bangladesh yesterday expressed grave concerns over accumulation of substantial illegal wealth by a former police and Rab chief.

In a statement, it said the misuse of power by those who are in top positions creates "Frankenstein-like figures" such as Benazir Ahmed, former inspector general of police, and it makes questionable the state's mechanism to hold people accountable.

The graft watchdog demanded legal action against those who abetted and protected the power abuser and fair compensation for those whose land was grabbed.

According to media reports, the land in most cases was acquired by the former IGP through intimidation. Many of the landowners belong to minority

12kg LPG cylinder now costs Tk 1,363

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A standard 12kg LPG cylinder will now cost Tk 1,363, down by Tk 30 from Tk 1,393, according to the Bangladesh Energy Regulatory Commission (BERC).

BERC at a press briefing said the new price came into effect from 6:00pm yesterday.

According to the new rate, a kilogramme of bottled liquefied petroleum gas (LPG) will be sold at Tk 113.55 at the retail level, down by Tk 2.53 from the previous Tk 116.08.

This adjustment follows a rational scale across various LPG cylinder sizes, ranging from 5.5kg to 45kg, addressing the need for a proportional price revision across different consumer segments.

Furthermore, the price for "auto gas", the LPG variant used in motor vehicles, has also been lowered to Tk 62.53 from Tk 63.92 per litre.

LPG prices marketed by the state-owned LP Gas Company will remain unchanged. This exception is attributed to its local production and the company's minimal market share, which is less than five percent.

Cowhide price fixed at Tk 55 per sqft

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government yesterday set the price of salt-cured cowhides at Tk 55-60 per square foot (sqft) in the capital and Tk 50-55 per sqft outside the capital.

Last year, the price was Tk 50-55 per sqft in Dhaka and Tk 47-52 per sqft outside the capital.

The decision was made at a meeting at the secretariat to fix rawhide prices ahead of Eid-ul-Azha, when millions of cattle are sacrificed by the country's Muslim community as a part of their religious duties.

Eid-ul-Azha accounts for nearly half of the rawhides collected annually, providing key raw material for the billion-dollar export-earning leather and leather goods industry in Bangladesh.

Mohiuddin Ahmed Mahim, chairman of the Bangladesh Finished Leather, Leathergoods and Footwear Exporters' Association, announced the new rates with State Minister for Commerce Ahsanul Islam Tito at the meeting.

According to the new rates, the lowest price per piece of cowhide has been fixed at Tk 1,200 in the capital and Tk 1,000 outside the capital.

Meanwhile, the price of castrated goat hides has been fixed at Tk 20-25 per sqft while the price of goat hides has been set at Tk 18-20 per sqft across the country this year.

Around 1.7 crore animals are expected to be sacrificed across the country during this year's Eid-ul-Azha. Of the number, 55 lakh are cows and buffalos while the rest are castrated goats, goats, sheep, and other animals.

17,000 workers' fate up in the air

The reason for them not being able to go is yet to be known.

Against this backdrop, the expatriates' welfare ministry has been trying to reopen the Malaysian labour market and has planned to meet the Malaysian high commissioner in Dhaka on Wednesday to discuss the next course of action for these workers.

Labour migration expert Prof CR Abrar said those responsible for creating an uncertain situation for the aspirant migrants need to be identified first and then punished.

He said many of these workers have left their occupations to get a job in Malaysia, while many others have sold their assets to arrange migration costs.

"There are associated costs that the workers will have to incur in case of their ultimate failure. We're not considering those."

Pointing at the government's compensation plan, Abrar said if the government wants to compensate the workers, it should return the exact amount they had to pay throughout the process, which could be higher than the government-fixed cost.

Malaysia resumed hiring Bangladeshi workers in 2022 after a four-year suspension over allegations of irregularities in the recruitment process.

Briefing reporters at his office on Sunday, Shafiqur Rahman Choudhury, state minister for expatriates' welfare and overseas employment, said as of May 31, the Bureau of Manpower, Employment and Training granted emigration clearance to 4,93,642 workers.

"Of them, 4,76,672 could leave for Malaysia by the deadline, meaning around 16,970 individuals were unable to go."

He added that a six-member probe body will, in the next seven days, investigate why workers with valid visas could not go to Malaysia, and will ensure that those responsible are brought to book.

The ministry's Secretary Ruhul Amin said they were planning to return the money to those who could not go.

After signing an MoU on labour cooperation with Malaysia in 2021, the Bangladesh government set a maximum of Tk 78,990 as migration cost.

However, Bangladesh Labour Force Survey-2022 said the average recruitment cost for jobs in Malaysia was Tk 3.40 lakh.

Shariful Hasan, head of BRAC's migration and youth initiatives programme, said the situation was similar when Malaysia had stopped issuing visas in the past, putting a number of workers' future into uncertainty. However, no acceptable solution was found back then and the workers were also not compensated, he added.

"We don't have good examples in this regard," he said, adding, the government should first assess the situation and then arrange compensation for the workers.

Malaysia announced the May 31 deadline in early March for 14 of its source countries, including Bangladesh.

However, the Bangladesh government responded in May and arranged some additional flights for the workers, which also turned out to be insufficient.

It also requested the Malaysian authorities to extend the deadline, but they did not respond.

Malaysia has been an attractive destination for Bangladeshi migrant workers, who prefer it over some traditional markets in the Gulf due to various factors, including higher wages.

According to the Labour Force Survey-2022, on an average a Bangladeshi migrant worker earns Tk 28,822 a month in Malaysia, and Tk 24,957 in Saudi Arabia.

Last year, Malaysia was Bangladesh's second-largest overseas job market after Saudi Arabia.

Ali Haider Chowdhury, secretary general of Bangladesh Association of International Recruiting Agencies, said they will work with the government so that the workers do not have to face losses.

"We will also assist the government-formed probe body investigating the issue," he told The Daily Star over phone yesterday.

Power, agriculture to drive up subsidies

several times, but the sector will require more subsidies as more power plants, including Rooppur nuclear plant, are ready to produce electricity.

"If the old and inefficient power plants are not phased out, the overall capacity charges will increase, which will deepen the subsidy burden," he told The Daily Star.

The recent mission of the International Monetary Fund also questioned the huge subsidy allocation in the power sector.

However, it is not possible to withdraw subsidies immediately from the power sector as it will hurt the economy. The government plans to increase power prices over the next three years so that the subsidies can be withdrawn, said finance ministry officials.

The subsidy for importing liquefied natural gas (LNG) for FY25 is likely to be Tk 7,000 crore, which is Tk 6,000 crore in the current fiscal year.

The agriculture subsidies were between Tk 5,000 and Tk 7,500 crore until FY21, but it has been on the rise since. In FY23, the allocation was Tk 25,000 crore and it rose to Tk 25,000 crore this fiscal year before it was revised downwards to Tk 18,000 crore.

It is likely to be Tk 25,000 crore next year.

The government usually provides subsidies to the export sector in the form of incentives to businesses. In the current fiscal year, Tk 9,025 crore was set aside, and it is likely to reduce to less than Tk 7,000 crore, according to the officials.

This is because due to Bangladesh's impending graduation from the group of least-developed countries, subsidies will eventually be phased out since World Trade Organisation rules don't allow developing and developed countries to give direct cash aid to exporters.

"We are thinking about the alternate measures in this regard, which will be incorporated in the new export policy," said an official.

Remittance subsidy in the upcoming budget will be unchanged at Tk 6,200 crore, while food subsidy will increase to Tk 7,000 crore from Tk 6,900 crore.

SOCIAL SAFETY NET

Even though economists suggested increasing the allocation for social safety net programmes so that people can cope with higher inflation, the budget in the area is likely to be lower.

Funds equivalent to about 2.5 percent of the GDP are likely to be allocated for social safety net schemes against 2.52 percent currently. However, the allocated amount may increase to Tk 1,32,000 crore from Tk 1,26,272 crore.

The government may increase the number of beneficiaries by around four to five lakh. However, the allowance per person may remain the same, according to officials.

Yet, the allowance may increase for the beneficiaries in two major groups: senior citizens, and widows, deserted, or destitute women.

In the case of senior citizens, a person will get Tk 600 per month and widows, deserted, or destitute women will get Tk 550 per month.

A top finance ministry official said they would reform the social safety net distribution system in FY25 before expanding the programmes.

In a circular recently, the ministry said all funds for social programmes must be disbursed through the mobile financial service (MFS) account registered with the national ID card of the beneficiaries. This must be ensured by June 30, 2025, it said.

At present, allowances under many schemes are paid via MFS, but often not to the registered accounts of the beneficiaries, which leaves room for irregularities.

The government provides social safety net benefits through around 130 programmes.

Analysts question whether some programmes are truly benefiting the poor. They also say a huge amount is being wasted due to corruption in distribution.

The finance ministry has asked all ministries to submit reports detailing who is receiving the allowances and the goals of the programme.

Based on the reports, the ministry will prepare a report as per the recommendations of the World Bank and the IMF.

Inflation hits seven-month high

Development, a non-profit institution.

Following the pandemic, the coping capacity of the low-and fixed-income groups has fallen significantly, which forced them to cut spending on basic needs, he said.

"Now, they are perplexed. It is a big challenge for the government to protect them."

In the budget for fiscal 2024-2025, scheduled to be announced on June 6, the government should keep enough measures to support these groups, he said.

Echoing his words, Prof Selim Raihan, executive director of the South Asian Network on Economic Modeling (Sanem), said the new budget should concentrate on expanding social safety net programmes as much as possible for the next year.

Referring to a new study, Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies (BIDS) recently showed that food inflation in rural areas remained around 15 percent in December, much higher than the official food inflation rate of 9.41 percent.

"The stubborn inflation trend indicates that the monetary policy isn't working properly. Inflation has just maintained its upward trend," said Mujeri, a former chief economist of the central bank.

Bangladesh Bank has tightened the policy rate repeatedly in recent times to tame high inflation.

"But the situation has taken such a turn that it is not possible to bring down inflation, using the monetary tools alone," he said.

Since March last year, inflation has stayed above 9 percent, BBS data shows.

In order to ensure a smooth supply chain in the commodity market, the government will have to focus on fiscal policy, along with the monetary policy, said Mujeri.

Fresh areas in Sylhet flooded

Gen Dr Mahbubur Rahman Bhuiyan.

Even the classes and exams at the medical college were suspended due to the flood, said Principal Shishir Ranjan Chakraborty.

Mamun Ahmad, a resident of Laladighirpar area of Sylhet city, said, "Floodwater has entered my house. The whole area has been inundated."

Sadek Hossain, a resident of Jamtala in the city, said, "My house has gone under knee-deep water. All the furniture and household items have been submerged."

Mahbub Alam, an attendee of a patient at Sylhet MAG Osmani Medical College Hospital, said, "We were staying at the hospital's ground floor, as we did not get a bed. We had to shift to the balcony of the first floor as the ground floor got flooded."

Yesterday, Surma was flowing 13cm above the danger level near Sylhet city at 3:00pm, and Kushiyara was flowing 48cm above the danger level at Amalshid point under Zakiganj upazila at 6:00pm, according to the Bangladesh Water Development Board (BWDB).

Some 214mm of rainfall was recorded in Sylhet in 24 hours till 6:00pm, said Dipak Ranjan Das, executive engineer of the BWDB.

Heavy rain may continue in the region for the next few days, said Sylhet Meteorological Office Assistant Meteorologist Shah Mohammad Sajib Hossain.

"If the heavy rains continue, the flood situation will keep worsening," said Dipak.

killing, said sources in the Detective Branch of Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP).

After recording her statement for around four hours, the court sent her to jail.

Mahfuzur Rahman, investigating officer of the abduction case and also a senior assistant commissioner of DB, produced her before the court yesterday.

Celesty told investigators that at least 10 people took part in the killing mission.

The case was filed with Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station on May 22. Celesty was remanded by DB for 10 days in two phases.

She was arrested on May 23, eight days after she along with Amanullah returned home from India.

Azim went to Kolkata on May 12 and stayed the night at his friend Gopal Biswas's house. He went out the following day saying that he would visit a doctor.

On May 22, India and Bangladesh police confirmed that the Jhenaidah-4 lawmaker was killed on May 13.

'PROVIDE INFO ON SUSPECTS' BANK ACCOUNTS'

Yesterday, the IO applied to another Dhaka court seeking its order to provide him with the bank account information of 10 suspects, including Aktaruzzaman, who is believed to have fled to the US after the murder.

The nine others are Amanullah, his nephew Tanvir Bhuiyan, Celesty, Siam Hossain, Mustafizur Rahman, Faisal Ali Saji, Chelsi Chery, Taj Mohammad Khan, and Md Jamal Hossain.

The court granted the prayer and asked the Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit to provide the bank account information to the investigator.

Amanullah and Tanvir are now in DB custody, while Siam is in Nepal police custody. Jihad Howlader, who dismembered the lawmaker's body, is in West Bengal CID custody.

In another development, a Dhaka court yesterday issued an arrest warrant against Siam, accused of dumping the lawmaker's body.

Md Mahbubul Haque, additional chief metropolitan magistrate of Dhaka, passed the order after the IO of the case filed a prayer in this regard.

In the application, the IO said Siam was arrested in Nepal. If an arrest warrant was issued against him, it would be easy for the authorities concerned to bring him back home.

The court also asked the authorities concerned to send a copy of its order to Nepal police through Interpol.

Siam went to India via Nepal. He returned to the Himalayan country after the killing of the lawmaker. He assisted hitman Amanullah alias Shimul Bhuiyan in the murder, said investigators.

Speaking to The Daily Star yesterday, Azim's daughter Mumtarin Ferdous Doreen said she secured an Indian visa.

She said she would travel to Kolkata for giving DNA samples to be checked against the suspected body parts of the MP, which was recovered from the septic tank of the Kolkata flat on May 28.

Doreen, however, did not confirm when she would leave for India.

Victim's family

apparently switched off.

According to the family members, police tortured Afroza and framed her in a drug case as they failed to pay Tk 2 lakh in bribe for her release.

Refuting the allegation of torture, police claimed that they detained the woman with 30 yaba tablets.

Jashore police yesterday formed a three-member committee, led by an additional superintendent of police, to investigate the allegations and the death.

Two rights organisations yesterday expressed grave concern over Afroza's death and demanded fair and neutral probe into the incident and appropriate legal action against those responsible.

Speaking to journalists on Sunday, deceased's son Sabbir, a ninth-grader, said a police team, led by Assistant Sub-Inspector Silon Ali of Abhaynagar Police Station, went to their home around midnight on Saturday.

"Bring out all that you have," Sabbir quoted Silon asking her mother.

"As my mother replied that she had nothing, a female police constable frisked her and found nothing. Then the ASI started beating her up in front of me. At one stage, she fell to the ground. He then tied a lock of my mother's hair to a ceiling fan and tortured her," Sabbir said.

His elder brother Munna said the police team went to their house at the instigation of some locals and detained her mother on false charges of possessing yaba pills.

"The ASI and some other police personnel tortured my mother and then took her away around 1:00am on Sunday," he said.

He said police demanded Tk 2 lakh in bribe for his mother's release. "As we could not pay the money, they tortured her to death."

Munna said they went to the police station on Sunday morning and found her mother in a bad condition.

Police took Afroza to the upazila health complex upon the family's request.

"They returned to the police station with my mother without doing any of tests the duty doctor recommended," he alleged.

As Afroza's condition deteriorated, she was taken to Jashore General Hospital where doctors declared her dead around 11:30am on Sunday.

Hasib Ali Hasan, a doctor at the hospital, said the woman was brought dead. An autopsy was conducted, he added.

Police filed a drug case against the woman on Sunday morning.

ASI Silon claimed that the allegations made by Afroza's family were false and baseless.

Akikul Islam, officer-in-charge of Abhaynagar Police Station, said police detained Afroza with 30 yaba tablets and kept her in the lock-up.

She fell ill in the morning and died on the way to a hospital, he said.

The OC claimed that police did not torture her.

FAIR PROBE DEMANDED

Rights organisation Ain O Salish Kendra (ASK) in a statement yesterday said the allegations brought by Afroza's family were very serious.

Torture of a person in police custody is illegal and also a manifestation of unprofessional behaviour, it added.

The allegation of demanding bribe by police after an arrest has become a regular phenomenon, the rights body said.

ASK demanded a judicial enquiry into the death.

Another rights platform Manabadhikar Shongskriti Foundation (MSF) said police's statement regarding Afroza's death is merely a procedural statement, which is not at all acceptable or credible.

Torturing a woman after tying her lock of hair to a fan, showing her arrested with 30 yaba tables after failing to find anything during frisking and interrogation, and demanding Tk 2 lakh in bribe for her release is the manifestation of immorality on the part of police personnel, it added.

MSF demanded an impartial investigation into the custodial death, and justice and accountability for such incidents.

243 women, girls faced violence in May

Says mahila parishad

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A total of 243 women and girls faced violence in May, according to a report prepared by Bangladesh Mahila Parishad.

Of them, 62 -- including 40 girls -- were raped. Additionally, 20 women -- including 12 girls -- were gang-raped. Two were killed after rape and one died by suicide afterwards, mentioned the report based on information taken from 16 national dailies.

In this time period, 22 girls faced sexual violence while seven women, including six girls, faced sexual harassment. Meanwhile, five women were tortured for dowry, and two of them were killed.

A total of 46 women, including seven girls, were killed due to various reasons, while 22 women and girls died mysteriously.

The period also saw 20 women, including five girls, die by suicide.

Air pollution linked to antibiotic resistance: Saber

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Environment Minister Saber Hossain Chowdhury yesterday said air pollution is linked to antibiotic resistance.

The minister said 1.7 million people die every year across the globe due to antibiotic resistance or AMR.

"The linkages between these two issues [air pollution and AMR] are very important from a health perspective. It's not just about the environment; it's also about public health," the minister said.

He was speaking at an event, titled "Save Your Breath: Policy Dialogue on Clean Air Imperatives".

USAID and Shakti Foundation organised the programme at a city hotel marking World Environment Day.

Notably, a 2018 research published in The Lancet Planetary Health claimed that fine particulate matter (PM2.5), often found in air pollution, contributes to antibiotic resistance.

The research also projects the alarming toll of premature deaths caused by antibiotic resistance linked to PM2.5.

Speaking as the chief guest, Saber termed air pollution a silent killer and mentioned that his ministry has now formulated rules to identify and tackle both indoor and outdoor air pollution.

He stressed the need to identify exact sources of air pollution and suggested potential partnerships for funding and technology.

Lawmaker Nahim Razzak, convener of the Climate Parliament Bangladesh, cited a lack of coordination as the main reason for urban mismanagement. He urged combined efforts from all stakeholders to combat climate change and environmental issues.

682 hajj pilgrims in a bind as funds stuck in bank

RASHIDUL HASAN

A total of 682 hajj pilgrims are facing uncertainty about traveling to Saudi Arabia this year as their flight tickets have not been booked.

Around Tk 13 crore for the tickets has been deposited to Premier Bank, but the bank is yet to release the funds.

The religious affairs ministry yesterday said these pilgrims may not reach Saudi Arabia on time. It also wrote to Premier Bank twice, urging the bank to release the funds by May 27, but to no avail.

In a letter yesterday, the ministry warned Premier Bank that it would be held responsible for any hindrance in sending the pilgrims.

Matiul Islam, additional secretary to the ministry, told The Daily Star that the pilgrims are now worried about missing their flights.

The first hajj flight was on May 9, and the last one is scheduled for June 12.

The ministry reported that the negligence of two hajj agencies primarily caused this issue.

Akbar Hajj Group initially planned to send 428 pilgrims but later withdrew.

These pilgrims were then transferred to Shikdar Air Travels, which also later declined to send them. Subsequently, they were moved to Al Risan Travel Agency.

The funds for these pilgrims are held in Premier Bank's Mohakhali branch, while Al Risan Travel's account is with Islami Bank's Uttara branch. Despite requests to transfer the money to Islami Bank for ticket purchases, Premier Bank has not acted.

Al Risan Travel Agency sought help from the ministry, which first contacted Premier Bank in March and again on May 26, directing the transfer by May 27. However, Premier Bank has not responded, said Matiul Islam.

Seeking anonymity, an official from Premier Bank's Mohakhali branch stated that Tk 6 crore was released on May 30, allowing for the purchase of air tickets for 318 pilgrims.

He said they are working to release the remaining funds soon.

BANGLADESH-JAPAN JOINT PPP PLATFORM

2 more projects dropped

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

Two more development projects to be implemented following a public-private partnership module under Bangladesh-Japan joint initiative have been dropped.

The projects are expansion of Chattogram-Cox's Bazar Highway and the upgrading of Nabinagar-Manikganj-Paturia Highway into an expressway.

The decision came at the sixth Bangladesh-Japan Joint PPP Platform meeting held in Dhaka on March 18 this year, shows its minutes.

With the two, five projects have been dropped from the government-to-government initiative, which had created hopes of receiving huge investments from Japanese companies.

The development came at a time when most of the other projects under the initiative could not make significant progress over the last six years due to multiple problems.

Most of the projects were included in the list without carrying out any studies. So, when the studies were done, the projects were found not to be viable for PPP, leading to their exclusion from the list, officials said.

Besides, some Japanese companies involved in the process needed more engagement, they added.

However, a new project for building two

Ensure departure of 16,970 workers to Malaysia: PM

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday directed the state minister for expatriates' welfare to facilitate the departure of migrant workers to Malaysia who missed the May 31 deadline.

She also urged an investigation into why workers with valid visas couldn't obtain tickets to Malaysia, sources revealed.

During an impromptu discussion after a formal cabinet meeting at the Prime Minister's Office, it was discussed that despite clearance from the Bureau of Manpower, Employment and Training, 16,970 migrant workers were unable to travel to Malaysia before the deadline.

Additionally, the premier announced plans to establish 12 new border haats to enhance trade with India during her upcoming visit to New Delhi. She also instructed for an increase in relief materials for cyclone Remal affected districts, said Cabinet Secretary Md Mahbub Hossain.

Furthermore, the cabinet decided to revert to the previous office hours of 9:00am to 5:00pm, effective from the first working day after Eid-ul-

CMCH to get specialised burn unit soon

ARUN BIKASH DEY, Chattogram

A longstanding demand for a specialised and modern burn unit in Chattogram is finally being addressed. The National Economic Council approved a Tk 284.76 crore project on May 9 to construct a specialised burn and plastic surgery unit at Chattogram Medical College Hospital .

The project, funded jointly by the Bangladesh and China, with contributions of Tk 104.93 crore and Tk 179.83 crore respectively, is set to be completed by June 2026.

Rajib Palit, deputy director of CMCH, said the project will start soon.

On February 24, nine individuals sustained burn injuries following a gas cylinder explosion at the Rohingya camp in Noakhali's Bhashan Char. Among them, three-year-old Russell succumbed to his injuries due to the lack of Intensive Care Unit (ICU) and High Dependency Unit (HDU) facilities at the burn unit.

Such incidents are not uncommon in CMCH, so the project to upgrade the burn unit has been a welcome development.

Dr Rafiq Uddin Ahmed, head of the Burn and Plastic Surgery Unit at CMCH, emphasised the inadequacy of the current 30-bed unit. "The existing facilities are insufficient to accommodate the patients," he said. "It is a crying need to make the CMCH burn unit well equipped with adequate facilities to treat burn patients from across Chattogram division."

The new 150-bed unit will include outpatient and indoor departments, an emergency department, 10 ICU beds, 20 HDU beds for male and female patients, and five HDU beds for children.

PROPOSED DESIGN

CMCH director Brig Gen Taslim Uddin said the feasibility study has been completed and the construction work is expected to begin in August.

A Chinese delegation is scheduled to visit for a meeting on June 8 to discuss the primary design of the building with the health minister, he said.

Fake doctor held over rape charges

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Noakhali

A doctor impersonator was arrested on Sunday night in a case filed over raping a college student in Chatkhil upazila of Noakhali.

The arrestee is Nur Hossain Palash, 45.

The 18-year-old victim's mother filed a case with Chatkhil Police Station Sunday night, said Muhammad Imdadul Haque, officer-in-charge of the police station.

The victim, a college student, reported the incident to the Chatkhil upazila nirbahi officer (UNO). Then, UNO Ehsan Uddin directed her to file a complaint at the local police station and ordered the OC to take action in this regard.

Later police arrested Palash. Chatkhil Upazila Assistant Commissioner (Land) and Executive Magistrate Akib Osman sealed his chamber for various violations.

The victim was taken to Noakhali General Hospital.

bridges -- Tora Bridge on Dhaka-Aricha highway and the second Bhairab Bridge -- was included in the initiative.

Following an agreement signed between Public-Private Partnership Authority (PPPA) in Bangladesh and the Ministry of Land, Infrastructure, Transport, and Tourism of Japan in 2017, Japanese companies will invest under the initiative without taking part in any bidding.

At the platform's first meeting in December 2017, Bangladesh's PPPA sought multi-billion-dollar support from Japan for 18 infrastructure projects.

But Japanese companies showed interest in investing US $6.4 billion in six projects -- a multi-modal transport hub each at Kamalapur and Airport Railway stations; an inland container depot at Dhirasram in Gazipur; the improvement of Chattogram-Cox's Bazar highway; the outer ring road around Dhaka; and Mass Rapid Transit (MRT) Line-2.

Three projects on the list -- multi-modal transport hub at Airport Railway Station, the inland container depot, and MRT Line-2 -- were withdrawn earlier.

During the sixth platform meeting, it was decided to delist two more.

The Chattogram-Cox's Bazar Highway was supposed to be expanded under the initiative and a sub-working group (SWG) -- led by Marubeni Corporation -- was selected for the work. The project's feasibility study was also done. But during the fifth platform meeting in October 2022, a representative of Roads and Highways Department said JICA would provide a loan for a separate project undertaken to remove bottlenecks at five points on the Chattogram-Cox's Bazar highway.

Implementation of the project will be faster if it is done with a JICA loan instead of PPP. Besides, it will eliminate the risk of design uniformity and synchronisation, said the RHD representative.

The issues were also discussed in the sixth platform meeting and a representative of Marubeni Corporation suggested carrying out a study about the possibility of a PPP modality for the operation and maintenance of this road after project completion.

Given the situation, the meeting decided to delist the project and said the discussion regarding operation and maintenance following the PPP module may continue between RHD and the SWG.

Regarding the Nabinagar-Manikganj-Paturia highway project, an RHD representative said this project is not viable in terms of traffic projection as there was a significant drop in traffic on this highway following the opening of Padma Bridge.

As the SWG agreed to the RHD's proposal, the meeting decided to delist the project.

Another project for constructing Dhaka Outer Ring Road is also on the verge of withdrawal from the initiative, as RHD disagreed with a Japanese company's proposal to implement only one of the three parts of the road.

The decision concerning the withdrawal of the project from the platform shall be decided after RHD and Road Transport and Highways Division discuss it with MLIT, according to the meeting's minutes.

Regarding the Kamalapur Multi-Modal Transport Hub project, it was decided that Bangladesh Railway and SWG will continue to work with the stakeholders to fulfil the conditions to move forward with the project in line with proposed schedule.

Regarding Chattogram Metropolitan Sewerage Project, the meeting decided that the SWG concerned will carry out a risk assessment on property connections, and next decision will be taken based on the findings.

In connection with the project for operation and maintenance of the third terminal of Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport, the meeting decided that Civil Aviation Authority of Bangladesh and the SWG concerned will continue discussions regarding the schedule and key contractual terms.

Azha, replacing the current timing of 9:00am to 4:00pm. The shift to the shorter hours was initially implemented from November 15, 2022, to conserve electricity.

Moreover, the cabinet approved the relocation of Shahbagh Police Station to facilitate the implementation of the Swadhinata Stambha project at Suhrawardy Udyan in Dhaka.

The station will be relocated opposite to the Hotel Intercontinental.

Mahbub said the relocation of Shahbagh Police Station is necessary due to the construction of the Swadhinata Stambha (Independence Monument) project. The Ministry of Liberation War Affairs proposed its removal in yesterday's cabinet meeting.

Ministry officials requested to relocate the police station to the building where Sakura Restaurant and Bar is situated, according to sources.

According to sources, despite repeated attempts by the Liberation War ministry, the home ministry did not take any initiatives to move the police station. Moreover, Dhaka South City Corporation opposed the relocation of the police station. Meanwhile, the cabinet approved the final draft of the "Bangladesh Forest Industries Development Corporation Act, 2024" and the "National Biosafety Policy-2024".

Furthermore, the cabinet endorsed the draft agreement between Bangladesh and Mongolia on mutual exemption of visa requirements.

Air pollution linked

Prof Adil Mohammed Khan, president of the Bangladesh Institute of Planners, identified a lack of policy implementation, unplanned industrialisation, urban sprawl, and inefficient transportation systems as major causes of air pollution.

Dhaka University Chemistry department Prof Abdus Salam presented on Dhaka's Air Quality Landscape, and Labiba Rahman of Shakti Foundation delivered the welcome address.

Dhaka North City Corporation Mayor Atiqul Islam, Rajuk Chairman Siddiqur Rahman Sarkar, and BRTA Chairman Nur Mohammad Mazumder also spoke at the event's last session.

Anjali Kaur, deputy assistant administrator of the Asia Bureau at USAID, also spoke.

from UGC. We look forward to resolving the issue, adhering to their recommendation through the syndicate," she told The Daily Star.

CMU VC Prof Ismail did not respond, despite repeated attempts via phone calls and texts.

However, Bidduth Barua, the university's spokesperson and deputy director of the university's Planning and Development department, said, "We did not violate any rules of the university act."

The officer, however, admitted that the university had relaxed some criteria while appointing staffers on an ad-hoc basis but claimed there were no policy violations.

Regarding UGC's ban on future recruitment, he said, "We abide by the decision taken by the university syndicate. The meeting, scheduled after this Eid, will decide what to do about the UGC's recommendation."

General Public Notice for Procurement Opportunity

Invitation to a Market Assessment Conference for Improvement of Urban Public Health Preventive Services Project (LGD Component)

The Government of Bangladesh has signed a Financing Agreement with International Development Association (IDA) for financing US$200 million for Urban Health, Nutrition and Population Project. The Project will be implemented by two implementing agencies: – (1) Ministry of Health and Family Welfare, and (2) Ministry of Local Government, Rural Development and Cooperatives. The Local Government Division (LGD) under the Ministry of Local Government, Rural Development and Cooperatives will implement the "Improvement of Urban Public Health Preventive Services Project" with the help of IDA financing of US$ 100 million. The main goal of the project is to develop appropriate systems and capacities of LGD, City Corporations and Municipalities for delivering public health preventive services such as vector (mosquito) management and control, outhouse medical waste management, mitigating air and sound pollution in city life and climate change effects on public health, behavior change communications to promote healthy lifestyles and creating awareness as well as community-driven interventions for addressing Non-Communicable Diseases (NCDs).

Under the project, the implementing agency (LGD) will procure goods and services to achieve the above goal. The major procurement items are: (i) equipment for establishment of a biological laboratory (main laboratory and training laboratory) for vector analysis and management including an insectarium; (ii) equipment and testing materials/chemicals for public health laboratory (i.e., food testing laboratory); (iii) equipment for vector (mosquito) management, collection of adult mosquitoes and control; (iv) equipment for air and sound pollution detection and control; (v) personal protection equipment; (vi) Insecticide/pesticide for vector control; (vii) 1 incinerator, 1 autoclave and 1 chemical treatment plants (1set); (viii) ICT/MIS equipment (such as: computer, laptop, printer, main server, backup server); (ix) office furniture; (x) Service provider for outhouse medical waste management; (xi) training firms for arranging foreign and local training/tours; and (xii) study/research on mosquito biology and research on dengue vaccine.

Procurement under the project will be carried out in accordance with the World Bank Procurement Regulations for IPF Borrowers, November 2020 (the "WB Procurement Regulations") and the provisions stipulated in the Legal Agreement, Project Procurement Strategy for Development (PPSD) and the procurement plan. The project will be subject to the World Bank's Anticorruption Guidelines, dated October 15, 2006, and revised in January 2011 and July 2016. The evaluation of bids/proposals and contract signing procedure shall follow the Public Procurement Rules, 2008 of Bangladesh and the WB Procurement Regulations.

It is planned that the procurement of large packages for goods and services for the project will commence very soon. As part of designing a fit-for-purpose Project Procurement Strategy for Development (PPSD), the LGD proposes to conduct market engagement to understand market context and get the right suppliers/ service providers.

To this end, the Local Government Division hereby invites interested suppliers, manufacturers, and service providers for a 1.5-hour Market Sounding Conference for each category from 10:00 am on 27 June 2024 at the Conference Room, Department of Public Health Engineering (DPHE), Dhaka.

The objectives of the conference are twofold: (1) to relay general information of the project to, suppliers, manufacturers, and service providers, present details of the project components, details of procurement strategy including selection methods, proposed contract models, expected procurement packages and implementation arrangements; and (2) to receive feedback from the suppliers, manufacturers, and service providers on procurement approach and strategy, contract implementation challenges, procurement risks and mitigation measures, suitability and sustainability of the proposed procurement design, and any other information deemed necessary for the successful implementation of the Project. These consultations are part of procurement preparation and to develop fit for purpose PPSD to achieve value for money based on market engagement and the market information.

The LGD strongly encourages potential suppliers, manufacturers, and service providers to participate in this process and to use the meeting as an opportunity to ask questions and provide comments/feedback regarding this upcoming project procurement opportunities. To help developing a better understanding of the market, please email us the filled-up Market Survey Form available at the website [www.lgd.gov.bd] while confirming your attendance in the conference.

To confirm your attendance and submission of the filled-up Market Survey Form, please email [urbandev2@lgd.gov.bd] by 12:00 PM on 26 June 2024.

Attack on forest officials condemned

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association (Bela) yesterday sent a letter to the chief conservator of forests, expressing concern over a recent attack on forest officials in the Kaliakair area of Gazipur.

The letter, sent by Bela's lawyer advocate S Hasanul Banna of the Supreme Court, demanded immediate arrest and punishment of those involved in the incident.

On May 30, in the Chandra Beat of the Kaliakair Range in Gazipur, seven forest officials and employees were injured in an attack by around 30 miscreants, while trying to prevent forest land encroachment and tree felling.

The letter says around 30 miscreants cut down trees and built structures on government-reserved forest land. When forest officials intervened, they were attacked by the encroachers.

Additionally, the letter also highlights past incidents where forest officials were attacked and even killed by encroachers.

It mentioned deaths of Maheshkhali Forest Range Officer Mohammad Yusuf Uddin on August 7, 2020, and another forest officer in Cox's Bazar, Sazzaduzzaman, on March 31, this year.

Bhutan reduces fees for tourists from Bangladesh

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Bhutan has reduced the Sustainable Development Fees (SDF) for Bangladeshis to US $15 per person per night for Bangladeshi tourists from US $100.

Bhutanese Department of Tourism issued a notification towards this end, according to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MOFA)

The US $15 SDF is equivalent to that of the Indian tourists who had been enjoying the reduced SDF previously.

Under the new policy, 15,000 Bangladeshi tourists can travel Bhutan with the reduced fees of USD 15 per year.

The MOFA statement yesterday said Bangladesh and Bhutan enjoy a special relationship, which has been further consolidated under the leadership of Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina in recent years.

The visa policy has come into effect from June 2, 2024.

UGC bans future recruitment at CMU

Says VC recruited 6 staffers violating rules

ARAFAT RAHAMAN

The University Grants Commission recently banned any recruitment at Chittagong Medical University (CMU) after finding out about violation of recruitment policies by the university's administration while appointing six staffers.

A three-member UGC probe committee found the irregularities and recommended the ban.

The commission, which oversees university regulations, approved the recommendation and, on May 12, instructed CMU to take further action, said UGC Secretary Ferdous Zaman.

"Based on the investigation report, we sent a letter to the university authorities to take further measures following the recommendations. They will inform the commission after taking the necessary steps," he added.

According to university sources, CMU Vice-Chancellor Prof Md Ismail Khan appointed Md Alauddin, Md Misbah Ibne Hakim, Kazi Musfiqus Salehin, Md Abdullah Al Noman, Badiul Alam, and Muhammad Anik Al Hossain to several posts under Grade-9 payscale on an ad-hoc basis.

However, while working as temporary staffers [before making their posts permanent], they were given salaries and benefits of Grade-7 officers without syndicate approval.

The UGC investigation team confirmed the allegations, saying ad-hoc appointments in public universities are banned.

UGC deemed those appointments unconstitutional, a violation of citizens' rights, and in contradiction of Chittagong Medical University Act 2016.

The commission then recommended cancelling the appointments and recovering the salaries and benefits paid from February 1, 2022, to February 6, 2023.

The committee also advised the university to amend the Minimum Prescribed Qualification (MPQ) for recruiting teachers and staff to comply with government directives and inform the commission after implementing necessary initiatives.

Until then, the university authorities were instructed not to make any new recruitments, UGC said.

CMU Registrar (acting) Hasina Khan declined to comment, citing it as an "internal matter".

"We received such a letter

There is a huge market for Bangla films, we need to utilise it: GOUTAM GHOSE

Bangla cinema is currently evolving, with constant experiments rejuvenating it, according to acclaimed filmmaker Goutam Ghose.

In an interview with The Daily Star during his recent visit to Dhaka, for the purpose of his documentary film made on the Father of the Nation, Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, Goutam discussed the golden era of Bangla films, their present and future, the difficulties Bangla film productions face, as well as his own vision.

The director, widely known for his films like Padma Nadir Majhi, Antarjali Jatra, Moner Manush, Sankhachil, Ma Bhumi, Paar and Kaalbela, stated that the international standard of Bangla films has declined.

"Experiments in Bangla cinema are commonplace-- young directors in both Dhaka and Kolkata are trying to make new types of movies with new dimensions in form and content. However, it's not nearly as much as it used to be in the old days," said the filmmaker.

Comparing Bangla movies to the cinemas of South India and Maharashtra, Goutam opined that the latter are performing better.

"Perception used to change with new technologies, and new perception is required for new technologies. I hope that a transformation will occur in Bangla movies," the director said, stressing the need for collective efforts by both West Bengal and Bangladesh for the betterment of Bangla cinema, and diversifying its market.

"We don't know proper marketing and how to conduct business," Goutam remarked, citing this as the primary reason for Bangla films' underperformance.

"The number of Tamil-Telugu speakers is far fewer than the Bangla audience, but they invest Tk 100-200 crores in a movie, and easily get a return on their investment," said the director, adding, "Tamil-Telugu speakers all over the world watch their movies in cinema halls. Their films are being released in halls across North America, Europe, Japan, Southeast Asia, etc."

"Directors of Kerala are doing well," he said, mentioning Payal Kapadia, who won the Grand Prix award at the prestigious Cannes Film Festival. "On the contrary, Bangalis across the globe don't watch Bangla movies; they watch pirated versions, or prefer television and OTT platforms".

Regarding his upcoming projects, the acclaimed director said his first Indo-Italian cinema is ready for release. "It is a trilingual fiction film with English, Hindi and Italian narratives. I am also working on a joint venture between Bangladesh and India," he said.

Speaking about his legendary film Moner Manush, Goutam explained, "I made the film because I felt the need to tell Lalon's story. In this intolerant society, someone like Lalon is very much needed."

The director further revealed his plans to make a film about the partition history of India and Bangladesh. He believes that although the countries have been divided politically and geographically, there are several topics they can collaborate on.

"Due to a political crisis, India and Pakistan were divided. Was there any referendum in this regard? That political crisis led to suffering of countless people. Quaid-e-Azam Mohammed Ali Jinnah's two-nation theory did not stand the test of time, and birth of Bangladesh has proved it," he said.

The 74-year-old legend humbly described himself as a common person who has worked in the film industry for a long time. "Since I have taken a lot from society, I always feel a commitment towards it. Social contexts have repeatedly come up in my films, as have social and political aspects."

Goutam concluded by saying he is not an ambitious person at all, and wants to erase three words from the dictionary—Star, VIP and celebrity. "I have an objection regarding these three words."

"Perception used to change with new technologies, and new perception is required for new technologies. I hope that a transformation will occur in Bangla movies,"

Tahsan-Mithila starrer 'Baaji' to premier this Eid

A recent post on Chorki's Facebook page has ignited widespread speculation, featuring an image of a cricketer in a yellow jersey, helmet, and holding a bat, with the intriguing caption, "Who is coming to Chorki?"

The OTT platform has confirmed that the upcoming series will feature singer-turned-actor Tahsan Khan in the lead role. While Tahsan has graced television screens numerous times, Baaji marks his OTT debut. Rafiath Rashid Mithila will be seen alongside Tahsan in this series.

Directed by Arifur Rahman, the story revolves around the impact of betting on cricket. In Baaji, Tahsan portrays the role of a cricketer, while Mithila portrays a journalist.

Chorki is expected to release the first seven episodes of the series during the upcoming Eid-ul-Azha.

'Padatik' wins big at New York Indian Film Festival

After screenings at the London Indian Film Festival and the International Film Festival of Kerala (IFFK), Srijit Mukherji's Padatik has now won the Best Screenplay Award at the 2024 New York Indian Film Festival (NYIFF).

Srijit posted the good news on social media, congratulating the team on this achievement. He also personally shared the news with Chanchal Chowdhury.

Chanchal Chowdhury told The Daily Star, "This is a big achievement for the film. We have worked really hard for this film, and when I heard the news, I was really happy."

Grameen Bank counsel sharpens barbs the Packages Corporation Limited owners, including Prof Yunus, of taking financial benefits from Grameen Bank.

The two lawyers appeared before the media and made statements after Prof Yunus on Sunday commented that appearing in the iron cage in connection with a case is part of his cursed life.

Yesterday, Masud told reporters that when Prof Yunus was the managing director of Grameen Bank, he gave a loan to Packages Corporation Limited, owned by Prof Yunus and his family, and waived the interest of the loan in violation of the law.

He said Yunus Centre in an explanation presented "false information" about the establishment of Grameen Bank.

"A research project on microcredit was undertaken by Chattogram University under the leadership of Dr Muhammad Yunus in 1976 when he was a teacher at the economics department. The project was financed by the Chattogram University and it was participated by its students under the leadership of Dr Yunus.

"The agriculture ministry named the project as Grameen Bank Project and sent it to Bangladesh Bank. The government gave Tk 100 crore to the project for eliminating poverty in fiscal year 1978-1979. Dr Muhammad Yunus was appointed as a salaried project director. The project was turned into Grameen Bank in 1983 under the leadership of Prof Yunus," Masud said.

Not a single word in the Grameen Bank's complaint submitted to the ACC is fabricated, he said, adding, "If the allegations are false and if he is innocent, let him prove it in court."

Prof Yunus's lawyer Abdullah-Al-Mamun denounced the accusations, saying a vested quarter is jealous of his client's global outreach and popularity.

Prof Yunus has made great sacrifices for Grameen Bank, he said.

Replying to Masud's accusation, he said the lawyer made the statement in such a manner as if Grameen Bank created Prof Yunus.

"It is as if the son was born before the father. The microcredit project created by Muhammad Yunus under the Grameen Bank Ordinance, 1983, was named as Grameen Bank Project. Prof Yunus applied to the government to turn the project into a complete bank. The government directed him to give all his properties and capital to Grameen Bank and accordingly he did everything under section 37(1) of the Grameen Bank," he said.

At a press release earlier on May 30, Yunus Centre said the allegations that Prof Yunus and his family financially benefited from the loan given to Packages Corporation Limited is totally false.

The owners of Packages Corporation, including Prof Yunus and his family, offered to give the printing press for the use of Grameen Bank without any financial benefits, it said.

"The bilateral agreement signed between Grameen Bank and Packages Corporation makes it very clear that owners of Packages would not take any kind of financial benefits from Grameen Bank, such as, share of profit, rent on the land, building and machinery, any fee of any kind during the tenure of the management contract with Grameen Bank," said the press release.

It said the objective of Grameen Bank was to reduce the cost of printing materials of Grameen Bank, ensure quality printing and timely delivery of all printing materials. Owners just literally handed over the printing plant to Grameen Bank free of cost, it added.

"Packages Corporation received working capital loans from Grameen Bank through its donor-funded window called SVCF (Social Venture Capital Fund). This loan money cannot reach the owners of the Packages Corporation under the Agreement. And it did not."

It said Grameen Bank's price fixing committee used to work strictly on pricing. The price fixed by the committee was always much lower than the market price.

The release further said the total loan received by Packages Corporation over a period of 25 years was less than Tk 10 crore. These are internal financial transactions within Grameen Bank network of projects and companies. Any loan given to Packages has no way to reach the owners as per the agreement.

"It will remain within the Grameen Bank system -- between Grameen Bank and its project, or a social business company designated by Grameen Bank."

Whatever arrangement Grameen Bank made with Packages Corporation, it was made by Grameen Bank authorities. In several board meetings of Grameen Bank, the issues related to the contract were discussed. The board enthusiastically cooperated in the implementation of the agreement, said the release.

642m voters cast ballots in election results from votes cast in Electronic Voting Machines (EVMs).

Postal votes, which are paper ballots, are mostly cast by troops serving outside their home constituencies or officials away from home on election duty.

This year, postal votes were also offered to voters over 85 years of age and people with disabilities to allow them to vote from home.

Kumar said the majority of postal votes would be counted before the completion of EVM vote counting and the process could not be changed at this stage of the election.

The INDIA alliance also urged the EC to ensure the "safe movement" of voting machines and their verification before and after the counting process, which Kumar said had been accepted.

Opposition parties have in the past accused the commission of bias in favour of BJP on issues such as violations during the campaign - charges the EC denies - but have not challenged the counting process or election outcomes.

Some opposition leaders and watchdogs have also claimed, without evidence, that EVMs can be manipulated. The EC has rejected those accusations and courts have endorsed EVMs.

Kumar said one key learning for future elections would be to hold polls at least a month earlier to avoid extreme heat.

By contrast Sri Lanka's score was their lowest total in all T20 cricket.

Kagiso Rabada (2-21) and left-arm spinner Keshav Maharaj, who took two wickets in two balls on his way to 2-22, also struck after Sri Lanka captain Wanindu Hasaranga won the toss.

Opener Kusal Mendis (19) and veteran all-rounder Angelo Mathews (16) were the only batsmen to pass 15.

Sri Lanka were bowled out with five balls to spare when last man Nuwan Thushara was run out for one of four ducks in the innings.

Fast bowler Ottneil Baartman, making his World Cup debut, started the collapse when, with his first ball, he had Pathum Nissanka caught in the deep before Nortje dismissed Kamindu Mendis in similar fashion.

Maharaj then struck twice in the ninth over as both Hasaranga, stumped by Quinton de Kock and Sadeera Samarawickrama, clean bowled by a quicker delivery, fell for nought to leave Sri Lanka 32-4 before Charith Asalanka survived the hat-trick ball.

Nortje, in the first match at a Long Island ground built specially for this tournament, returned to dismiss Mathews in his last over.

Burmese cigarettes and 20,000 yaba pills were recovered from the spot.

During the reported shootout, Nezam was killed. Later, he was taken to his house in Khurushkul.

Informed, Sadar police recovered his body and sent it to Cox's Bazar General Hospital for autopsy.

According to the victim's father, Bashir Uddin, Nezam said he went to Maricha for three days to visit a friend.

Later, he found out that his son was shot dead.

Locals said Nezam was involved in cattle smuggling and yaba trading in the area.

Despite repeated attempts, Lt Col Shahol Ahmed Nobel, commanding officer (CO) of BGB-11, could not be reached over the phone for comments.

communities, the statement read.

To do this, Benazir used members of his own organisation and other government organisations.

Terming such abuse of power by the top-ranking officer of a law enforcement agency outrageous, TIB Executive Director Iftekharuzzaman said, "Under such circumstances, there is no alternative to ensuring exemplary punishment of the accused and his aides, and fair compensation of those who were forced to sell their land."

Citing media reports, he said Benazir, who is under investigation in connection with corruption, fled the country after withdrawing a large amount of money from banks.

Iftekharuzzaman said such a controversial person leaving the country with his family without anyone noticing raises suspicion that there might be people colluding with him and the graft investigation is just an eyewash.

He said, "It is evident that a section in power protected him before and is doing so now. Bring the former police chief to book will not be enough, his aides will also have to face the music."

He mentioned that Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader, also road transport and bridges minister, said the government has the information of those involved in corruption.

Then how a high-ranking police official could indulge in such corruption, Iftekharuzzaman added.

Releasing the names of the corrupt and ensuring accountability is imperative to demonstrate the government's commitment to zero tolerance against graft. Otherwise, the public perception of such commitments to be farcical will become true, the TIB executive director added.

where doctors declared him dead," said Gazi Mozammel.

Ahamed has left behind his wife, two sons, and a host of well-wishers to mourn his death. His wife is serving as the general manager of Biman Bangladesh Airlines, and his sons are currently studying abroad.

AL President and Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, in a statement, expressed deep shock at his death and prayed for the salvation of the departed soul. She also conveyed sympathy to the bereaved family members.

Ahamed's body will be taken to the Central Shaheed Minar tomorrow around 11:00am so that people can pay their last respects. Later, his namaz-e-janaza will be held on the premises of Dhaka University's central mosque.

Ahamed was born in 1961 in Makhna village of Netrakona's Madan upazila.

He studied law at Dhaka University.

Ahamed was the joint general secretary of JSD (Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal) Chhatra League central committee during the anti-autocracy movement. At that time, he was instrumental in the major decisions made by Chhatra Sangram Parishad and Sarbadaliya Chhatra Oikya.

In 1992, Ahamed joined AL and served as an assistant secretary to the party's central sub-committee.

He was nominated by the Awami League for the Netrakona-4 seat in the 2007 general election that got cancelled. Ahamed later aspired for the party's nomination in the last four national elections but was unsuccessful each time. In the 12 parliamentary elections held in January 2024, he wanted to contest as an independent candidate, but his nomination was scrapped.

Says UN after preliminary satellite data analysis

AFP, Geneva

Some 55 percent of all structures in the Gaza Strip have been destroyed, damaged or possibly damaged since the Israeli offensive began in the Palestinian territory eight months ago, according to preliminary satellite analysis by the UN.

The analysis showed more than 137,000 buildings affected, UNOSAT, the United Nations satellite analysis agency, said on X, formerly Twitter.

The estimate is based on a satellite image taken on May 3, and compared with images taken in May a year earlier, last September, and on October 15.

The fresh satellite image was also compared to images taken during several dates in November, then again during the first months of this year, UNOSAT said.

"According to satellite imagery analysis, UNOSAT identified 36,591 destroyed structures," the agency said in a statement.

In addition, it said it had seen "16,513 severely damaged structures, 47,368 moderately damaged structures, and 36,825 possibly damaged structures for a total of 137,297 structures".

The analysis showed more than 137,000 buildings affected: UNOSAT

"These correspond to around 55 percent of the total structures in the Gaza Strip and a total of 135,142 estimated damaged housing units," it said.

UNOSAT said the image comparisons showed the governorates of Deir Al-Balah, in the centre, and Gaza, in the north, had suffered the worst damage between April 1 and May 3.

Comparing satellite images on those dates indicated that an additional 2,613 structures had been damaged in Deir Al-Balah, while another 2,368 had been damaged in Gaza governorate in just over a month.

Within Deir Al-Balah, the Nuseirat municipality suffered the greatest number of newly damaged structures during that period, at 1,216, UNOSAT said.

The agency stressed that the findings were still part of a preliminary analysis, which had yet to be validated in the field.

Philippe Lazzarini, the head of the UN agency for Palestinian refugees (UNRWA), has described images from Jabalia as horrific. Thousands of displaced people had no choice but to live amid the rubble and in destroyed UNRWA facilities, he said in a June 1 post on X.

More than 36,000 Palestinians have been killed in Israel's offensive, according to Gaza health officials.

People inspect a damaged building amid ongoing cross-border hostilities between Hezbollah and Israeli forces in Houla village near the border with Israel, southern Lebanon yesterday. Hezbollah said yesterday it had launched a squadron of drones towards the headquarters of the Israeli military's Galilee formation.

Mexico elects Sheinbaum as first woman president

REUTERS, Mexico City

Claudia Sheinbaum won a landslide victory to become Mexico's first female president, inheriting the project of her mentor and outgoing leader Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador whose popularity among the poor helped drive her triumph.

Sheinbaum, a climate scientist and former mayor of Mexico City, won the presidency with between 58.3 percent and 60.7 percent of the vote, according to a rapid sample count by Mexico's electoral authority. That is set to be the highest vote percentage in Mexico's democratic history.

The ruling coalition was also on track for a possible two-thirds super majority in both houses of Congress.

WAYANAD CONSTITUENCY IN INDIA

Exit poll predicts massive slump in Rahul's vote share

TNN, New Delhi

In a bitter-sweet prediction for India's Congress party, an exit poll carried out by the VMR-Manorama News has suggested a massive erosion in Rahul Gandhi's vote share in the recently-concluded election in Wayanad Lok Sabha constituency.

The exit poll has predicted a clean sweep by the United Democratic Front (UDF), which has an alliance with the Congress, in the Lok Sabha election in Kerala. It has predicted 16 seats for UDF and two seats for the LDF while it's neck and neck race in two seats.

The exit poll has predicted that if Rahul had secured 64 percent vote in 2019, his vote share will come down to 50 percent this time.

Interestingly, BJP will have to settle without any seat this time too as per the prediction. As per the exit poll, results in Alathur and Kannur could go either way. The exit poll has predicted BJP will come second in two constituencies Thiruvananthapuram and Pathanamthitta.

Meanwhile, senior Congress leader Sonia Gandhi said The INDIA Opposition bloc is hopeful that the results of the 2024 Lok Sabha election will be "completely opposite" to exit poll predictions that have predicted another big victory for the BJP-led NDA.

No end in sight to custodial deaths

Strict measures needed to ensure police accountability

We are outraged to learn of yet another case of custodial death in the country. This time, the victim is a 40-year-old woman from Abhaynagar upazila in Jashore. Her family alleges that local police implicated her in a false drug case and brutally tortured her, leading to her death. Police, however, claim that they detained her for illicit drug possession and deny the allegations of torture. Regardless of who is right, the fact remains that a person died in police custody, and it is a grievous blow to law enforcement that cannot be taken lightly.

According to a report by this daily, a team of Abhaynagar police led by Assistant Sub-Inspector Silon Ali detained the victim, Afroza Begum, right outside her house in the early hours of Sunday. Her ninth-grader son said he saw his mother being searched by a female constable, who found nothing. Then ASI Silon started torturing Afroza before police took her away at around 1am. Her elder son also said police had demanded Tk 2 lakh for her release. The Abhaynagar OC, however, claimed that police had found 30 yaba pills on Afroza, and later a case was filed against her.

Besides the allegations of torture and falsifying evidence, there seems to be a case of neglect in addressing Afroza's medical needs as well. Her elder son said they found her in a bad condition when they visited her at the police station in the morning. Police apparently took her to the upazila health complex, but brought her back without running the tests recommended. Hours later, when Afroza's condition deteriorated, police again took her to the upazila complex, and then to Jashore General Hospital, where she was pronounced dead. Unsurprisingly, police are denying any responsibility, saying the victim's family is making false accusations.

But what possible reason could there be for the family to do so? Equally importantly, will there be a fair investigation to get to the bottom of the incident? Over the years, we saw how such cases were often followed by perfunctory probes that hardly brought any satisfactory results. What happened to the young man who allegedly died by suicide in police custody in Habiganj in December last year? What happened to the Jubo Dal leader in Thakurgaon who died hours after being detained by police in April? The glaring holes in the case of Sultana Jasmine, who died in Rab's custody in March last year, also raised a lot of questions.

We keep asking these questions but there are seldom any satisfactory answers. Convictions in such cases are even rarer. Clearly, there is a lack of accountability pervading our law enforcement forces and institutions, which is totally unacceptable. Custodial torture—whether resulting in deaths or not—is a betrayal of public trust, and it must not be tolerated. We demand a proper investigation into the death of Afroza Begum and all such cases by an impartial and independent body.

Insane prices taking food off the plate

Govt must bring down prices of essentials

It is vital to ask—and seek a solution to—why and for how long local consumers will have to spend more on food compared to those in comparable countries. The Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD) has recently said that prices of essentials here have surged to such an extent that for many they have become luxury items. We cannot agree more. In 16 countries where GDP per capita is higher than that of Bangladesh, consumers are spending less on food, according to the CPD. The list includes Brazil and Colombia, where the average annual expenditure on food per person in 2022 was $882 and $874, respectively, compared to $924 in Bangladesh. There are also the sanction-hit Iran, war-ravaged Iraq, and crisis-ridden Sri Lanka, among other countries.

If Bangladesh is doing so well economically—as politicians often like to claim—why is it that people are having to spend so much more on food than in countries that are going through serious difficulties and upheavals? In fact, Bangladesh has been experiencing higher inflation for nearly two years now, exceeding inflation rates in many developed and developing economics. And the burden of it has been disproportionately shared by poor and low-income households.

Having analysed the daily prices of 34 essential food items in Dhaka from January 1, 2019 to May 19, 2024, the CPD found that price increases ranged between 10 percent and 310 percent. For example, the price of coarse rice, consumed mostly by the poor, has increased by 30 percent. Similarly, the price of lentils has gone up by as much as 95 percent since January 2019. Prices of unprocessed and processed flour have been going up in Dhaka since before the outbreak of the Russia-Ukraine war. And all types of soybean oils are pricier in Dhaka's market compared to the international market. The huge difference in these prices and others does not make any sense, with the CPD rightly calling on the government to investigate the alleged involvement of big importers and business groups in price gouging.

We strongly second that call. As we have been repeating in this column, the government must find out why domestic prices are not decreasing in line with pricing trends on the international market, and take effective steps to check inflation. The people—particularly the poor—can no longer afford for it to fail in that regard.

Thousands of Bangladeshi workers have been unable to go to Malaysia because they did not get a plane ticket even after completing all the procedures, including obtaining a visa by spending several times more than the prescribed fee. On Friday, several hundred workers waited for hours at the Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport to catch flights, but most of them could not do so.

In fact, no reliable information is available on the exact number of workers who failed to go to Malaysia. According to an estimate of Bangladesh Association of International Recruiting Agencies (Baira), this number is 5,953. Bangladesh government's Bureau of Manpower, Employment and Training (BMET) says that this number is 31,000. And according to the information of the Bangladesh High Commission in Kuala Lumpur, this number is about 55,000.

The Malaysian government had earlier announced on March 21 that the labour market for migrant workers will be closed on May 31. This means that the Ministry of Expatriates' Welfare and Overseas Employment, Bureau of Manpower, Employment and Training (BMET) and Baira had 70 days to make arrangements for aspirant migrant workers to go to Malaysia. But having not taken proper initiative in time, thousands of workers could not finish this journey. Due to the flight crisis, those who were able to go had to pay several times the actual airfare. Fares increased from Tk 20,000-25,000 to more than Tk 100,000.

The government does not have to spend money to send workers abroad. The workers arrange the money by themselves, often by taking loans or selling property, or by contacting brokers, and then through hard work, they send US dollars back to the country. Thus, the government enjoys the hard-earned dollars of these migrant workers at almost no cost. In return, the minimum obligation of the government should be to ensure that these workers can go and work abroad for a fixed fee without being harassed. But it appears that the government is not interested in taking even these minimal responsibilities, as a result of which thousands of workers are being cheated and exploited by local and foreign interest groups, including recruiting agencies.

According to a memorandum of understanding signed between Bangladesh and Malaysia in December, 2021, a Bangladeshi worker who wants to travel to Malaysia and work there would needs to spend no more than Tk 78,990 for the passport, health check-up, registration, welfare, insurance, identity card, clothing, and recruitment agency fees. Malaysian employers were supposed to pay for the plane ticket and visa.

On Friday, several hundred workers waited for hours at the Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport to catch flights, but most of them could not do so.

In practice, as reported by The Daily Star, a syndicate of 100 Bangladeshi recruiting agencies holds monopoly control over sending workers to Malaysia, and this has increased the cost for aspirant migrant workers. If any agency wants to send workers to Malaysia, it has to send them through this syndicate. Recruiting agencies have to pay huge sums of money to syndicate leaders to become members of the syndicate. The agencies, in turn, recoup that money from migrant workers.

The agencies that are part of the syndicate get a huge amount as "syndicate fee" against each worker, and a part of this money goes to those controlling the Malaysian syndicate. Even though the looting of migrant workers in this way is an open secret, there has been no initiative from the government to break this syndicate.

And why would it take any initiative? According to a report by Prothom Alo, several Bangladeshi parliamentarians and their relatives, along with some political leaders of the ruling party, are part of this syndicate. Notables among the members of the syndicate are Awami League MP (Feni-2) Nizam Uddin Hazari's Snigdha Overseas Limited; Jatiya Party MP (Feni-3) Masud Uddin Chowdhury's 5M International; Ahmed International of Dhaka-20 MP Benjir Ahmed; Orbitals Enterprise of Kashmeri Kamal, wife of former finance minister and current MP for Comilla-10, AHM Mustafa Kamal, and Orbitals International of Nafisa Kamal, AHM Mustafa Kamal's daughter.

On one hand, the workers are forced to go to Malaysia by spending several times more money due to the monopoly of the syndicate which exists under the patronage and participation of the ruling party members. On the other hand, workers are forced to live an undignified life even after going to Malaysia due to not getting the employment they are promised.

The situation is so bleak that, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) issued a statement on April 19 where UN experts expressed dismay about the situation of Bangladeshi migrants in Malaysia. They expressed concern that large sums of money were being generated through the fraudulent recruitment of migrant workers by criminal networks operating between Malaysia and Bangladesh. They said migrants were being deceived, recruited by companies that are frequently fake, and obliged to pay exorbitant recruitment fees which pushes them into debt bondage. The experts held some high-level officials in both governments responsible for this situation and called for an immediate end to this exploitation.

It is noteworthy that, although the UN issued a statement on the plight of Bangladeshi migrant workers in Malaysia, no action was taken by the Bangladeshi government—the principal beneficiary of the remittances sent by the migrant workers—to address the sufferings of the workers.

> These syndicates should no longer be tolerated. Recruiting agencies engaged in fraudulent practices in sending workers abroad should be stopped immediately.

Malaysia has long been an attractive destination for Bangladeshi migrant workers. Although the government beats the drum of economic development, the reality is that there is a dire shortage of good wage employment in the country. According to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics' "Labour Force Survey-2022," a Bangladeshi migrant worker earns Tk 28,822 a month in Malaysia on average compared to Tk 24,957 in Saudi Arabia, making Malaysia more attractive for Bangladeshi workers compared to traditional markets in the Gulf.

However, the Bangladesh-Malaysia migration has been marred by irregularities and exploitation in the past, which has prompted Malaysia to shut its door on Bangladeshi workers on multiple occasions. According to a Prothom Alo report, Malaysia's labour market was closed in 2009 due to allegations of irregularities in sending workers by creating syndicates. Then the market opened at the end of 2016, and was closed again from September 2018 due to allegations of syndication, corruption and irregularities. After four years of closure, the Malaysian labour market reopened for Bangladeshis in 2022. The syndicate was created once more. It is in this context that Malaysia announced that it will no longer take workers from some countries, including Bangladesh.

These syndicates should no longer be tolerated. Recruiting agencies engaged in fraudulent practices in sending workers abroad should be stopped immediately. The workers who could not go to Malaysia even after paying several times more money this time should be compensated properly and the recruiting agencies and relevant government authorities should be made accountable.

RUBAIYA MURSHED

They called him boigyanik (scientist) Gias. He was the son of an honest hardworking farmer growing up in a small village in Cox's Bazar—salt-farms and paddy fields all around, with the sea just 35 kilometers away. He was the eldest of eight siblings, and his thirst for knowledge was unmatched. He was interested in science. It was the early 80s, and a young boy in a village school had little resources to satisfy his yearning to learn. The teachers couldn't do much either. The boy learned the harsh lesson that having an immense curiosity and passion for knowing wasn't enough. Still relentless, he opened a science club in his village.

That little boy, whom I later got to know as my eldest brother-in-law, never got the opportunity to learn science like I did living in Dhaka. I imagine countless more children like him, growing up across rural areas in Bangladesh. I wonder how many of them dream of someday becoming scientists, writers, professors, doctors, or engineers. With sadness, I then wonder, how many of their dreams will be broken soon because we have not been able to ascertain equity in our educational provisions.

Inequality and inequity remain harsh realities in Bangladesh. The truth is that talent in Bangladesh is in no way limited to the mega cities like Dhaka, but opportunities, in many instances, are limited. If we are to truly ever graduate from our lower-middle income status, we need to first and foremost channel our efforts towards increasing access to the same standard of education across rural and urban areas by investing in education in our villages. We need to support children from poorer socio-economic backgrounds and marginalised populations.

It's not that children from these backgrounds don't shine. The point is that not enough get the support they need and those who do make it to the other side are exceptions, not examples. They say it takes a village to raise a child, but the reality is that not everyone has that support, and this is where we need to play a role through education. We need to determine what helps children to achieve intergenerational mobility, that is, what helps them to move beyond the struggles their parents faced.

We also need to be careful of the inherent bias and elitism in our ideas. We think and say things like "Not everyone should go to university, not everyone needs a Masters" without assuring that anyone and everyone can if they want to. Yes, it doesn't make sense for scores of students to go for a Masters or PhDs if they're ultimately not going into academia, but this thought is biased until we can assure that anyone and everyone—regardless of their background—can pursue these paths if they want to. Otherwise, it's just another elite filtering where the privilege of being born in a city or into a stronger socio-economic background with more exposure to networks and connections plays a dominant role.

> It's not that children from these backgrounds don't shine. The point is that not enough get the support they need and those who do make it to the other side are exceptions, not examples.

Privilege is power but it's a responsibility too. This is where it gets tricky. Privilege shouldn't lead to entitlement. However, it is also unjust if every achievement of someone privileged is labelled to be a result of their background, hence belittling the person's own talent or hard work. Yes, privilege plays an important role in the person being able to leverage their talent but we must remember that not all privileged make a difference in the world. Just like not everyone with privilege gives proper credit to their fortune, to how it helped. Of course, there are also those who use their privilege and connections unethically to achieve their goals, often not even realising that they are robbing someone else's rightful place to make space for themselves. These wrongful practices are, sadly, rampant and evident all around us. No, this is not privilege—it's the misuse of privilege. There's a difference.

Equity is an attempt to make the playing field as equal as possible. This is why many educationists abroad have also been contending for "weighted grades" in assessing students so that we can account for socio-economic background factors. To this effect, demanding adjustments to the quota system at the university level and beyond, as argued by our youth who took to the streets in 2018, is a rightful demand.

Quotas are meant to bring balance and we have several quotas that are arguably unnecessary. For instance, quotas for children of university faculty members. These children already have the intergenerational advantage of growing up in homes where their parents are teachers. This quota is often even harmful because the children of faculty members face prejudice if they end up, on their own merit and without quota, as faculty members—they rarely escape conjectures that they didn't earn their place. Instead, we need quotas for children of farmers from rural villages, for bright enthusiastic children from families where they would be the first to go to university. Our classrooms need this variation. We can only truly prosper if we prosper together and so, we need to ascertain the representation of voices from all walks of life. What's stopping us?

Why recognising unpaid care work is important

Shaheen Anam
is the executive director of Manusher Jonno Foundation.

SHAHEEN ANAM

On April 23, 2023, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, in an Executive Committee of the National Economic Council (ECNEC) meeting, instructed the Planning Commission to find a way to include the work that women perform within the household, commonly referred to as "unpaid care work," into the calculation of the GDP. This instruction speaks of her commitment towards gender equality and appreciation towards the contribution of women for their labour, irrespective of whether they get paid or not.

VISUAL: SHAIKH SULTANA JAHAN BADHON

What is unpaid care work? It is the work that women perform at home, behind closed doors, which remains mostly unseen and invisible. Their work is considered household work, something that women are "supposed to be doing." However, this work is productive as well as reproductive, and critical to the wellbeing of the family and society. Apart from taking care of children and the elderly, cooking, cleaning, washing, and fetching water, women are involved in economically productive activities such as looking after poultry, livestock, preservation of seeds, and other agricultural work.

The primary reason to recognise this work comes from the concept of "dignity of labour," and for families to realise the importance of this work and accord it the respect that it deserves. Women, by and large, are responsible for the health, hygiene, food security and over all wellbeing of the family. Making their work visible and giving it formal recognition will raise their status as families will become aware of their contribution, and there is hope that it will result in reduction of discrimination, domestic violence, and early marriage. There is a possibility that formal recognition will have an impact in elevating women's position in the family.

The progress of women in Bangladesh is a well-recognised fact today. Thousands of women have attained a level of social, political and economic empowerment. However, not being a homogenous group, this progress has not benefited all women equally. Differences in class, ethnicity, education, income and physical features has determined their level of empowerment. Although our aspiration is to have all women get an education, acquire skills, and become part of the labour force, the reality is that millions of married rural women will not seek jobs outside their homes. They will work within their households and carry out unpaid care work, or at best get involved in home-based enterprise.

For years, economists have argued that unpaid care work cannot be included in the GDP as it is out of the System of National Accounts (SNA), because their product is not in the "market." Remaining out of the SNA means such contribution remains economically invisible. However, advocates for recognition of unpaid care work have launched campaigns and research which has resulted in a number of positive initiatives from government and NGOs.

A number of important studies related to unpaid care work have been carried out in the last few years. Manusher Jonno Foundation commissioned the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD) in 2013 to undertake a study titled "Evaluation of Women's Work" with a sample size of 13,000 women. The study revealed that on average, a female member of a household undertakes 12.1 non-SNA activities, the corresponding figure is only 2.7 for a male member. However, the most stunning finding of the study was that if women's unpaid work were to be monetised, it would amount to 2.5 or 2.9 times higher than the income of women received from paid services. For example, if a woman received remuneration of Tk 5,000 per month for her work in a garments factory, the corresponding amount for a woman's unpaid work, if monetised, would be around Tk 15,000.

The Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics carried out a Time-Use Survey with support from UN Women to gather evidence of women's work. The survey revealed that women on average spend seven times more time on care work than men. It also revealed that women use about 25 percent of their daily time on unpaid care work including cooking, cleaning, washing, and taking care of children and the elderly, etc. On the contrary, their male counterparts only spend 3.3 percent of their daily time on such tasks. It was also found that the workload of women increases by over 151 percent with marriage, but for men, the percentage is 78 percent.

A more recent study conducted by Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies (BIDS) reveals that women's unpaid care work, if calculated, was worth Tk 5.3 trillion, which is equivalent to almost 15 percent of the GDP. According to the study, women get only 1.2 hours for paid employment while men get 6.1 hours.

Researchers argue that as long as care work is not accorded the importance and dignity it deserves, "care crisis" will continue as it remains firmly in the "informal" economy. Feminist economists have long argued that productive work that is not accounted for in Systems of National Accounts, nor as part of the GDP of a country, is invisible work.

Evidence from studies above and across the globe shows how gendered care work still is. As per research conducted by Oxfam International in 2020, women carry out 76.2 percent of global unpaid care work, dedicating 3.2 times the hours that men do, totalling 12.5 billion hours every day. The researchers estimated that the annual monetary value of women's unpaid care at a conservative $10.8 trillion, which is three times of what Microsoft, the world's biggest company, is worth.

Valuation of care work is necessary to give recognition to the contributions of family caregivers. It also provides means to compare the private contributions of family caregivers with public expenditures on care, and the ways in which contributions are counted and valued. Additionally, it demonstrates how unequal these contributions are. It makes family care work visible and brings to light the inequality in men's work compared to women's work.

Given the evidence we now have, there should be no obstacle to take concrete steps towards formal recognition of unpaid care work and its inclusion in the GDP. Researchers have come up with a formula using the replacement method to evaluate and count its monetary value. The Satellite Accounts System has been used in a number of countries across the world successfully as a parallel GDP. This will bring to public and private attention the contribution of women to the family and society and create a positive image about them.

Development plans of government must include care work as an integral part of the care economy and allocate resources accordingly. Gender Responsive Budgeting is a positive step towards women's economic empowerment. However, much more policy support is required to reduce women's care work burden to give them options and choices for decent employment or to be homemakers. The 4 R's commonly used by advocates—Reduce, Recognise, Redistribute and Reward—is a pathway towards women's social and economic empowerment.

It is time to make women's work in all its dimensions visible, valued and accorded the respect it deserves.

Taking our startup ecosystem to the next level

The role of startups in driving economic growth and societal change is undisputed in developed economies—Apple, Facebook, Tesla were all once startups. Startups are vehicles through which people come together to develop a scalable innovation. While the world is adopting self-driving cars and AI assistants, Bangladeshis seem skeptical about the prospects of these ventures.

This is starkly visible in investments in local startups. In 2023, Bangladeshi startups secured $73 million, with 71.18 percent coming from foreigners, while India received over $11 billion. Before analysing this gap, it's important to understand why startups need investment in the first place.

Startups in Bangladesh are applying new technologies to add efficiency to age-old processes—from reducing fuel imports, fighting climate change to cutting food waste and improving healthcare. The startups working on education have made it easier for students in remote villages to access quality coaching through internet-enabled phones. By streamlining payments, bKash has accelerated the flow of commerce and added significant value to the life of every Bangladeshi.

These breakthroughs require dedication from some of our smartest citizens. Startups also need to collect data and run experiments to fine-tune their ideas, which require investment with no guaranteed success. Entrepreneurs must recruit talented individuals and take on the risk of building these systems, some of which can take a long time and many smart people.

The mechanism of startup investments, successful globally, differs from investing in established businesses. Startup ecosystems drive economic progress, but individual startups are high-risk, high-reward bets, unlike bonds or real estate. It is easier to gauge a building's progress than a startup's technology. Venture capitalists (VC) specialise in evaluating these businesses and estimating their success probability, but the Bangladeshi VC sector is just getting started.

Bangladeshis entrust banks with nearly all the country's capital, and the banking sector prefers lending to traditional businesses over investing in startups or VC funds. This terrible capital allocation strategy leads to many non-performing loans. The value of collateral depends on the country's economic prospects, which in the 21st century is driven by technology—the top-performing companies of the last decade have been tech firms. Our banking sector is living in the past.

In the past two years, the forex crisis and election uncertainty have severely impacted late-stage funding in Bangladesh. Top companies are starving for capital as their strategy depended on an evolving ecosystem. Since foreign VCs have shied away due to country concerns, so have local investors. The lack of late-stage activity will eventually hurt early-stage companies and restrain the ecosystem from flourishing.

If we truly commit to SMART Bangladesh and believe the startup ecosystem can transform the economy, we need a coordinated effort from different actors. One impactful government initiative has been Startup Bangladesh, which has mobilised youth and driven local funding. However, we risk losing momentum if others don't act urgently.

"Exits" have been instrumental in galvanising local investments in other countries. For any investor, a key consideration is how they will eventually sell-out of their investment. For example, the sale of Skype to Microsoft in 2011, Estonia's first exit, created a chain reaction that led to one of the fastest-growing GDPs in history. Since then, Estonia, a country with less population than Mirpur, has produced a dozen unicorns and at least two decacorns—companies valued at over $10 billion each.

The lack of exits is holding back Bangladesh. Unlike in the valley, where successes like Uber or OpenAI created thousands of millionaires, the success of bKash has not yet unleashed the funding landscape here. We are left in a chicken-egg limbo where startups cannot scale due to lack of capital, and capital avoids the ecosystem because of lack of role models and exit opportunities.

Exits happen in two forms: (i) sale of the company or (ii) listing the company in a public stock exchange or IPO, both of which return money to early investors. In Bangladesh, the number of purchasers is limited for now, but our consumer-driven economy is bound to make Bangladeshi startups attractive acquisition targets for international giants. Nevertheless, sale of the company is suboptimal. Yahoo had offered to buy Facebook in 2006 for $1 billion—had Mr Zuckerberg accepted, he would not have created the $1.2 trillion in value for his shareholders. Creating that kind of value requires pursuing an IPO and a courageous, almost fanatical, commitment to the vision.

Bangladesh Bank was visionary in establishing a fund for startup loans in 2021, but it has not had the desired impact since the banking sector did not pursue it aggressively. The central bank needs to create guidelines allowing banks to participate in the "upside" of startup investments, achievable through the use of warrants, which are common in the global venture debt industry. Powerful incentives such as reduced repo rates or lower forex purchase rates should also be linked to startup investment quotas.

The number of investments by SEC-licensed VCs has also been negligible, and there is a talent gap among these investors. The prospects are improving as there are many early-stage startups now. The skill shortage should be addressed by attracting international talent and providing training to high-potential candidates. The VCs need to collaborate with international agencies since a lot of impact funds are being mobilised for startups. Regulatory bodies need to act as catalysts and move faster. If the target is to drive $1 billion in startup investments per year, the government should contribute 20 percent.

The issue of IPOs must be addressed because without exits, it will be impossible to maintain motivation across the value chain. Bangladesh needs to send a clear message that we are self-sufficient for late-stage funding. India, Indonesia and China have been aggressive in creating new rules for startup listings and it is time that we took a similar stance. Increasing the strength of the local funding environment will automatically attract more foreign investors.

Finally, the startup ecosystem members need to collaborate vigorously. Founders should realise that macro and policy matters must align to unleash the ecosystem. Mentorship and policy advocacy have to become part of the Bangladeshi founder DNA.

The startup ecosystem has developed almost organically so far. To reach the next level, it requires a coordinated master plan. Success hinges on collective act of courage from capital allocators, regulators, and founders to enact a uniquely transformative story that makes Bangladesh a beacon of technological and entrepreneurial success.

Why tech workers must reskill, upskill in the age of AI

The integration of artificial intelligence (AI) across various sectors is not just a trend but a transformative force reshaping the future of work in the modern world. In this rapidly evolving technological landscape, the need for reskilling and upskilling has become paramount. As AI continues to advance, it is essential for tech workers to embrace continuous learning to remain relevant and competitive.

ZARIF FAIAZ

The AI-driven transformation of the job market

AI is revolutionising the job market by automating routine tasks and creating new opportunities that require advanced skills. According to the World Economic Forum, by 2025, 85 million jobs may be displaced due to the shift in labour division between humans and machines.

However, this same transition is expected to generate 97 million new roles that are better suited to the evolving landscape. These new roles will demand a workforce proficient in AI, machine learning, data analysis, and other emerging technologies.

The necessity of reskilling

Reskilling involves learning new skills to transition into different job roles, which is crucial as AI takes over more traditional tasks. For instance, customer service roles are increasingly augmented by AI tools that handle initial queries, necessitating workers to learn how to manage AI systems and address complex issues that require human intervention.

Similarly, in financial services, employees are now required to understand and leverage AI to make better investment decisions, as highlighted by an IBM report stating that nearly 70% of financial services leaders believe significant upskilling is necessary in 2024.

The importance of upskilling

Upskilling, on the other hand, enhances existing skills to improve performance in current roles. This is particularly important as AI tools become integral to daily operations.

A study by MIT found that workers using AI tools like ChatGPT reported a 37% increase in productivity, demonstrating how AI can significantly augment human capabilities. In healthcare, for example, professionals are using AI to speed up medical diagnoses, allowing them to focus more on patient care and complex decision-making.

Bridging the skills gap

The rapid advancement of AI has exposed a significant skills gap in the workforce. Many organisations struggle to implement AI effectively due to a lack of skilled personnel. According to a survey by Boston Consulting Group, 66% of executives are dissatisfied with their progress in scaling AI initiatives, primarily due to this skills gap. Addressing this gap requires comprehensive training programs that focus on both reskilling and upskilling.

Benefits for individuals and organisations

For individuals, reskilling and upskilling offer several advantages. Workers equipped with the latest skills are less likely to be displaced by automation and are more likely to be hired and promoted, leading to higher job security and career advancement opportunities. Engaged employees who are continuously learning and growing tend to have higher job satisfaction and morale. Additionally, workers with new or enhanced skills can command higher salaries and have access to better job opportunities due to their broader range of expertise.

For organisations, having a skilled workforce enhances productivity and innovation. Skilled workers are more efficient and can leverage AI to drive innovation, which is crucial for maintaining a competitive edge in the market.

Furthermore, organisations that invest in their employees' development tend to have higher retention rates. The LinkedIn Workplace Learning Report found that opportunities for learning and development significantly influence job satisfaction and retention. By providing targeted training programs, organisations can bridge the skills gap, ensuring they have the necessary talent to implement and scale AI effectively.

Fostering a culture of continuous learning

Creating a culture of continuous learning is vital in an AI-driven world. This involves not only providing formal training but also encouraging on-the-job learning and mentorship. AI itself can play a role in this by offering personalised learning experiences and identifying skill gaps through data analysis. For example, AI can create customised training programs tailored to an individual's role and career aspirations, enhancing the learning experience and effectiveness.

Social and economic implications

The benefits of reskilling and upskilling extend beyond individual and organisational gains to broader social and economic impacts. The World Economic Forum's initiative to prepare one billion people for tomorrow's economy by 2030 highlights the global urgency of this issue. By equipping the workforce with the necessary skills, we can ensure inclusive growth and mitigate the risks of technological unemployment.

The imperative for tech workers to reskill and upskill in the age of AI is undeniable. As AI continues to transform the job market, staying ahead of the curve through continuous learning is essential. Embracing this change and investing in skill development will enable both individuals and organisations to thrive in the dynamic landscape shaped by AI.

Top tips for data protection in the workplace

In today's digital age, safeguarding personal data at the workplace is more crucial than ever. With the increasing threat of cyberattacks and stringent data protection regulations, businesses must adopt comprehensive measures to protect sensitive information. Here are some top tips to enhance data protection in your organisation.

Secure data storage

Data breaches can be costly and damaging, but proper data handling and storage can mitigate these risks. The average cost of a data breach in 2021 was $4.24 million, according to IBM's Cost of a Data Breach Report.

Ensuring that all personal data is stored securely is a fundamental step in data protection. Simple measures such as locking physical documents in cabinets and using strong passwords for digital files can significantly reduce the risk of unauthorised access. For highly sensitive information, additional steps such as encryption should be taken.

Implement a clear desk policy

A clear desk policy minimises the risk of sensitive information being left unattended. This policy requires employees to store paperwork, notes, and other documents securely when not in use. It prevents unauthorised access and fosters a culture of organisation and responsibility. For instance, leaving sensitive documents on desks can lead to data leaks, especially in shared office spaces.

Develop a remote/hybrid working policy

With the rise of remote and hybrid work, it is essential to have a clear policy on handling personal data off-site. This includes using two-factor authentication for accessing company systems and ensuring that personal devices used for work are secure.

The trend of remote work has seen a significant increase, with a 2020 Gartner survey revealing that 82% of company leaders worldwide plan to allow employees to work remotely some of the time. Securing mobile devices and educating staff on the proper handling of data when working remotely is essential.

Regular data backups

According to the Data Protection Benchmark Study by Veeam, 58% of organisations face significant data loss issues due to inadequate backups.

Regularly backing up your data to secure locations is crucial. This ensures that, in the event of a cyberattack, fire, or flood, you can still access critical information. Both physical and cloud-based backup solutions should be considered to provide redundancy and quick recovery options.

Limit access to data

Not all employees need access to all data. Implementing role-based access controls ensures that only authorised personnel can access sensitive information. This reduces the risk of internal data breaches and helps maintain data integrity. Categorising data and limiting administrative privileges are effective ways to enhance data security. For instance, the 2018 Verizon Data Breach Investigations Report found that 34% of data breaches involved internal actors.

ILLUSTRATION: ZARIF FAIAZ

Employee training

Data protection is everyone's responsibility. Regular training sessions can help employees understand the importance of data security and the best practices to follow. This can significantly reduce the risk of accidental breaches and ensure that all staff are aware of their roles in maintaining data protection.

Use encryption

Encrypting sensitive data both in transit and at rest adds an extra layer of security, making it difficult for unauthorised users to access the information. Encryption is particularly important for protecting high-value data and is a key component of a comprehensive data protection strategy.

Monitor and update security measures

Cyber threats are constantly evolving, so it is vital to keep your security systems up to date. The Equifax breach, which affected over 143 million people, highlights the importance of timely updates and proactive security measures. According to a 2021 report by Check Point Research, cyberattacks increased by 50% year over year, underscoring the need for continuous vigilance. Regularly reviewing and updating your data protection plan helps address new vulnerabilities and threats.

By implementing these best practices, organisations can significantly enhance their data protection measures, ensuring compliance with regulations and safeguarding against potential breaches. A proactive approach to data security not only protects your organisation but also builds trust with clients and employees.

BANGLADESH go down fighting

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh women's football team put up a much improved performance against Chinese Taipei but still ended up on the losing side, suffering a 1-0 defeat in the second and final FIFA friendly match at the Bashundhara Kings Arena yesterday.

Smarting from a 4-0 drubbing at the hands of Chinese Taipei in the first match, the SAFF Champions showed their character in the second match against a side that is 100 places above them in the FIFA rankings.

Coach Peter Butler made four changes in the starting eleven, the most notable of them was his decision to drop captain Sabina Khatun in favour of forward Shamsunnahar Jr.

He also brought in defenders Shamsunnahar Sr and Anai Mogini and midfielder Swapna Rani in place of Masura Parvin, Sumaya Matsushima and Shaheda Akter Ripa, switching to a 4-4-2 formation from the first match's 3-5-2.

Sabina, who has been an indispensable part of the team since making her debut in 2010, was taken off after the first half in the first match and came off the bench in the dying minutes in yesterday's game.

The British coach said that he respected Sabina's contributions as a player but also hinted that age may be catching up with the 30-year-old booter.

"I think Sabi [Sabina] looked tired the other day. I'm trying to help her. I think she's an integral part, moving forward with this group. She's a good girl. She has had a distinguished career which I fully respect. When you get older, sometimes your legs don't do what your brain tells you to do," said Butler.

In the match, Chinese Taipei dominated the first 20 minutes of the game, taking the lead in the 17th minute by utilising a mistake from Bangladeshi defender Anai Mogini.

Anai failed to clear a cutback from the left side of the box and unmarked Su Yu-Hsuan, who scored a hat-trick in the first match, brilliantly placed the ball to the far post, beating goalkeeper Rupna Chakma.

After conceding the lead, Bangladesh started playing better, had more control of the ball and launched attacks through both flanks. But forwards Shamsunnahar Jr and Tahura Khatun were not able to reach most of the crosses due to their height disadvantage compared to the Chinese Taipei defenders.

The ball remained in the Chinese Taipei half for most of the second half as the pair of Monika Chakma and Munki Akther controlled the midfield while Ritu Porna Chakma and Swapna Rani made encouraging runs through both flanks but the hosts equalise.

Overall, the Bangladesh coach was satisfied with his team's performance in the match.

"I made a few changes looking back at the previous match where I thought we played well for 15-20 minutes, lost it for about a 20-minute spell when we conceded three goals, that obviously cost us," Butler said.

"So, today's [Monday] plan was building blocks – 15 minutes, 15 minutes, 15 minutes – don't play the game, play the clock and let's build confidence. We conceded again after 15 minutes, but I was delighted with the way they came back, the attitude they shown.

"I thought the girls were outstanding tonight. We didn't have a lot of chances in the first 40 minutes, but I thought in the second half we grew into the game and really dominated possession. I think if anybody's critical of that tonight, they don't understand football."

Nepal to host SAFF Women's C'ship 2024

SPORTS REPORTER

Nepal was declared hosts for the 7th SAFF Women's Championship yesterday, which is scheduled to be held on October 17-30 later this year.

This will be the Himalayan nation's third time hosting the tournament and they were chosen over Bangladesh, the defending champions, and Bhutan, who were also in contention.

"Considering everything, Nepal was the more suitable option. That's why we chose Nepal," said SAFF general secretary Anwarul Haque Helal adding that Bangladesh were not considered due to the unavailability of their main venue - Bangabandhu National Stadium (BNS).

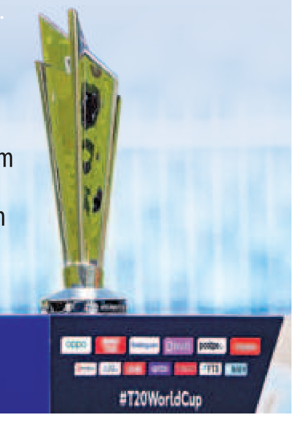
Bangladesh Football Federation (BFF) women's committee chairman Mahfuza Akhter Kiron also gave the same reasoning for not getting the tournament's hosting rights.

"When we bid for the SAFF Women's Championship, we had the BNS in mind. But the venue's renovation is not yet complete and SAFF didn't want to take the tournament outside Dhaka due to expenditure, so we were not considered," said Kiron.

Helal also said, "SAFF is not comfortable hosting matches at Bashundhara Kings Arena due to the lack of control over the venue," and also added that the Bir Shrestha Shaheed Mostafa Kamal Stadium was not up to standard to stage FIFA tier-1 matches.

RECORD $11.25M ON OFFER AT T20 WC

- International Cricket Council (ICC) have announced a record-breaking prize fund of $11.25 million USD for the Men's T20 World Cup 2024.
- The winners will receive the highest amount (at least $2.45 million) in the tournament's history.
- The runners-up will earn at least $1.28 million, while the losing semi-finalists will take home $787,500 each.
- Teams that do not advance past the second round will receive $382,500 each, and those finishing between ninth and 12th place will get $247,500 each.
- Teams ranking from 13th to 20th place will each earn $225,000. Additionally, every team will receive an extra $31,154 for each match won, excluding the semifinals and finals.



De Minaur breaks 20-year hoodoo

REUTERS, Paris

Alex de Minaur broke a 20-year Australian hoodoo at the French Open on Monday as the 11th seed battled from a set down to stun fifth seed Daniil Medvedev 4-6, 6-2, 6-1, and 6-3 and advance to his first Roland Garros quarterfinal.

De Minaur became the first man from his nation to reach the last eight at the claycourt Grand Slam since Lleyton Hewitt in 2004, with the victory on Suzanne Lenglen seemingly aided by Medvedev's mid-match blip due to a foot problem.

Former Paris quarter-finalist Medvedev had lost only twice in eight previous meetings with De Minaur and drew first blood with a break in the third game but the 28-year-old was pushed hard in the next before extending his lead.

After Medvedev wrapped up the opening set with little fuss, he shrugged off a string of superb winners from De Minaur's racket at the start of the second set.

But Medvedev surrendered the second set tamely with an unforced error after taking a medical timeout for blisters on his foot midway.

With the momentum shifting, the 25-year-old De Minaur blazed to a 5-1 lead en route to winning the third set before he traded breaks with Medvedev early in the fourth and pulled away shortly after for a famous win.

Nepal return with high hopes

AGENCIES

With the game against the Netherlands at the Grand Prairie Stadium in Dallas on Tuesday, Nepal will be making a return to the T20 World Cup scene after having made their maiden and only appearance in the mega event in 2014.

Both sides will be desperate to get a win, given that their next matches will be against much more superior sides in South Africa, Sri Lanka, and Bangladesh.

Netherlands are coming to the tournament after their tragic tri-series loss to Scotland and Ireland in May. However, they did win their most recent outing, the T20 WC warm-up game against Sri Lanka.

On the other hand, Nepal were unlucky way before the commencement of the tournament as there spirited bowler, Sandeep Lamichhane's US visa application was rejected for the second time.

However, Nepal will hope to shrug off the loss of Lamichhane and make their return to the T20 World Cup after 10 years a memorable one. It was, however, not a very happy outing for the Asian side as they had lost all three of their World Cup matches.

Now Rohit Paudel and his army will have to play their cards and focus on shifting their losing momentum and start their campaign on a positive note. They have recently lost their warm-up game to Canada.

Hopeful of retaining title, England face Scotland first

AGENCIES

Rain prevented England from getting a good preparation, and the defending champions may once again have to beat the weather, as well as Scotland, when they begin their T20 World Cup campaign in Barbados today.

England were frustrated by rain during their recent four-match warm-up series against Pakistan, with two of those games washed out without a ball being bowled while the other two were won convincingly by Jos Buttler's men. There are concerns heading into tomorrow's opener in Bridgetown, too, with heavy showers part of the forecast.

England possess a mix of talent and an experienced pool of players. Ahead of their opening game, batter Harry Brook backed the Three Lions to retain their title in the USA and the West Indies this time around.

"Everybody's really excited. We fancy our chances. We've got a very good side, good squad depth around T20 cricket and we're confident we can bring it home again," Brook said ahead of the game as quoted from Sky Sports.

Brook is back in England colours after pulling out of the Test tour to India earlier this year to spend time with his grandmother, Pauline, who fell ill in January and sadly passed away the following month.

Her death also saw Brook skip the IPL before returning to action in the County Championship in April, after a three-month break in which he made major efforts to improve his fitness.

"Obviously, it wasn't in great circumstances, but I just tried to train as hard as possible, trying to lose a bit of weight and trying to get a bit leaner," said the 25-year-old Yorkshireman.

At the Kensington Oval, which provided a two-paced wicket for the Namibia-Oman game on Sunday evening, the Buttler-led England will be overwhelming favourites to win in what will be their first-ever encounter against the Scots in the shortest format.

The venue also holds a special place in the hearts of England players and fans as it is where they were first crowned champions 14 years ago by defeating Australia by seven wickets in the final.

Meanwhile, Scotland, playing their third successive T20 World Cup, may not be as strong as their more well-favoured opponents but they still have high expectations after winning all six of their qualifiers to make it to the mega event.

They will also hope for their knack of punching above their weights in opening matches of the T20 World Cup to continue – Scotland beat began the 2022 T20 World Cup in grand fashion, stunning two-time World Champions West Indies in Hobart and also defeated superior-ranked Bangladesh in their opening fixture of the 2021 T20 World Cup.

Proteas thump SL in Group D opener

AFP, New York

South Africa beat Sri Lanka by a comfortable six-wicket margin in the teams' opening Group D match of the T20 World Cup in New York yesterday.

Proteas fast bowler Anrich Nortje took a remarkable four wickets for just seven runs as Sri Lanka were bowled out for just 77 -- their lowest T20 total.

But South Africa lost early wickets as they too struggled to time the ball before the big-hitting Heinrich Klaasen (19 not out) saw them to victory with 22 balls to spare. Quinton de Kock scored a team-high 20.

Nortje's figures, from his maximum four overs, were the best by a South African at a T20 World Cup, surpassing his own 4-10 against Bangladesh in Sydney two years ago.

Over 1m forced to flee Gaza city of Rafah

UNRWA says they live in 'unspeakable' conditions; 40 more Palestinians killed as Israel continues offensive

AGENCIES

Forced displacement has pushed over a million Palestinians away from the Gaza city of Rafah, the United Nations Palestinian refugee agency (UNRWA) said yesterday.

Thousands of families now shelter in damaged and destroyed facilities in the city of Khan Younis, where the agency is providing essential services despite "increasing challenges", UNRWA said, adding: "Conditions are unspeakable".

Since early May, Israel's military has been carrying out what it says is a limited operation in Rafah to root out Hamas fighters and dismantle infrastructure used by the Palestinian group that runs Gaza.

The Israeli military has told civilians to go to an "expanded humanitarian zone" some 20 km (12 miles) away.

- Doubts grow over Gaza truce plan
- Egypt rejects Israeli presence at Rafah crossing
- Death toll in enclave rises to 36,479

Many Palestinians have complained they are vulnerable to Israeli attacks wherever they go, and have been moving up and down the Gaza Strip in the past few months.

Doubts were growing yesterday about a plan for a Gaza ceasefire and hostage release deal outlined by US President Joe Biden as heavy fighting raged for a third day since his White House address.

An Israeli government spokesperson quoted Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu as saying that US President Joe Biden, in advancing a plan to wind down the Gaza offensive, had published only some of the details.

"The war will be stopped for the purpose of returning hostages and then we will proceed with other discussions," spokesperson David Mencer quoted Netanyahu as saying, in what appeared a reiteration of Israel's refusal to call off the offensive against Hamas entirely before the group is destroyed.

But for now, the bombardments and combat showed no sign of easing in the Gaza offensive soon entering its ninth month that has devastated the Palestinian coastal territory of 2.4 million people, reports AFP.

Yesterday, the Israeli military said that over the past day its forces had struck "over 50 targets in the Gaza Strip". Gaza hospitals reported at least 19 people killed in overnight strikes.

Israel's offensive in the Gaza has killed at least 36,479 Palestinians and wounded 82,777 since October 7, the Palestinian enclave's health ministry said yesterday. Forty Palestinians have been killed and 150 wounded in the past 24 hours, the ministry said in a statement.

Grameen Bank counsel sharpens barbs against Prof Yunus

Yunus' lawyer bins 'false claims'

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Grameen Bank's Chief Legal Adviser Masud Akhter yesterday said Nobel Laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus deceived 1.05 crore members of the bank and misappropriated their money, a claim Prof Yunus's lawyer vehemently denied.

"He is talking about curses. He has deceived 1.05 crore members of Grameen Bank. He has used and misappropriated their money for personal gains. Their curse has fallen upon him," he told reporters at a press briefing on the Supreme Court premises.

At a separate press briefing later in the day at the same place, Prof Yunus's lawyer Abdullah-Al-Mamun said there is no scope for embezzling Grameen Bank depositors' money under the rules of the Grameen Bank Ordinance, 1983, under which the bank was established.

The developments come after Grameen Bank went to the Anti-Corruption Commission, accusing

642m voters cast ballots in election

Says India EC, dismisses opposition concerns over ballot count

REUTERS, New Delhi

India's Election Commission (EC) said yesterday a record-breaking 642 million voters cast their ballots in the general election that concluded on June 1 and dismissed opposition concerns over how the votes would be counted.

The seven-phase vote - the world's largest - began on April 19 and was held in scorching summer heat in many parts of the country, with temperatures rising to nearly 50 degrees Celsius (122°F) in some north and northwestern regions.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi is seeking a third consecutive term and his Hindu nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP)-led alliance is projected to win a big majority, TV exit polls said on Saturday, ahead of the counting today.

"We have created a world record of 642 million proud Indian voters. This is a historic moment," Chief Election Commissioner Rajiv Kumar told reporters.

Although the 2024 turnout is higher than the 612 million voters who cast their ballots in 2019, it is about one percentage point lower than the 67.4 percent turnout five years back.

Turnout among 968 million registered voters was possibly lower in the initial phases because there was no single major issue to draw voters out in the heat, analysts said.

Kumar said the vote-counting process had been in place for decades and was "very robust".

"All work will be done transparently. If someone still tries to do something wrong, strict action will be taken," he said.

His comments on the vote-counting process came a day after the opposition INDIA alliance, led by Rahul Gandhi's Congress party, urged the commission to follow norms during counting.

The alliance of two dozen parties petitioned the EC to stick to its old system of completing counting postal votes before declaring

STATE SECRETS CASE

Ex-Pak PM Imran Khan acquitted

REUTERS, Islamabad

A High Court in Pakistan yesterday acquitted jailed former prime minister Imran Khan from a conviction on charges of leaking state secrets, his lawyer and his party said, but Khan will remain in prison for now due to a conviction in another case.

Khan, 71, was sentenced to 10 years in prison by a lower court on charges of making public a classified cable sent to Islamabad by Pakistan's ambassador in Washington in 2022.

Shah Mehmood Qureshi, who was Khan's foreign minister during his tenure from 2018-2022, was also acquitted of the charges.

"Thank God, the sentence is overturned," a spokesman for legal affairs from Khan's Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf party, Naeem Panjutha, said in a post on the X social media platform.

Despite the acquittal, Khan will remain in prison, having also been convicted in another case relating to his marriage to his third wife, Bushra Khan, contravening Islamic traditions.

Khan said on May 30 that February's national election was stolen from his party, describing it as the "biggest robbery of a public mandate".

Khan, speaking in the Supreme Court via video link from Adyala jail in the garrison city of Rawalpindi, said he was being held in solitary confinement.

His remarks were the first to be heard in open court since he was jailed in August.

'Drug dealer' shot dead in 'gunfight' with BGB

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

A suspected drug dealer was shot dead in a reported gunfight with members of Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB) in Ramu upazila, Cox's Bazar, early yesterday.

The incident took place in the Maricha area under Garjania union around 5:00am, said BGB Public Relations Officer Shariful Islam, in a statement.

The deceased was identified as Nezam Uddin, of the Khurushkul area under Cox's Bazar Sadar upazila. He walked out of jail six months ago after getting bail in a murder case, the release said.

According to the statement, around 150-200 drug smugglers, led by Nezam, opened fire at a BGB patrol team from Battalion 11 (Naikhongchhari) in Maricha.

When BGB troops returned fire in self-defence, the smugglers were forced to fall back and flee the scene.

Afterwards, at least 98 cartons of

LIVING GREEN

Making Everyday ECO-FRIENDLY

TAZRI MARWA AHMED

In today's world, living green is no longer just a trend—it's a necessity. With environmental concerns mounting, minimizing our ecological footprint has become imperative. From renewable energy to mindful consumption, every aspect of our lives offers an opportunity to contribute positively to environmental preservation. Join us as we explore the essence of living green and uncover ways to make everyday choices that prioritize the well-being of our planet.

TURNING WASTE INTO ENERGY

In Bangladesh, the trajectory of rising energy costs intersects with the alarming reality of mounting plastic waste. Dhaka alone generates a staggering 700 tons of plastic waste daily, with only 37% being recycled. However, amidst this challenge lies an opportunity—organic waste such as rice husks or coconut shells holds potential for conversion into electricity or biomass.

Ali Arsalan, the Managing Director of Atiya Consulting Ltd, shares, "We have vast potential in every major city in Bangladesh to begin segregating our daily waste, enabling easy treatment and recycling for various purposes, including energy generation. While government policies play a role, individual action is essential for success. " His company is focused on transforming waste liabilities into energy assets.

According to Syeda Rizwana Hasan, Chief Executive of Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association (BELA), we can start understanding our impact on the environment by looking at how much energy and water we use and waste, and whether we prefer local or imported products for our food and clothing. This helps us see how much harm we're causing and what we can do to live more eco-friendly.

We should also think about how much waste we produce and be aware of plastic pollution, especially by avoiding single-use plastics. We can do this by checking if we waste food, if our food is contaminated with chemicals, and by avoiding drinks and foods with chemicals. It's also good to think about growing our own food or buying directly from farmers, and using public transportation instead of driving a car. Lastly, we should get involved in protesting activities that harm the environment, added Syeda Rizwana Hasan.

SUSTAINABLE FASHION

People of all ages often find themselves buying more clothes than they need, resulting in overstuffed wardrobes. However, adopting a sustainable fashion approach not only benefits the environment but also allows individuals to look stylish by incorporating eco-friendly elements into their wardrobes.

Sustainable fashion is an integral part of a green lifestyle, involving the use of eco-friendly materials such as organic cotton, bamboo and recycled fabrics. Additionally, creating a minimalist wardrobe with versatile, timeless pieces and extending the life of garments through proper washing, repairing, and repurposing are excellent practices for promoting a green lifestyle.

Kumudini Handicrafts, a popular brand, offers many eco-friendly and sustainable products. Notably, Kumudini's clothing line for men, women, and children uses only natural dyes made from various tree parts, including branches, roots, and fruits.

Rafiqul Islam, Head of Operations at Kumudini Handicrafts, proudly notes "Our main goal is to encourage people to choose natural products, which not only protect the environment but also safeguard individuals from skin conditions and cancer caused by chemical dyes in fabrics."

HOME GARDENING

A popular local organization in Dhaka, Green Savers, promotes home gardening by planting trees in people's homes. According to Ahsan Rony, the founder of Green Savers, home gardening has become very popular in cities over the last 5-10 years. People with rooftop access are using their spaces for gardening and farming. Some create rooftop gardens for beautification and entertainment, while others commit to rooftop farming for fresh vegetables and fruits. Recently, a few individuals have even started earning money by producing and selling fruit saplings and ornamental plants from their rooftops.

"Most city dwellers have developed an understanding of global warming, and their small greening initiatives have led to cultural transformations. Greening has become a part of smart living," said Ahsan Rony. "As a result, senior citizens, newly married couples, office workers, and more are planting trees in their spaces, contributing to the environment in a small but effective way."

When asked how more people can adopt the habit of planting trees, Rony suggested that beginners start with a small pot plant on their desk or reading table. Observing daily changes, such as new leaves or spreading branches, can create a ripple effect, encouraging them to bring more plants into their surroundings. This process fosters empathy for plants, motivating beginners to become true plant lovers.

AVOID PLASTICS

People are more willing to switch to sustainable alternatives when they are made aware of the environmental impact of single-use plastics and are provided with viable options. EcoCutlet, a local brand in Dhaka, offers a diverse range of eco-friendly products, including wooden cutlery and areca leaf plates.

"Our wooden cutlery collection consists of disposable spoons, forks, and knives made from sustainably sourced wood, priced between 2 to 3 Taka, perfect for events and outdoor activities. At the same time, our selection of areca leaf plates includes biodegradable plates, bowls, trays, and food boxes crafted from areca leaves, available in multiple designs and sizes ranging from 4 to 10 inches, priced between 5 to 25 Taka," said Md. Azizul Haque, Co-Founder & CEO, EcoCutlet.

Md. Azizul also mentioned that they are excited to expand their eco-friendly product range with new additions, including 'Jute Stick Straws' as a sustainable alternative to single-use plastic straws, and durable, reusable 'Bamboo Straws.'

They are also introducing more bamboo and clay items, catering to consumers seeking quality, compostable options without sacrificing aesthetics and environmental friendliness.

SUSTAINABLE FOOD CHOICES

Incorporating green practices into every aspect of our daily lives is crucial, and making sustainable food choices is no exception. People need to become more mindful of the food they consume and its impact on the environment. One significant way to do this is by reducing meat and dairy consumption and embracing plant-based diets, which offer environmental benefits.

Moreover, home gardening provides an excellent opportunity to grow your own vegetables, herbs, and fruits, thereby reducing reliance on commercially grown produce. Additionally, minimizing food waste through meal planning, proper storage techniques, and creative use of leftovers is a simple yet effective way to promote sustainability in our food choices.

ENGAGE YOUR COMMUNITY

As an individual, embracing a green lifestyle involves not only making changes within your home but also extending your efforts to the community and beyond, collectively with others who share similar values.

A mother teaching her children to be responsible consumers can alter the family's behavior, potentially creating a ripple effect that extends to society.

Engaging in community gardening and tree-planting initiatives, which contribute to building urban green spaces, is a powerful way to make a positive impact on the environment. These activities not only beautify neighborhoods but also promote biodiversity and improve air quality. Furthermore, participating in local conservation projects and clean-up efforts provides opportunities to contribute to larger-scale environmental initiatives and foster a sense of community involvement.

"Changes in individual behavior can significantly influence broader societal shifts. For example, a mother teaching her children to be responsible consumers can alter the family's behavior, potentially creating a ripple effect that extends to society. A family may promote sustainable practices, encouraging others to follow suit. Electing the right leaders can foster positive changes. Similarly, an extravagant parent may model overspending, while a responsible parent encourages prudent habits. Connecting these dots is crucial; an individual may feel isolated if society is unresponsive. Nonetheless, maintaining personal integrity remains essential," said Syeda Rizwana Hasa.

A famous quote by Margaret Mead says, "Never doubt that a small group of thoughtful, committed citizens can change the world; indeed, it's the only thing that ever has."

Reimagining the urban ENVIRONMENT WITH RIVERS

NAHALY NAFISA KHAN

What good is a river to a city? Imagine strolling along the riverbanks on a lazy afternoon or just returning home from work. The picturesque sight that a river offers to city dwellers has its own charm. A river, as they say, has something to offer everyone.

Bangladesh is widely known as a river-borne country, with as many as 700 or more rivers listed in various archives, according to Banglapedia. Over the years, city dwellers have almost forgotten what urban life is like in a riverine country. Names like Buriganga or Shitalakhya don't positively resonate with us, thanks to pollution and encroachment. A 2019 report by the Water Development Board documented the names of 406 rivers. The curious case of missing rivers is not a mystery, due to open encroachment, pollution, erosion, and the eventual death of hundreds of rivers.

Architect and environmental activist Iqbal Habib said most major cities in the country originated from one or multiple rivers. "Apart from Dhaka, other cities or towns like Mymensingh, Cumilla, Rangpur, Sylhet, and Munshiganj were also heavily dependent on the rivers they originated from. Over time, through rapid unplanned urbanization and the expansion of roads and railways, the vast riverine network of canals and smaller water bodies started to be neglected and pushed to the verge of death by pollution," said Habib.

According to the Rivers and Delta Research Centre (RDRC), at least 56 rivers flowing through different parts of the country suffer from "extreme pollution" during lean periods when the natural flows of rivers are at their lowest. Habib said the construction of dams to the west end of the capital and unplanned urbanization on the eastern front are responsible for the death of rivers like the Buriganga, Dhaleshwari, and Bangshi. "WASA and the city authorities are also responsible for this. There is no proper waste management system except in Pagla and Rampura for the wastes to be processed before they go into the river," he added.

Reimagining the chaotic traffic situation in cities like Dhaka could greatly benefit from conserving our rivers and using them properly. Take the Hatirjheel water taxi service, for example. The service is available at five locations in the capital and operates from 6:30 AM to 10 AM, providing hassle-free transportation with a scenic view. "I was directly involved with the Hatirjheel project, which came into being after five years of environmentalist movement. After the completion of the Hatirjheel project in 2010, there was genuine reason for hope for us to recover the remaining canals and the old riverine network for the capital," said Habib.

"However, we could not maintain the progress. The greed and profit-centric approach of those in authority are responsible for that. The city authorities have been unable to come up with a master plan for river conservation in the last three and a half years," he added.

It's not just the economic benefits we are missing out on by letting our urban rivers rot. Rivers also impact local climate patterns. Rivers and related natural spaces help to cool the surrounding area, reducing the effects of urban heat islands. In another sense, rivers have a life of their own that adds vibrancy to the city they surround. The pollution and death of rivers in urban spaces come at the cost of the connection between the residents and the rivers, according to Habib.

"I still believe that reimagining urban life with rivers is a possibility. We have been fighting for this for the last 35 years. We need strong political will to make this happen. We owe it to the next generation," said Habib.

Building Green SAVING GREEN

As urban landscapes in Bangladesh continue to expand, the concept of eco-friendly structures is transitioning from a trend to a necessity. These structures, designed with environmental sustainability in mind, offer a blueprint for the future, promoting sustainability while providing healthier living spaces for occupants. Their benefits extend beyond the structures themselves – contributing substantially to environmental conservation, economic savings, and improved human health.

AYMAN ANIKA

At the core of eco-friendly structures is efficiency. An expert from Navana Real Estate Ltd. notes, "In our eco-friendly designs, we primarily focus on minimising utility consumption, especially in water and energy. For instance, we reuse water from handwashing basins in toilet flush systems."

COURTESY: MIRANDA_RANGS PROPERTIES LTD

Eco-friendly structures often incorporate natural elements into their design. Features like green roofs, vertical gardens, and landscaped terraces not only enhance aesthetics but also help reduce heat absorption, lowering the need for air conditioning.

Choosing the right materials is also crucial for eco-friendly construction. This involves utilising materials that are recycled, renewable, or sourced with minimal environmental impact, such as bamboo flooring, recycled steel, or reclaimed wood. Employing these materials helps reduce resource depletion, decrease pollution, and lower the carbon footprint of the structure.

The indoor environment is a vital aspect of eco-friendly structures. Low-emitting materials are preferred to improve air quality and occupant health. An expert from Dulux Paints advises, "While high-gloss paints are popular, they contain higher levels of VOCs. We recommend matte-finished paints as healthier, more environmentally friendly options."

The economic advantages of eco-friendly structures, particularly in terms of reduced operating costs and increased property values, make them an appealing investment. "Our clients have responded positively to our eco-friendly designs," remarks the expert from Navana Real Estate, highlighting a growing demand among homeowners for sustainable and environmentally conscious designs.

The economic advantages of eco-friendly structures, particularly in terms of reduced operating costs and increased property values, make them an appealing investment.

One primary challenge in Bangladesh is the higher initial cost associated with eco-friendly construction projects. Technologies such as solar panels, energy-efficient systems, and sustainable building materials require a substantial upfront investment. Many builders and buyers are deterred by these initial costs, opting for the short-term savings offered by traditional construction methods.

An expert from Rangs Properties Limited points out, "We are yet to achieve the capacity to construct structures that adhere to international eco-friendly standards. The journey toward full compliance with international standards demands significant investments and a broader understanding of what such structures entail beyond mere aesthetics such as green landscaping."

The Impact of Green Finance in Bangladesh

CHARTING AGREENER FUTURE

PRIYAM PAUL

Bangladesh has been profoundly affected by global human-induced climate change, despite its minimal contribution to the problem. The consequences are stark, with the country experiencing frequent cyclones, tornadoes, floods, coastal and riverbank erosion, droughts, landslides, heat waves, and prolonged summer seasons. According to the Global Climate Risk Index 2021, Bangladesh is ranked as the seventh most disaster-prone country in the world, underscoring its extreme vulnerability to both natural disasters and climate change.

In response to this existential environmental crisis, the banking sector has taken proactive measures by offering green finance loans, refinancing options, and dedicated funds aimed at mitigating the devastating effects of climate change and promoting a sustainable future for Bangladesh.

"We are pioneers in green financing, an initiative started by the central bank in 2009-2010. The United Nations recognized Bangladesh Bank as the first central bank to implement green finance, and now other central banks have followed suit. We created a fund with 200 crores for refinancing small and medium enterprises with only three products," shares Professor Atiur Rahman, former governor of Bangladesh Bank.

He also elaborated on the context of why the green fund for small and medium enterprises was expanded to include heavy industries, such as the garment sector, noting that Bangladesh has been globally recognized for its RMG products.

"After the Rana Plaza incident, we secured a three million dollar fund from the World Bank and another three million dollars from Bangladesh Bank, which continue to support the green transformation fund. The results have been fantastic, with over 200 green factories established and another 500 in the pipeline. Out of the 20 best green factories in the world, 18 are now in Bangladesh," adds Atiur Rahman.

According to the central bank's latest report, the total amount of green finance disbursed during FY23 was BDT 126.41 billion by banks and BDT 23.58 billion by NBFIs. Green finance accounted for 5.84 percent of the total term loan disbursements.

The central bank has made Environmental and Social Risk Rating (ESRR) mandatory for banks and NBFIs, under ESRM guidelines. During FY23, 229,592 projects were rated using the Environmental and Social Due Diligence (ESDD) checklist. A total of BDT 4,165 billion was disbursed across 179,022 rated projects in FY23. Additionally, a total of BDT 0.88 billion was utilized from the climate risk fund by banks and NBFIs in FY23, provided as grants.

The green banking policy has encouraged banks to establish online branches and power them with solar energy. By the end of FY23, there were 720 branches powered by solar energy. Moreover, the sustainability rating methodology for banks and NBFIs, circulated on December 31, 2021, includes green refinance as one of its five components. This rating assesses the performance of banks and NBFIs in terms of their sustainability practices.

> According to the central bank's latest report, the total amount of green finance disbursed during FY23 was BDT 126.41 billion by banks and BDT 23.58 billion by NBFIs. Green finance accounted for 5.84 percent of the total term loan disbursements.

In 2009, a revolving refinance scheme worth BDT 2.0 billion was instituted to offer accessible financing for green products and initiatives. This fund was later augmented to BDT 4.0 billion. Initially, the scheme identified six green products or initiatives for the refinance facility. By FY22, the number of eligible green products and initiatives for refinance had risen to 68.

The central bank's latest initiative to promote sustainable finance is the establishment of the Green Transformation Fund (GTF). Initially targeted at the export-oriented textile, leather, and jute sectors, it was later expanded to encompass all export-oriented industries, facilitating sustainable export growth as the nation transitions to a greener economy. As per the Bangladesh Bank report, disbursements from the Green Transformation Fund (GTF) totaled USD 140.94 million across 47 projects and Euro 71.21 million across 30 projects by FY22. Furthermore, by June 30, 2023, BDT 1778 million had been disbursed to five clients of four banks from the local currency GTF fund.

Bankers opine that if projects are carefully selected, green finance loans are unlikely to turn into bad debts over time. Consequently, they foresee significant potential for green finance.

"In 2023 alone, EBL financed BDT 1,180 crore across 385 diverse projects dedicated to promoting energy and resource efficiency, effective liquid waste management, circular economy ventures, LEED certified factories, green CMSMEs, information and communication technology projects, and more," shares Ali Reza Iftekhar, Managing Director, Eastern Bank PLC.

"BRAC Bank has been recognized as one of the top sustainable banks in Bangladesh for the past three consecutive years. We continuously emphasize green and sustainable financing, increasing the percentage of such financing each year. In the last quarter, we disbursed BDT 15,472 million in green financing, constituting 23% of our total term loan disbursements," says Md. Sabbir Hossain, DMD & Chief Sustainability Officer, BRAC Bank PLC.

"Our bank consistently prioritizes green finance. As a result, we were among the top 10 award recipients from the Central Bank for sustainable finance in 2020 and 2021. Last year, we disbursed loans to approximately 100,000 borrowers across all loan segments with a particular focus on small clients, totaling BDT 53170.77 million only for sustainable finance, including BDT 182 million in green finance. Moving forward, we aim to provide loans for renewable energy, solar projects, environmentally-friendly buildings, and energy-efficient equipment for manufacturing," states Shafiuzzaman, AMD & Chief Credit Officer at Bank Asia PLC.

When asked about whether the existing level of green finance is adequate to tackle Bangladesh's urgent climate and environmental issues, Atiur Rahman points out that the current financial crisis has somewhat slowed the flow of green investment. Yet, he remains optimistic that once the financial situation stabilizes, there will be a resurgence of initiatives aimed at bolstering this crucial sector.

FACING THE CRISIS

Environmental Challenges in Bangladesh

Bangladesh is the seventh most vulnerable country to climate change.

Between 2000 and 2019, the country faced 185 extreme weather events.

The mean temperature rose by 0.39°C from 1991-2000, 0.53°C from 2001-2010, and 1.06°C from 2011-2019.

Climate change has made heatwaves 45 times more likely in Bangladesh and South Asia.

Sea levels in Bangladesh are rising 3.8 to 5.8 mm annually, outpacing the global average.

Salt-affected coastal areas in Bangladesh have increased by 27% since the 1970s, impacting crops and livelihoods.

In the past 50 years, Bangladesh has experienced about 20 droughts, with the northwest particularly vulnerable.

Tropical cyclones cause $1 billion in losses annually.

Dhaka ranks second globally in methane emission, with 47% of emissions stemming from garbage.

Bangladesh lost 246,000 hectares of forest between 2001 and 2023.

The number of rivers is 907. Till November 2021, a total of 65,127 river grabbers had encroached on various parts and foreshores of some 770 rivers.

From 2015 to 2022, lightning strikes killed 2,142 people and injured 538 others in Bangladesh.

Current contribution to global greenhouse gas (GHG) - 0.4 percent.

Bangladesh's shifting climate exacerbates conditions for diseases like dengue, malaria, and chikungunya. Between January and April 2024, there were 2,290 cases of dengue, with 24 fatalities.

In 2022, 7.2 million people in nine north-eastern districts severely affected by the flash flood.

In 2005, Bangladesh was one of the first least developed countries to put forward a national adaptation programme of action

In 2009, Bangladesh developed its Climate Change Strategy and Action Plan, a blueprint for other climate-vulnerable nations.

Modi wins but resurgent INDIA steals the show

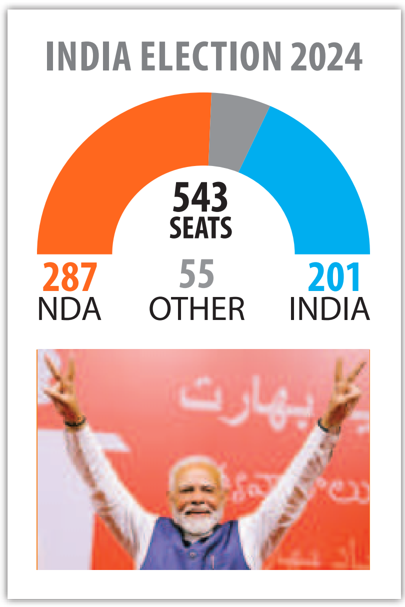
Prime Minister Narendra Modi's political alliance won India's weeks-long general election yesterday, but his Hindu nationalist party lost its outright majority for the first time in a decade.

The outcome spooked investors, with stocks falling steeply as emerging results showed that Modi would, for the first time since sweeping to power in 2014, have to depend on at least three disparate regional parties whose political loyalties have wavered over the years.

This, analysts say, could introduce some uncertainty into policymaking after a decade in which Modi has ruled with an authoritative hold.

NDA, the alliance led by Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi's Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), secured a parliamentary majority at the country's general election, official results showed late yesterday.



With a few constituencies still left to declare, it had secured 272 seats, enough for a majority in the 543-seat parliament, results on the election commission website showed.

The BJP itself had won 224 seats and was leading in 16 more for a projected total of 240 -- by far the largest party but a significant drop from the 303 seats it won at the last polls in 2019.

The main opposition Congress party had won 88 seats and was leading in 11 for a projected total of 99, nearly double the 52 it secured five years ago.

The NDA coalition was on track to win at least 291 seats.

Modi's BJP won a majority on its own in 2014, ending India's era of unstable coalition governments, and repeated the feat in 2019.

Modi said people had placed their faith in the BJP-led coalition for a third time and it was historic, in his first comments since the counting of votes began.

"I bow to the people for this affection and assure them that we will continue the good work done in the last decade to keep fulfilling the aspirations of people," he posted on X.

Tight budget in austere times

REJAUL KARIM BYRON and ASIFUR RAHMAN

With an aim to restore macroeconomic stability, reduce inflation, and contain pressure on foreign currency reserves, Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali is going to place a Tk 7,96,900 crore budget for the 2024-25 fiscal year tomorrow.

"The upcoming budget will be a tight and cautious one," a top finance ministry official involved with the budget formulation told The Daily Star.

The new budget is likely to be just 4.6 percent bigger than the current one, much lower than the year-on-year average spike of 11 percent seen in the last five years. The current fiscal year's budget was 12.35 percent larger than the previous year's.

Even during the peak of the coronavirus pandemic, which brought the economy to a halt amid countrywide lockdowns, budgets grew around 9 percent.

The finance minister is going to place his first budget at a time when the economy is going through a prolonged economic crisis, driven by both external and internal factors.

The government's fiscal position has tightened owing to lower-than-expected revenue collections. Therefore, it is not possible to raise the budget size as per expectations.

Zahid Hussain, a former lead economist at the World Bank's Dhaka office, said the ongoing crisis has three dimensions: high inflation, the US dollar

Mamata aura prevails as BJP stumbles in West Bengal

OUR CORRESPONDENT, New Delhi

The aura of West Bengal Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee remains undiminished even after 13 years in power. She reaffirmed her status as the numero uno street-savvy politician as her party Trinamool Congress coasted to a memorable victory in parliamentary elections in the state.

TMC has already won 16 seats and is leading in 13 other constituencies. Its nearest challenger BJP have so far won two seats and is leading in 10 others.

TMC's performance, if sustained until the final results, would mark its second-best showing in the state since the 2014 elections when it secured 34 seats.

Its victory came in the face of a sustained campaign by Prime Minister Narendra Modi and Home Minister Amit Shah on the two issues of alleged corruption and atrocities on women

'A victory that feels like defeat'

NEWS ANALYSIS

By all accounts, Prime Minister Narendra Modi-led Bharatiya Janata Party looks set to return for a rare third consecutive term to rule India. It has emerged as the largest single party but failed to reach the majority mark on its own. The opposition INDIA alliance led by Congress made a strong comeback that has done the spadework for a check and balance in a democracy.

How? As an analyst has aptly commented: the election has given a victory that feels like defeat and a defeat that is akin to a win.

With Modi's and BJP's repeated claim of '400 paar' shredded, the mandate has dented Modi's electoral invincibility. The INDIA (Indian National Developmental Inclusive Alliance) has come out of the polls as a force to reckon with in India's politics as a viable opposition in the time to come.

The opposition bloc has reversed all exit poll predictions by leading in at least 228 seats, according to the latest numbers. However, despite a stiff contest, the BJP-led NDA is inching closer towards the 300-mark, standing at 297 at the moment.

From 52 seats in the 2019 Lok Sabha polls, its worst performance in parliamentary elections, Congress has come a long way this year. The party is leading in 99 seats. Even though the party stares at another five-year stint in the opposition benches in the Lok Sabha, the result is likely to shape its future political course, policies and strategies. As a senior leader of the party from Uttar Pradesh said, "Some defeats are more important than victories because they provide you the learning curve leading to a resurgent journey."

WORLD ENVIRONMENT DAY

Land the size of Dhaka city degrades every year

Finds govt study, raises alarm over food security

MOHAMMAD AL-MASUM MOLLA

Soil degradation in Bangladesh is happening at a faster pace than earlier thought, and it is threatening the country's food security.

Every year, the physical, chemical, and biological or economic properties of soil are degrading on around 270 sq km area, roughly the size of Dhaka city.

"If the trend continues, there will be no cultivable land within the next 63 years," said Ameer Md Zahid, chief scientific officer at the Soil Resource Development Institute (SRDI) of the Department of Environment (DoE).

The SRDI conducted a study which revealed that the trend of soil degradation has been continuing for 20 years.

Today is World Environment Day. This year's theme is "Our Land, Our Future. We are #GenerationRestoration". This year's theme emphasises the importance of restoring land, combating desertification, and enhancing resilience to drought.

> "If the trend continues, there will be no cultivable land within the next 63 years."
> AMEER MD ZAHID, chief scientific officer at SRDI

Ameer told The Daily Star that if immediate actions were not taken to stop the soil degradation, the country's food security would be threatened.

Soil degradation is the decline in soil fertility, organic matter depletion, acidification, salinisation, soil pollution, soil erosion, riverbank erosion, sand overwash, drought, waterlogging, soil sealing, and ecosystem degradation.

The SRDI study, styled "Land Degradation in Bangladesh 2020", found that soil degradation of moderate to very severe levels happened on 1.124 crore hectares in 2020. The study was published in 2022.

"It is about 76.2 percent of the country. The degraded land is 0.54 million hectares [5.4 lakh] higher than the previous estimation of 10.70 million [1.070 crore] hectares of 2000," the report said.

Experts said poor soil health has a direct impact on the country's life, agriculture, and the environment.

They said the country's soil is deteriorating mainly due to the excessive use of chemical fertilisers, rising salinity, industrial pollution, deforestation, and the improper dumping of electronic and medical wastes.

They also blamed the population boom, temperature rise, and excessive cultivation for the soil

KL unlikely to extend deadline for Bangladeshis

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Malaysia has no plans to extend the May 31 deadline for foreign workers' entry into the Southeast Asian country even though Bangladesh appealed for allowing in 17,000 Bangladeshi migrants who have visas but missed the deadline.

Malaysian Home Minister Saifuddin Nasution Ismail told reporters in Penang yesterday that all factors, including quota approval, health checks, visa processing, and flight arrangements, were considered before setting the May 31 deadline.

"So, if you ask me whether there would be an extension of time, the answer is no. We announced the May 31 deadline a long time ago," reported Malaysian daily

It was Tanvir Bhuiyan who lured the Jhenaidah-4 MP Anwarul Azim Anar to Kolkata as part of a mission to kill him.

He even assisted in the murder, which took place at a flat in Kolkata's New Town, and ensured the death by pressing a pillow to Azim's face.

Tanvir crossed the Benapole border and went to Kolkata on May 6 as per the plan, made by his uncle Amanullah alias Shimul Biswas, who coordinated the killing.

Tanvir took a room in a residential hotel named "Trishib" in New Town and held meetings there with Amanullah multiple times to discuss the execution.

He disclosed all these details in a confessional statement before a Dhaka court yesterday, said sources at the court and the Detective Branch of police.

After recording his statement, the court sent Tanvir to jail.

Earlier at noon, Mahfuzur Rahman, the investigation officer of the abduction case and also a senior assistant commissioner of DB, produced Tanvir before the court.

No more structures in Rohingya camps: PM

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said the government will not allow new structures in Rohingya camps.

"It would not be wise to allow new structures in Rohingya camps in Cox's Bazar as ecological imbalance has been caused due to massive deforestation," she said.

The PM said this while Japanese Special Envoy for National Reconciliation in Myanmar Yohei Sasakawa called on her at the Gono Bhaban.

The PM's speech writer Md Nazrul Islam briefed reporters afterwards.

Hasina said if Rohingyas are taken to Bhashan Char, their quality of life will improve.

She sought the Nippon Foundation chairman's support for the repatriation Rohingyas to Myanmar.

Yohei Sasakawa lauded the accommodation facilities of Rohingyas in Bhashan Char, and said that Nippon Foundation is keen to providing training to the Rohingyas to boost their income as well as education to Rohingya children.

14 MONEY LAUNDERING CASES

PK Halder's associate Bashudeb, his wife sent to jail

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday sent Bashudeb Banerjee, an associate of PK Halder and the then director of International Leasing and Financial Services (ILFS), and his wife Papia Banerjee, also a director of the institution, to jail after rejecting their bail petitions in 14 money laundering cases.

Prashanta Kumar Halder, known as PK Halder, a former managing director of NRB Global Bank, is reportedly involved in Tk 10,000 crore loan scam. He was arrested in Ashoknagar, India on May 14, 2022.

Judge Mohammad Ash-Shams Joglul Hossain of Dhaka Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court passed the order after the couple surrendered before it, seeking bail in the cases, said ACC Public Prosecutor Mosharraf Hossain Kajol.

Earlier on May 23, the Supreme Court directed the couple to surrender before the trial court concerned by June 4 in connection with money laundering cases against them.

The apex court also scrapped the High Court orders that on May 9 granted anticipatory bail to Bashudeb and Papia in 14 and five money laundering cases respectively.

It asked the lower court concerned to dispose of the bail petitions if Bashudeb and Papia filed the petition after surrendering in accordance with the law.

degradation in Bangladesh.

The Barind tract in the north of the country is being exposed to desertification due to water scarcity, while the coastal region in the south is being exposed to serious salinity.

"We are in a vulnerable situation. We are seeing a trend of expansion of draught areas in Bangladesh due to poor rainfall and depletion of groundwater," said Md Harunor Rashid Khan, professor and chairman at the department of soil, water, and environment at Dhaka University.

He said apart from man-made disasters, Bangladesh is also witnessing the impacts of climate change in the forms of cyclones, flooding, and temperature rise.

Due to excessive use of fertilisers, beneficial microorganisms in the soil are rapidly declining. Plants are not receiving necessary nutrients from the soil. Even after the excessive use of fertilisers, some plants are not growing, he said.

Experts said soil degrades and neutralises naturally, but over the last 50 years the neutralisation has not happened due to human interventions and climate change.

They said now the soil is not getting any rest from agricultural production as almost all land available is being used for cultivation round the year. And high-yield crops are being grown, which puts extra stress on the soil.

"At the cost of soil health, we are getting food. The soil does not get rest, and we harm the microorganisms in the soil by using chemical feritilisers and pesticides. In Bangladesh, scarcity of land is a big issue and degradation of soil is a double blow," said ASM Fazle Bari, an associate professor of the department of soil science at Sher-e-Bangla Agricultural University.

Meanwhile, the government has set a target to improve soil fertility on 2,000 sq km by 2030.

Environment Minister Saber Hossain Chowdhury said, "We have identified the zones where the land has degraded. We will take up zone-specific projects to address the crucial land degradation issue, and the FAO [Food and Agriculture Organisation] is cooperating with us. Apart from this, the government is also planning to take up projects to address the issue."

He said of the 23 lakh hectares of forest land, approximately 5.3 lakh hectares have degraded. The deforestation rate is about 10,000 hectares a year.

"We plan to restore 2 lakh hectares by 2030 and will work with development partners and allocate government funds to achieve this."

Modi wins but resurgent

Democratic Alliance (NDA) was seen getting a two-thirds majority and more.

"The NDA will form the government for the third time. PM Modi will be sworn in for the third time. Congress will sit in opposition for the third time," said BJP spokesperson Jaiveer Shergill.

"Introspection about the slide and the decrease in the seats will be done threadbare. We will put our ears to the ground," he said.

Modi, 73, who first swept to power in 2014 by promising growth and change, is seeking to be only the second prime minister after India's independence leader Jawaharlal Nehru to win three straight terms.

Two key regional allies in the NDA endorsed Modi as the next prime minister, rejecting local media speculation that they could be wavering in their support or possibly switch sides.

The Telugu Desam Party (TDP) and Janata Dal (United) said their pre-poll alliance with BJP was intact and they would form the next government.

The BJP's numbers were likely pulled down by the party's poor showing in the country's most populous state, Uttar Pradesh, which also sends 80 lawmakers to parliament. The party was leading in 33 seats in the state, down from the 62 it won in 2019, with analysts saying bread-and-butter issues had overshadowed the BJP's appeal to the Hindu majority.

In Maharashtra, the INDIA bloc won or was leading in 29 seats while NDA won or was leading in 18 seats. The state sends 48 lawmakers to the Lok Sabha.

Analysts also said a grand temple to the Hindu god Lord Ram that Modi inaugurated in January had not boosted the BJP's fortunes as it was expected to.

Celebrations had already begun at the headquarters of Modi's BJP before the full announcement of results.

But the mood at the Congress headquarters in New Delhi was also one of jubilation.

"BJP has failed to win a big majority on its own," Congress lawmaker Rajeev Shukla told reporters. "It's a moral defeat for them."

Congress leader Rahul Gandhi was also defiant.

"The country has unanimously and clearly stated, we do not want Narendra Modi and Amit Shah to be involved in the running of this country, we do not like the way they have run this country," Rahul Gandhi told reporters, referring to Modi's powerful number two, Home Minister Shah. "That is a huge message."

He said Congress would hold talks with its allies today and decide on the future course of action when asked if the opposition would try to form a government.

The result also worked as a shot in the arm for Congress after two humiliating defeats at the hands of Modi's BJP in the previous two elections.

Tight budget in austere times crunch, and the financial distress.

"It is difficult for the finance minister to handle the situation politically, but it is needed for the economy."

He said those who supported the government during the last election will try to reap the benefits. Therefore, he urged the finance minister to strike a balance between the economic needs and the interests of big players.

"Success will depend on that balance only."

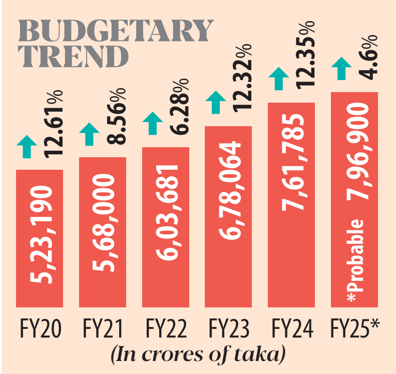
Mostafa Kamal, the previous finance minister, placed his first budget in 2019-20 when it was 12.61 percent bigger than the previous one. His predecessor AMA Muhith presented a 12.59 percent larger budget in 2013-14.

Yesterday, finance ministry officials said the government's prime target is to contain inflation, resolve the dollar crunch and achieve a moderate GDP growth.

Average inflation grew 9.73 percent in the first 11 months of the current financial year, which was 8.64 percent during the identical period a year prior. In 2022-23, the average inflation rate was 9.02 percent, far higher than the average of 6 percent in recent years.

When it comes to the foreign currency regime, Bangladesh has been witnessing one of the worst dollar shortages in recent times, as higher outflows of the American currency owing to escalated commodity prices and money laundering exceeded inflows.

The economic growth was one of the major victims of the current crisis. The country registered a 5.82 percent growth in gross domestic product (GDP) in 2023-24, up from 5.78 percent in FY23. This was, however, lower than in previous years.



The economic growth target was set at more than 7 percent in the current fiscal year, and the target for next year is likely to be 6.75 percent.

The government has also set an ambitious inflation target of 6.5 percent.

In the upcoming budget, the government is likely to contain the budget deficit to 4.6 percent of GDP, a level last seen a decade ago. The deficit is likely to be Tk 2,57,000 crore.

The government has plans to get foreign loan and grant allocations of Tk 1,00,000 crore. The rest of the Tk 1,57,000 crore of deficit will be met by domestic borrowing.

According to the officials, the bank borrowing target for FY25 will be more or less the same as the current fiscal year's Tk 1,32,000 crore.

"It is to avoid the crowding-out effect for the private sector," said an official.

Zahid Hussain said under the economic circumstances, the budget deficit should be less than Tk 2,30,000 crore.

"It will be good for containing inflation and curbing the foreign exchange pressure. Besides, the private sector will get sufficient loans."

The government has for the first time reduced its funding for the Annual Development Programme.

The highest expenditure for FY25 would likely be for interest payments at Tk 1,29,000 crore. Subsidies may cost Tk 1,12,000 crore while government officials' salaries and pensions may total Tk 1,00,000 crore.

In revenue collection, the government is likely to set an achievable target of Tk 5,40,000 crore, an eight percent increase over the previous year's.

The target for the National Board of Revenue is likely to be Tk 4,80,000 crore.

The budget may include an opportunity for legalising undisclosed wealth by paying 15 percent tax.

'A victory that feels like defeat'

Sabha, a much-needed recognition of the strength of the principal opposition party with national footprints and a far cry from BJP's vision of a "Congress-mukt Bharat."

The result will also consolidate Congress's pole position in the opposition alliance and allow it to control some regional allies like TMC.

The principal opposition party banked on three factors to fight the election this time: the formation of INDIA bloc, its manifesto raising the bread and butter issues like inflation and joblessness, promising a slew of cash doles as well as appealing to caste groups and its sustained campaign to protect the Constitution to safeguard the reservation.

Several factors are behind NDA's result this year. Modi's consistently pressing hard with a polarising narrative for much of the electioneering to counter his political rivals, the law of diminishing return of the consecration of the Ram temple in Ayodhya issue and the remarkable rise of INDIA, a loosely-crafted opposition alliance of 28 parties less than a year ago – all have played their parts. It also shows that every emotive issue, however appealing, has a shelf life and creates fatigue among voters if played repeatedly at the expense of other more pressing issues.

The INDIA bloc made deep inroads in several politically crucial Hindi heartland states including Uttar Pradesh which sends the highest number of lawmakers to the Lok Sabha (80). The alliance has made steady headway in Rajasthan, Bihar, Haryana and Jharkhand. The Hindi-speaking belt has 225 seats.

In Uttar Pradesh, Akhilesh Yadav-led Samajwadi Party made a turnaround like a phoenix rising from the ashes. SP has now become the third largest party in parliament with 38 MPs at the time of writing this.

UP played a big role in BJP's 2014 landslide victory with the party winning 71 seats of 80. BJP held its ground in 2019 by winning 62. In 2019, Samajwadi Party won just five seats, Congress one and Bahujan Samaj Party 10.

Another state where BJP has lost considerable ground is Maharashtra, India's most industrialised state, especially after the saffron party played a role in the split of the two regional heavyweights Shiv Sena, its former ideological ally, and NCP.

Behind the remarkable turnaround for Samajwadi Party are some interesting factors which appear to have given them an upper hand over BJP.

One of the factors that worked in favour of SP was getting the caste calculus right in the ticket distribution strategy. Unlike previous elections, the SP this time prioritised non-Yadav, and other backward caste candidates. It worked as it attracted voters who rallied behind BJP in the past 2 elections.

While SP fielded only five Yadavs, all from the family of party chief Akhilesh Yadav, it gave 27 tickets to non-Yadav OBCs, 11 to upper castes, including Brahmins, Thakurs, Vaishyas and one Khatri, four to Muslims, besides 15 Dalit candidates in reserved constituencies. Also, SP changed its nominees in several constituencies after taking feedback from the ground.

On the other hand, BJP, which contested 75 seats in UP this time put up 34 upper caste candidates, and 25 OBCs, including one Yadav and the remaining 16 to scheduled castes.

Unlike BJP which concentrated more on blitzkrieg through grand rallies featuring Modi, Home Minister Amit Shah and Chief Minister Yogi Adityanath, the poll campaign of SP-Congress combine settled for less grandiose events and instead focused on reaching out to local communities. The SP's victory is well spread out across UP. It has won seats in western, central and eastern parts of India's most populous state. It also gained seats in Bundelkhand which was electorally dominated by BJP in the last two Lok Sabha elections in 2014 and 2019.

And finally, Modi's larger-than-life persona loomed large over the election. Across India, his face was splashed in posters, graffiti and ads on TV and the print media. This was as much due to the BJP as to the opposition which, despite repeatedly terming the election as a battle of ideologies, constantly targeted Modi keeping him in the discussion. So much so that it became Modi versus the rest story.

KL unlikely to extend deadline

New Straits Times, quoting Saifuddin.

Malaysia had set the deadline for foreign workers amid alleged exploitation of Bangladeshi migrant workers.

Four UN independent experts said recruitment fees for the Bangladeshi migrant workers in Malaysia ranged between $4,500 and $6000, which is the highest in the world and that many of them were risking destitution and detention.

According to the Bureau of Manpower, Employment, and Training (BMET) of Bangladesh, as of May 31, it granted emigration clearance to 4,93,642 workers, but 4,76,672 could leave for Malaysia by the deadline, meaning around 16,970 failed to go.

Saifuddin said, "Between May 28 and 31, we recorded the entry of more than 20,000 foreign workers into the country. Some of them obtained their visas as early as November last year."

He questioned why employers waited so long to arrange for their workers' arrival if they were urgently needed.

Bangladesh had requested a special one-off period to allow the workers to enter Malaysia, but Saifuddin reiterated that the current projection for foreign workers, including those leaving through check-out memos, was 2.6 million by the end of December, surpassing the Economic Planning Unit's projection of 2.5 million.

"For the manufacturing, services, and construction sectors, we have met the foreign worker needs projections. For farming and agriculture, we will process according to the approved quota with no new approvals, considering each case individually," he said.

Meanwhile, the Ministry of Expatriates' Welfare and Overseas Employment of Bangladesh has issued a circular asking the aspirant migrants, who failed to go to Malaysia despite having emigration clearances and BMET smart cards, to provide detailed information to the email (enquiry.committee.malaysia@gmail.com) by June 8.

The information should include name, full address, mobile phone number, name of the recruiting agency, passport number, and copy of the BMET smart card.

MIGRANTS' CONTRIBUTION

Volker Türk, UN high commissioner for human rights, has called for Malaysia to stem hate speech and disinformation campaigns against migrants and refugees, and appreciate and respect the manifold contribution of the migrants.

In a statement yesterday following a two-day visit to Malaysia, he quoted a research commissioned by his office and said a clear majority of Malaysians see the benefits that migration brings to the country's economy and society.

and land-grab in Sandeshkhali by some ruling party leaders.

It must have been a sweet payback time for TMC this time. The party had been seething after the previous national polls in the state when it won 22 seats and BJP pulled off a surprise, winning 18 seats out of nowhere to emerge as the main opposition in the state despite a rickety organisational presence and lack of charismatic leaders.

In this year's polls, BJP also suffered two heavy defeats. Two of its key leaders -- Dilip Ghosh and SS Ahluwalia -- lost in Bardhaman-Durgapur and Asansol constituencies respectively.

Already in sharp decline in West Bengal since it was voted out of power in 1977, Congress too suffered a big blow when its state chief Adhir Ranjan Chowdhury lost to debutant Yousuf Pathan, former India cricketer and TMC candidate, by 85,022 votes in Baharampur constituency. This is the first time TMC won the Baharampur seat.

Another senior Congress leader Pradip Bhattacharya was in third position behind TMC turncoat Tapas Roy of BJP in Kolkata Uttar constituency.

The results in West Bengal in the 2024 election belied exit polls projection of substantial gains for BJP. At least two exit polls, Matrize and Jan Ki Baat, had allocated 21-25 and 21-26 seats to BJP, respectively.

However, in the Tamluk constituency, BJP candidate Abhijit Gangopadhyay has taken a lead of 76,867 votes against his closest competitor, Debangshu Bhattacharya of TMC.

Gangopadhyay, who entered politics by joining the BJP immediately after quitting as a judge at the Calcutta High Court, has been at the centre of political discourse due to his judgements on various scams related to education in the state. During his tenure as a judge, Gangopadhyay issued multiple orders directing the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) and the Enforcement Directorate (ED) to investigate allegations of bribery and other irregularities in the recruitment process of teaching and non-teaching staff in West Bengal government-sponsored and aided schools.

WORKERS MISSING DEADLINE

Baira blames Malaysian govt, expat ministry

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh Association for International Recruiting Agencies yesterday denied responsibility for the debacle involving approximately 17,000 aspiring migrant workers who missed the May 31 deadline to fly to Malaysia.

Instead, it attributed the mismanagement to the Malaysian government and Bangladesh's Ministry of Expatriates' Welfare and Overseas Employment.

The claims were made at a press conference held at the Bangamata Sheikh Fazilatunessa Mujib Convention Hall on the capital's Minto Road.

Representatives from around a hundred private companies accused of irregularities in the recruitment process attended the event.

"The Malaysian government continued issuing visas even after the May 31 deadline. E-visas were issued on June 2, which is peculiar. Yet, our ministry granted clearances despite knowing that it was impossible to arrange flights for them," said Baira Secretary General Ali Haider Chowdhury.

Around 2-3 percent of BMET-certified workers fail to travel to their destination country, primarily because companies are blacklisted for misconduct or due to ticket unavailability, said Mohammad Ruhul Amin Swapan, former secretary general of Baira.

He said the number of Malaysia-bound workers missing the May 31 deadline was no more than 5,000-6,000, contrary to the expat ministry's figure of 16,970.

PLASTIC POLLUTION invades the Sundarbans

DIPANKAR ROY, KHULNA

A group of primates wrestled with a plastic bag caught in the tangled roots of a mangrove tree. Their screeches echoed through the dense forest as they tore at the flimsy material, desperate for the scraps of food trapped inside.

This wasn't natural, little did they know about the harmful impacts of plastic or polythene on wildlife, or the forest they live in.

In a recent visit to the forest (before cyclone Remal), this correspondent observed that single-use plastics, used in Khulna and other areas near the Sundarbans, have made their way into the forest.

Besides, plastic bottles were seen scattered along the banks of Bhairab river near the forest.

Researchers have found that fish in the rivers and seas had plastic in their stomachs. This plastic, eventually, makes its way into the human system.

Back in January 2020, the High Court directed a ban on single-use plastics in hotels, motels, and restaurants in coastal areas. But three years on, the plastic menace continues unabated. The lack of enforcement and public awareness has turned this issue into an environmental crisis.

The ease of use and ready availability of single-use plastics have made them a ubiquitous part of daily lives. But this convenience comes at a steep cost -- the cost of a choked ecosystem, poisoned wildlife, and ultimately, public health.

Shamim Ahsan, a hotelier in Khulna city, started using single-use plastics due to customer demand and the ease of cleaning. Since the pandemic, many customers prefer plastic glasses and one-time plates, he said.

He said hotel, motel, and restaurant owners find these plastics convenient and cost-effective.

HM Alauddin, a resident in Tutpara area, said, "There are at least 15 to 16 plastic factories in Labonchhara, Tutpara, Rupsa and Phulbari Gate areas of Khulna city. These plastic factories operate late at night. And from here the plastic reaches the buyers through different hands. The biggest destination for plastic is Borobazar of Khulna."

Back in January 2020, the High Court directed a ban on single-use plastics in hotels, motels, and restaurants in coastal areas. But three years on, the plastic menace continues unabated.

On March 29, 2023, the environment minister prohibited the use of single-use plastic in the Sundarbans.

Babul Howladar, Khulna coordinator of Bangladesh Paribesh Andolan, said despite occasional raids by law enforcers, their efforts lack consistency.

According to the KCC's Conservancy Office, Khulna city generates 1,200 to 1,600 tonnes of waste daily, including 25 to 30 tonnes of plastic waste, with 10 to 15 percent being single-use plastics. Additionally, 5 to 6 lakh single-use plastic bags end up in drains and water bodies, said Anisur Rahman, KCC's chief conservancy officer.

Mahfuzur Rahman Mukul, Khulna divisional coordinator of BELA, said single-use plastics from areas like Jashore's Nowapara and Khulna's Borobazar are polluting the rivers and canals of the Sundarbans, threatening coastal livelihoods and biodiversity.

He emphasised the importance of using clay cups or other alternatives.

Abdullah Harun Chowdhury, professor of Environmental Science at Khulna University, emphasised the need for an "Environment Protection Police Force" to enforce the law banning 55-micron thick polythene bags.

He explained that plastic in coastal areas is entering the food chain through fish, affecting their reproductive process and growth. This plastic pollution also impacts other aquatic animals, he added.

Dr Abu Naser Mohsin Hossain, divisional forest officer, Sundarbans West, said they have informed all tour operators that single-use plastics are completely banned in the Sundarbans.

"Recently, we have fined a trawler Tk 30,000 for using plastics," he said.

He said the main challenge is that plastic is entering the Sundarbans through rivers and canals of the city. "We can't control the use of plastics in city areas. The authorities concerned should be more proactive in this regard," he said.

'We should push for renewables'

Question: What practical and effective measures can be implemented to mitigate the effects of urban heat islands and improve thermal comfort for residents in Dhaka, considering the increasing frequency and intensity of heat waves?

Asked by: Mehnaz Lameesha Rahman (Dhaka University)

Ainun Nishat: We have to understand the intensity and frequency of heatwaves in the coming years. To improve thermal comfort, the best possible way would be massive tree plantation and afforestation. If we can cover the whole country with large trees, which might take a few years, that is the best way to make all the urban areas much cooler. The heatwaves are coming from possibly Western Asia and this is a result of changes in global air circulation patterns. As such, the circulation of atmospheric air is going to change and more hot days will be coming.

The fourth phase of the upazila parishad election will be held in 57 upazilas today, with 229 chairman candidates participating.

Among them, 160 are businessmen, and 126 candidates have wealth exceeding Tk 1 crore, according to Shujan.

In an online press briefing yesterday, Shujan disclosed its analysis of 1,874 chairman candidates across 459 upazilas, covering income, education, profession, legal cases, and income tax information.

Shujan Secretary Badiul Alam Majumder said, "There is a lack of voter participation, competition, and party involvement. This situation has arisen because people have lost trust in the institutions responsible for conducting the elections."

In the first three phases, voter turnout was 36.1, 37.57 and 36.24 percent, respectively.

Automobile repair shops to come under regulations

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The authority is going to bring automobile repair shops under a regulation to ensure quality.

Such shops have increased in recent years with the rise in the number of vehicles.

Bangladesh Road Transport Authority has already formed a committee to give recommendations on how those workshops could be given licence following the rules of the Road Transport Act.

BRTA Chairman Nur Mohammad Mazumder yesterday revealed the information while exchanging views with the members of Reporters for Rail and Road, an organisation of reporters working on rail, road and transport related issues, at BRTA headquarters.

As per section 64 of the Road Transport Act-2018, no person or organisation will be allowed to open or operate a workshop without receiving a licence from the authority and paying a certain amount of fine.

The workshops, which were established even before the enforcement of the act, have to take licence, it said.

A person or organisation may face fines up to Tk 1 lakh and the authority may seal off the workshop in violation of the act.

BRTA officials said thousands of workshops mushroomed in the country to repair vehicles or building bodies for automobiles.

But many of those workshops use sub-standard materials compromising the standard of the vehicles, which is ultimately posing serious risk for road safety, they said.

335 illegal brick kilns shut down in Rangpur div

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government yesterday submitted a report to the High Court, saying that operations of 335 illegal brick kilns out of total 502 in three districts of Rangpur division have been closed in compliance with its directives.

The government has stopped the operations 114 illegal brick kilns out of total 172 in Rangpur; 87 out of total 155 in Gaibandha and 134 out of total 175 in Dinajpur, according to the compliance report.

Assistant Attorney General Kalipada Mridha placed the report on behalf of Rangpur's divisional commissioner before the HC bench of Justice JBM Hassan and Justice Razik-Al-Jalil during hearing on a writ petition as per its previous directive.

The bench ordered the government to close the remaining brick kilns.

BRTA is going to bring these workshops under the regulation around one and a half year after the rules of Road Transport Act-2018, came into force in December 2022.

BRTA, under the section 156 of the rules, on April 29 formed a committee at every division to give recommendations on how to provide licences to the workshops, an official said.

SPEED LIMIT

Speaking at the programme, Nur Mohammad said they have enacted the Speed Limit Guideline considering many things including the roadside environment to reduce road crashes.

Mahbub-E-Rabbani, director (road safety) of BRTA, said the United Nations has endorsed the setting of a 30km per hour maximum speed limit wherever pedestrians, cyclists or other vulnerable road users mix with vehicles.

"So, we have to comply with the matter too," he added.

Prominent jurist Shahdeen Malik highlighted public skepticism about these numbers, saying, "The electoral system doesn't exist now by any means. There is no democratic accountability. The local government has become a tool for the central government to control the grassroots."

Shujan's findings indicate that in the last three phases, 87.43 percent of elected chairmen are Awami League leaders who participated as independents. In 334 out of 382 upazilas, the chairman was from the AL.

Among the 1,874 candidates, 56 percent are graduates, 67 percent businessmen, 11 percent farmers, and 5.98 percent lawyers. Forty percent of candidates have an annual income between Tk 2 lakh and Tk 5 lakh, while 37 percent between Tk 5 lakh and Tk 25 lakh.

A total of 76 candidates (4.06 percent) have annual incomes exceeding Tk 1 crore, and 611 (32.6 percent) have wealth over Tk 1 crore.

The top five wealthiest candidates are Ferdousi Islam of Narsingdi's Shibpur upazila, SM Jahangir Alam Manik of Noakhali's Senbag, Md Mirajul Islam of Pirojpur's Bhandaria, Rehana Begum of Cumilla's Homna, and Sudhir Chowdhury of Dhaka's Dhamrai.

The final phase of the election will be held on June 9.

"Meanwhile, we are collaborating with the government to either facilitate their travel or a refund," he added.

Lawmakers Nizam Uddin Hazari, Benjir Ahmed, Masud Uddin Chowdhury and Baira President Mohammad Abul Bashar also attended the conference.

Benjir is also the president of the parliamentary body on home ministry.

Nizam denied the existence of any syndicate within recruiting agencies. He said this in response to a question on how he managed to send 8,300 workers to Malaysia in the last two years while only 300 in the years before.

He claimed he wasn't directly involved in sending workers or processing visas but rather facilitated the process.

He said a certain group is attempting to discredit them through various means.

Contacted, State Minister Shofiqur Islam Choudhury said the ministry was not responsible for the e-visas issued by the Malaysian government.

"I think there is no point in blaming anyone for the current crisis. Legal action will be taken as per the investigation. No one will be exempt," he said.

Replying to other claims from Baira that the number of workers who could not go to Malaysia will not be more than 5,000 to 6,000, the minister said, "We have formed a probe body which will investigate the overall irregularities related to the crisis."

what steps should the city take to transition towards more sustainable energy solutions?

Asked by: Nawwar Fatima Procheta (Mirpur Kalshi, Dhaka)

Ainun Nishat: Total energy production in Bangladesh per capita is still low. Therefore, mitigation should not be a target for Bangladesh. However, we should push for renewable energy by utilising the technologies that are in practice, like solar energy, and bringing in the new technologies that are emerging. One is wind energy, and technology has improved -- the wind we have should be able to provide sufficient energy. Hydrogen technology is also coming up, and energy saving should be aimed at.

Question: How can we restore the polluted Buriganga, especially considering the reduced river transportation due to the construction of the Padma Bridge? What strategies can be implemented to clean up the Buriganga and mitigate pollution effectively?

Asked By: SMM Musabbir Uddin (Segunbagicha, Dhaka)

Ainun Nishat: It is possible to restore the water quality of Buriganga and all the rivers next to major cities. We have the necessary laws and permission in our constitution. The government must take strong measures to control pollution by enforcing the 1995 Act or the 1997 Regulation. The government has sufficient instruments to control river pollution. Many of the major rivers in the industrial belts of major cities, like London, were highly polluted. Now, the Thames is clean. If they can do it, we should be able to clean the Buriganga and our river systems as well.

LOK SABHA ELECTION 2024

What a third term for Modi means for the world

AFP, New Delhi

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi has won a third term in power yesterday, leading a country with the world's biggest population and fastest-growing economy.

The 73-year-old Hindu nationalist leader, who is pushing for a permanent seat on the UN Security Council, has been courted by the United States and European allies as a counterweight to China. Here is how a third term for Modi could build on a decade of his diplomatic ambitions.

UNITED STATES, EUROPE

President Joe Biden hosted Modi for a state dinner last year and has called ties with India the "defining partnership of the 21st century".

In February, Washington approved a $4 billion sale of state-of-the-art drones to India, the latest bolster to India's defence in a counterbalance to neighbouring China.

That deepening of ties has come despite rights groups sounding the alarm about threats to India's democracy and increased discrimination towards the 200-million-plus Muslim minority.

India also has strong ties with European countries. With France, it hopes to expand multi-billion-dollar deals including the sale of Rafale fighter jets.

CHINA

Relations between the world's two most populous countries slumped in 2020 after their troops fought a deadly high-altitude skirmish along their 3,500-kilometre frontier.

Modi's right-wing government has pumped billions of dollars into border infrastructure and boosted military spending by 13 percent last year -- but it is still barely a quarter of China's.

RUSSIA

New Delhi and Moscow have ties dating back to the Cold War and Russia remains by far the biggest arms supplier.

India has shied away from explicit condemnation of Russia for its invasion of Ukraine, abstained on UN resolutions censuring Moscow, and snapped up cut-price Russian crude oil supplies.

Modi in March congratulated President Vladimir Putin on his re-election.

PAKISTAN

Modi's government has refused to engage with Pakistan since accusing Islamabad of cross-border terrorism.

In 2015 Modi made a surprise visit to Lahore but relations plummeted in 2019. But in March, Modi congratulated Pakistani counterpart Shehbaz Sharif on his return to the premiership. It was a rare expression of goodwill between leaders of two rivals.

'GLOBAL SOUTH'

Modi has also projected India as a key member of the BRICS club of emerging economies, and this week called New Delhi "a strong and important voice of the Global South". It was under Modi's watch that the African Union bloc joined the G20, with India arguing developing nations need a greater say in global decision-making.

Modi's key allies stand by him despite weaker showing

REUTERS, New Delhi

Two key regional allies in Narendra Modi's coalition have endorsed him as India's next prime minister, their spokespeople said yesterday, after trends showed Modi's party was falling short of a majority in a general election.

The Telugu Desam Party (TDP) and Janata Dal (United) said their pre-poll alliance with Modi's Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP)was intact and they would form the next government.

Their comments came after media speculation that the opposition alliance, which is doing much better than expected, was also in touch with them.

N Chandrababu Naidu's TDP, based in the southern coastal state of Andhra Pradesh, is currently the second-biggest party in Modi's National Democratic Alliance (NDA) after the BJP. Naidu, who allied with the opposition the last time, has in the past spoken about loan waivers for farmers and privatisation of air and sea ports.

"TDP has a pre-poll alliance with NDA and it will continue, no doubt about that," said party lawmaker K. Ravindra Kumar. "PM Modi and Naidu have congratulated each other."

Party spokesperson Jyothsna Tirunagari said: "TDP has always shared a vision with PM Modi and he remains our PM face."

Gandhi siblings shine in INDIA's stellar show

NDTV ONLINE

From 'pappu' to 'shehzade', Congress leader Rahul Gandhi has been the prime target of BJP's ridicule for years. Jabs at the Gandhi family have been the BJP leader's main line of attack at the main opposition Congress in every election over the past decade.

But as Congress inches towards a 100-seat tally in this Lok Sabha election -- its best show in a decade -- and the INDIA bloc's tally defies all exit polls, the Gandhi siblings have played a central role.

Rahul virtually launched his campaign with a Bharat Jodo Yatra across the length and breadth of the country. While the actual impact of the yatra in terms of Lok Sabha seats won is a subject of data and debate, there is no doubt that his public interactions on the trail brought him out of television screens to the people and contributed to shattering the perception the BJP had created of him.

Visuals of Rahul petting puppies, hugging people and chatting with people from every section of the society, from students to truck drivers to mechanics, showed a side of him the country had not seen before.

As for Priyanka Gandhi, many had expected her to contest the polls this time, and questions were raised when she did not. In her response, Priyanka has said in several interviews that it was a conscious decision. If both she and Rahul contested the election, they would get tied up with campaigning in one constituency, she had said, adding that the plan was to keep her free for rallies.

As Rahul travelled across the country to address rallies of the INDIA bloc, Priyanka also took up the task of leading the Congress's campaign in family strongholds Amethi and Raebareli.

BJP candidate concedes defeat in Ayodhya

REUTERS, New Delhi

India's ruling Bharatiya Janata Party yesterday conceded defeat in a constituency where the inauguration of a grand Hindu temple just months ago by Prime Minister Narendra Modi was seen as an event that would cement his legacy and the party's poll victory.

Results showed the BJP's candidate, Lallu Singh, had lost the Faizabad constituency to Awadhesh Prasad, the candidate of the socialist-leaning Samajwadi Party, by a margin of over 50,000 votes.

Smriti Irani loses battle for Amethi

THE HINDU ONLINE

In a big upset for the BJP-led National Democratic Alliance, Union Minister of Women and Child Development Smriti Irani, dubbed a giant slayer after she defeated Rahul Gandhi from the seat in the 2019 elections, lost to Congress's Kishori Lal Sharma in the Amethi constituency in Uttar Pradesh.

According to the EC data, Sharma won by a margin of over 1,67,000 votes. Irani received 3,72,032 votes. Taking to X, Irani said she will be forever grateful to people who supported her in victory and loss. Amethi is one of the important seats in the state and exit polls had predicted a close fight.

'Exit polls were not reflective of the reality on the ground'

Says Congress spokesperson

AGENCIES

Congress spokesperson Shama Mohamed said leaders of the opposition knew that exit polls showing a wide-margin of victory for Modi's alliance were not reflective of the reality on the ground.

"Of course, we always said that the opposition is going to do well in this election," Mohamed said. "You have to understand that there is a lot of unemployment in India, the price rise is huge."

"There is the capture of various institutions for example," Mohamed added, referring to the opposition's allegations that Modi's government has consolidated power at key institutions, including the country's election commission.

POST-POLLS SOUTH AFRICA

ANC weighs up partners from free-marketeers to Marxists

REUTERS, Johannesburg

The African National Congress was holding high-stakes internal talks yesterday about which parties it should approach to form South Africa's next government, with diametrically opposed Marxists and free-marketeers on the menu of options.

After 30 years of dominance since Nelson Mandela led it to power in the 1994 elections that marked the end of apartheid, the ANC lost its majority in last week's national vote. It remains the largest party but can no longer govern alone.

Voters punished the former liberation movement for high levels of poverty, joblessness and inequality, rampant crime, rolling power cuts and corruption - problems that have held South Africa back and will challenge the next government.

It will have 159 seats out of 400 in the new National Assembly, while the free-marketeer Democratic Alliance (DA) will have 87. The populist uMkhonto we Sizwe (MK) will have 58 seats, the Marxist Economic Freedom Fighters (EFF) 39, the socially conservative Inkatha Freedom Party (IFP) 17 and the far-right Patriotic Alliance (PA) nine.

"The ANC is still trying to make up its mind about what it wants to do," said Charles Cilliers, co-founder and head of strategy for the PA, which calls for the mass deportation of undocumented immigrants and the return of the death penalty.

"Everyone is reliant on the ANC coming to a decision. There's a lot of pressure on them from big money, from big business in South Africa, to work with the DA," he told Reuters.

Shimana passes away at 39, showbiz mourns tragic loss

Model and actress Rista Laboni Shimana breathed her last yesterday at the Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University (BSMMU), succumbing to severe complications from a brain haemorrhage at the age of 39. The talented artiste, who rose to fame through the 2006 Lux-Channel i Superstar competition, left behind two children, eight-year-old Shreshtho, and three-year-old Sworgo.

ZAHID AKBAR

The heartbreaking scene at the Channel i building around noon saw Shimana's children innocently playing near a condolence book, unaware their mother's untimely demise had forever altered their lives. "Look, Mom has come. Let's go and see her, Sworgo," Shreshtho remarked as the ambulance carrying his mother's remains arrived. Little did they know, this would be the last time they ever saw her.

A little distance away, we could hear the heartbreaking cries of a devastated mother. She was still numb from the loss of her daughter. Unable to control her emotions, she hugged Salahuddin Lavlu and wept inconsolably. She couldn't grasp losing her daughter at such a young age. "I really can't believe she is gone just like that. Why did it have to be her?" she sobbed, tears rolling down her cheeks. Her trembling hands clutched her daughter's photo, unable to comprehend the tragedy.

Shimana's colleague, director Salahuddin Lavlu, lamented, "She messaged me a month ago, saying she wanted to return to work. I told her I wasn't working on anything at that moment but would let her know as soon as I started something new. Now, I will never be able to cast her, as she has left us too soon." Lavlu had directed Shimana in the acclaimed drama Sakin Sarisuri, which brought her widespread recognition for her role as Kakoli.

Actor Chanchal Chowdhury expressed his condolences on his social media, stating, "Shimana... You've crossed from life into the realm of death...! May you find eternal peace in the infinite beyond. Our hearts ache with sorrow for you. Countless memories linger...!"

Director Chayanika Chowdhury shared a photo of the late actress' children, captioning, "I'm at a loss for words...My heartfelt prayers go out to the two children. May she find peace in the afterlife, and may the One above watch over her children. I pray that all motherless children around the world find comfort, care, and happiness."

The talented actress emerged in the entertainment industry through the 2006 Lux-Channel i Superstar contest. In addition to her television work, she made her silver screen debut in Tauquir Ahmed's film Daruchini Dwip. In terms of her recent work, she appeared in Biplob Haider's Roshni last year, playing the role of a journalist, after a six-year break due to family commitments.

Shimana's battle began around two weeks ago as she suddenly fell ill on the night of May 21. Around 11:30pm, she was rushed to a private hospital in Dhanmondi, where it was discovered that she had suffered from a brain haemorrhage. The following day, she was transferred to another hospital in Dhanmondi for better treatment. Eventually, on doctors' advice, she was admitted to the National Institute of Neurosciences and Hospital in the capital's Agargaon, where she underwent brain surgery on May 25.

Despite undergoing surgery, her condition remained critical, leading to her transfer to the BSMMU, where she was put on life support last Wednesday (May 29). Tragically, she passed away around 6am yesterday.

The first janaza was held at 12:30pm at the Channel i building on the same day. She was laid to rest at her family graveyard in Nakla upazila, Sherpur, later in the evening.

As the nation mourns the devastating loss of the 39-year-old's talent and vibrant spirit, Shimana's colleagues and loved ones struggle to come to terms with her tragic and untimely passing, ensuring her legacy lives on.

Actor Chanchal Chowdhury expressed his condolences on his social media, stating, "Shimana... You've crossed from life into the realm of death...! May you find eternal peace in the infinite beyond. Our hearts ache with sorrow for you. Countless memories linger...!"

Arjun Rampal to walk on ramp in Dhaka this month

Bollywood heartthrob Arjun Rampal is set to visit Dhaka this month, after 14 years. The actor, known for his fantastic performance and charismatic personality, has impressed audiences worldwide and made a name for himself.

Arjun Rampal will be in Dhaka on June 7 to attend the upcoming fashion show titled BHN Experiences Presents Blue Drops by Zurhem.

Zurhem announced the news on their social media with a personalised video from the actor, confirming that he will be walking the runway in Dhaka this month.

This event is being exclusively organised for Zurhem's loyal and frequent customers, and attendees must register to attend the fashion show.

Sabina Yasmin returns home after months of treatment abroad

Legendary singer Sabina Yasmin has returned to Bangladesh after undergoing treatment for three and a half months at Singapore General Hospital.

The singer arrived back in Dhaka on May 31 and is currently recuperating at her home.

Recently, a family source confirmed to the media that the singer's health is stable. However, she will need to return to Singapore later this month for regular medical check-ups.

Yasmin initially travelled to Singapore last February for a routine medical examination. During the check-up, doctors discovered a dental issue, necessitating surgery on February 7.

Tigers' injury woes in WC continue

The pacer went through the grind in an indoor session on Monday, trying to get back his rhythm.

While Bangladesh Cricket Board's medical department were hopeful of Taskin's recovery when talking to The Daily Star earlier last month, there may be a risk involved in Taskin pushing himself too far. Fellow quick Shoriful Islam, meanwhile, is unlikely to play the Sri Lanka fixture after having injured his bowling hand during the warm-up fixture against India on June 1 and needed six stitches afterwards.

Bangladesh's batting has already been under fire in recent series, and with the most promising among the three departments in the Tigers' dugout still in doubt for World Cup games, the backup options would also be kept ready. Bar Hasan Mahmud, there are no other options for the recovering speedsters.

Given Bangladesh's first two World Cup matches are against Sri Lanka and South Africa, failure to win any of those two affairs can make or break their tournament, leading to certain elimination from the first round.

Meanwhile, criticism of wickets and grounds in the USA has been a big talking point among experts. Whereas Canada and the USA played out a high-scoring game in Dallas, the venue for Bangladesh's first game, Sri Lanka were thumped by South Africa in New York where the ground was inadequately prepared and the wicket made for a low-scoring affair. Cricket commentator Harsha Bhogle went as far as saying that cricket will not gain ground in the USA, with playing surfaces and outfields of that quality.

There are plenty of questions for the tournament organisers to answer in this regard. However, with wickets unlikely to alter in the next few days, Bangladesh are faced with multiple hurdles as they seek to regain lost confidence.

Benazir may not appear

IGP and his family had left the country.

On May 28, the ACC issued a notice to Benazir Ahmed and his family for interrogation over the allegations that he amassed illegal wealth through corruption. According to the notice, Benazir Ahmed was summoned on June 6, his wife Zeeshan Mirza and two daughters on June 9.

Sources said, considering how things stand, it is unlikely that Benazir Ahmed will appear before the ACC for questioning tomorrow.

Meanwhile, Benazir's lawyers did not provide any information about the whereabouts of the former IGP and his family and refrained from commenting on whether he will appear before the ACC.

Sources at immigration police confirmed to The Daily Star that Benazir Ahmed and her family members left for Singapore on a Singapore Airlines flight on the night of May 4.

A reliable source close to Benazir said that Benazir went to Singapore with some of his wife's medical documents. However, he did not confirm whether Benazir is currently in Singapore or any other country.

Moreover, it is uncertain how the corruption charges against Benazir will proceed as he is not in the country.

Speaking on the issue, ACC Chairman Mohammad Moinuddin Abdullah told The Daily Star, "We have requested him [Benazir] to submit a statement on the corruption allegations raised against him. He is expected to come and speak on his behalf. That is what we are hoping for."

"We don't really know where he is right now. We have not issued any travel ban against him or any of his family members," he added.

"The investigation team is probing allegations of corruption against Benazir Ahmed. If they think they need to summon him again to get his statement, they can do so. The investigation committee is completely independent."

The murder plan

In his statement, Tanvir further said the killing was planned as per the instructions of Aktaruzzaman, who had been in India for some time and then returned to Bangladesh.

The last meeting, which firmed up the murder plan, was held at a restaurant named "O2" near the Kolkata Airport, in the presence of Aktaruzzaman. He is now in the USA, court sources said.

Amanullah, Mostafizur Rahman, Jihad Howlader, Tanvir, and Siam, among others, were present at the meeting.

About how the lawmaker was lured, the sources said Tanvir had assured Azim that arrangements were made to pay back all the dues of his business.

On Monday, another arrestee, Celesty Rahman, confessed before the court.

Meanwhile, a Bangladesh police team, which went to Nepal on June 1 following information that another suspect, Siam Hossain, was arrested, returned home yesterday. Nepal police arrested Siam, acting up on Bangladesh's alert.

However, there are complications in bringing back Siam due to the absence of an extradition treaty between Bangladesh and Nepal.

Siam might be handed over to India instead, where a murder case was also filed against him for the lawmaker's killing, sources said.

Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (DB) of DMP, who led the police team in Nepal, yesterday said both countries (India and Bangladesh) have the same intention in this regard.

"We are exchanging information. Whether Nepal hands over the accused to India or to us, there will be no problem in the investigation. The Indian police team came to interrogate the three arrestees – Aktaruzzaman, Celesty, and Tanvir -- in Bangladesh, while we went to India to interrogate Jihad Howlader."

He further said that Siam was close to the mastermind Aktaruzzaman.

"If Kolkata police gets Siam in its custody, it will be very helpful in getting more evidence. We'll also get the chance to interrogate him ourselves."

Addressing reporters at the airport, Harun said Siam went to Nepal via Muzaffarabad after abducting and killing the lawmaker in Kolkata, adding that MP Azim's phone was activated in Muzaffarabad as Siam used it to make some calls.

He further said they have received important information and footage from Kathmandu Police about Siam, which will be useful in the investigation.

"Who had created former IGP Shamsul Huda and SP Kohinur?" he said.

Quader said BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir might have forgotten that his party's acting chief is a convict on the run.

On the other hand, Hasina is well-known at home and abroad as an honest politician, and there is no scope for raising question about her honesty, he said.

The AL general secretary said Khaleda has been sentenced on corruption charges and she can receive treatment at home as her jail term has been suspended due to the generosity of the prime minister.

"This BNP is now talking about corruption and money laundering," Quader said.

He said BNP is now trying to portray their corrupt convicted leader Tarique Rahman as a good person.

Quader said Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB), Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik (SHUJAN) and BNP make comments in the same tone. "Are TIB and SHUJAN the B-team of BNP?"

The meeting was moderated by Dhaka City North AL General Secretary SM Mannan Kachi, with its President Sheikh Bazlur Rahman in the chair.

Flood situation worsens further

Floodwater enters the city through drains and canals as the rivers surrounding the city are overflowing, said Sajlu Lashkar, public relations officer of Sylhet City Corporation.

Amid this situation, Zakiganj and Kanaighat upazila parishads go to polls today.

"The flooded polling stations have been changed. We have taken all-out preparations to hold the elections," said Returning Officer Imrul Hasan, who is an additional district magistrate of Sylhet.

Meanwhile in Sunamganj, hundreds of people have been affected by the flood in the district. Many roads have been submerged, disrupting communications, said locals.

14-party allies vent anger

and corruption, for which the government is to ultimately blame, they said.

"Since Awami League alone is in power, why should the partners take responsibility for the government's misdeeds?" one partner asked.

Top leaders of several allies also expressed their frustration over the government's inaction and silence about market manipulation and corruption, especially in the banking sector, when the culprits are already identified.

The meeting was held at Amu's Eskaton residence in the capital. It was a follow-up meeting after AL chief Sheikh Hasina, also the prime minister, sat with them on May 23.

At the beginning of the meeting, Amu informed the AL's plan to go for united programmes to counter anti-state and anti-government propaganda, but the alliance partners rejected the idea, said meeting sources.

After the meeting, Amu told reporters that there were some confusions among some alliance partners, and that they will organise joint programmes after "resolving the disputes".

In response to Amu's proposal for joint programmes at the meeting, Workers Party President Rashed Khan Menon, Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal President Hasanul Haq Inu, Jatiya Party (Manju) Chairman Anwar Hossain Manju and Tarikat Federation Chairman Syed Nazibul Bashar Maizvandari said they do not even know how the AL view this partnership.

They added that they now wonder whether the alliance exists anymore or whether it is relevant now.

AL leaders are now raising questions about the partners' organisational strength and vote bank, but the alliance was formed out of a political necessity, and that AL termed the alliance its "ideological" partners, they said.

Inu alleged that candidates from the 14-party were not allowed to win in the January 7 national election as part of a pre-planned strategy.

AL shared only seven seats with its three partners in the election, down from 16 in the 2018 polls.

Maizvandari demanded an explanation as to why the partners were not offered their desired seats and what problem would the AL have had if some of the partners won some seats.

He said they are aware how the election was conducted and how many of the AL candidates actually won the election, according to meeting sources.

Some 14-party leaders told Amu that the AL is now seeking to go for joint programmes since the government is facing some difficulties on multiple fronts, but they will be "thrown aside" again once the crisis is over.

Manju, a seven-time lawmaker from Pirojpur-2, said he was defeated by a so-called AL independent candidate, whose family had questionable roles during the 1971 war, through use of police force.

"Awami League always talks about the spirit of the Liberation War, but in many cases its activities don't match its claims," he said.

AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader is expected to sit with the alliance partners on June 12 in efforts to bridge the gap.

Pressure

Biden added that he had a "major disagreement" with Netanyahu over the post-conflict future of Gaza, and said Israel had engaged in "inappropriate" conduct during the offensive.

But for now, the Gaza offensive raged on unabated yesterday, with the Israeli military reporting more air and artillery strikes and ground combat against Hamas, and Palestinians bemoaning more civilian deaths.

Overnight bombardment hit targets in Gaza City and the southern Rafah area, said AFP reporters and witnesses.

Four bodies were retrieved from a bombed house in the Bureij camp in central Gaza, and three more from the rubble of a destroyed building in Gaza City, Gaza's civil defence agency said.

Israel's military offensive in the Gaza Strip has killed at least 36,550 Palestinians and wounded 82,959 since October 7, the Palestinian enclave's health ministry said yesterday. A total of 71 Palestinians have been killed and 182 wounded in the past 24 hours, the ministry said in a statement.

OUR LAND OUR FUTURE

We are #GenerationRestoration

‘Ask For Our Planet’ is a collaboration between The Daily Star and the United Nations Development Programme in Bangladesh, launched for the World Environment Day 2024. Our goal is to connect our readers with national climate champions, allowing them to ask questions about pressing environmental issues such as pollution, climate change, waste management, declining groundwater levels, and sustainability. We believe that by obtaining and acting on these answers, we can make a significant contribution to mitigating or even reversing the adverse effects of climate change.

“Citizen action, collaboration vital for compliance”

NAHIM RAZZAQ

Why has the government’s initiative to shut down illegal brick kilns become ineffective?
Asked by: Md Afzal Hossain Nayeem
(Mohammadpur, Dhaka)

Over the years, multiple governments have taken initiatives to have compliance with Bangla Brick manufacturing to the extent of threatening to shut down operations, demolish unauthorised units or bar the renewal of trade licenses. However, nothing seems to deter the legally and illegally operated brick manufacturers from adopting eco-friendly alternatives.

It’s merely a matter of willingness. Alternative methods such as Fixed Chimney Klin, Zigzag Klin, Vertical Shaft Brick Klin or Hybrid Hoffman Klin are all considered Green technology. Concrete bricks or Hollow bricks are also eco-friendly. Furthermore, former finance minister late Abul Mal Abdul Muhit initiated “Green Financing” particularly keeping this technology in mind. However, it was not successful in bringing the desired outcome.

Imminent action should be taken to make the industry compliant and total shut down of those who don’t.

As a volunteer, what can we do to reduce plastic bag usage in markets where people prefer them due to lower cost? Can Bangladesh implement a plastic ban like India, and how can we raise awareness as citizens?
Asked by: S. M. M. Musabbir Uddin
(Segunbagicha, Dhaka)

Despite numerous initiatives by civil society, environmentalists, city planners, legislators and others, the use of single-use plastic continues. Sufficient awareness programmes have been initiated to use alternative products. Unfortunately, these measures have not delivered the desired outcome.

We should completely ban the manufacturing and use of single-use plastic in Bangladesh. We have cheap alternatives in place. Government bodies like city corporations, businesses and other stakeholders should engage in imposing strict guidelines to this end. There should also be a stringent penalty for non-compliance. Simultaneously, citizen action is required to boycott single-use plastic.

Despite creating environmental policies since the 1980s and publishing the Solid Waste Management Rules 2021, why have these rules not been implemented effectively by 2024?
Asked by: Jerin Sultana Lalkhan bazar, Chattogram

Unfortunately, these ordinances are not properly coordinated. The mismanagement is caused by our lack of oversight. I’m a firm believer in citizen action and collaboration. Stakeholders should seek an action plan and strict deadlines to ensure compliance on legislative and executive levels. Everyone, including individuals, businesses and other stakeholders should be held accountable for their actions.

“We need to coexist with nature”

IQBAL HABIB
Architect, Vice President, Bangladesh Environment Movement

As an architect, how do you think sustainable infrastructure design principles can be integrated into Dhaka’s urban planning and construction projects?
Asked by: Mahzuza Maria Biva
(Bashabo, Dhaka)

The answer to this question is embedded importantly into the very definition of sustainability defined by SDG 11. Primarily, all urban development projects and initiatives must aim towards ‘equity’, to confirm the inclusivity in terms of its accommodation, use and management.

Secondly, the goal to be “economic” has to be achieved in their implementation. Being economic implies ensuring the adaptation of local knowledge, technology, and available materials and techniques.

Last but not least, the environmental concerns and their impact must be addressed by urban projects during their very initiation phase and continued throughout the implementation and management phases. Environmental issues concern human beings and biodiversity equally, so our responses need to be from a holistic perspective.

What role can green building technologies and practices play in reducing the carbon footprint of Dhaka’s environment while improving the city’s overall livability?
Asked by: Ryad Ahmed
(Dortmund, Germany)

Dhaka is one of the most densely populated cities in the world. All sectors and infrastructures will benefit if we adopt “nature-based” solutions considering the local climate and environment. These solutions can be enforced through incentive-based encouragement programmes for land owners, developers, and government agencies.

We also need to make efforts to “coexist” with nature, through our compassion and empathy towards our surroundings. Blindly adopting foreign templates of heavily energy-dependent structures should be discouraged to reverse the “heat island” the urban residents find themselves in. Simultaneously, Bangladesh National Building Code should be thoroughly updated.

How can the preservation and restoration of Dhaka’s existing greenery, water bodies, and natural habitats be better integrated into urban development plans?
Asked by: Jayedul Hassan
(Osaka University, Japan)

Every city must have its ‘Urban Greenery Policy’, a customized implementation approach based on the area’s soil and climate conditions, and historical data on vegetation. Instead of allocating a budget for celebrations of target fulfilment, we need to allocate a budget for nourishing, pruning and maintaining plants and vegetation through professional consultation and proper training.

Protection, monitoring and restoration initiatives are our current priority. We also need to be sensitive to the biodiversity of specific areas, by fostering local plant breeds and knowledge.

“NGOs, communities must complement each other”

SYEDA RIZWANA HASAN
Supreme Court Lawyer and the Chief Executive of Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association

What strategies can be implemented to empower grassroots stakeholders in rural communities to actively participate in environmental and conservation efforts?
Asked by: K.M. Nayeem Farhan
(Shahzadpur Gulshan, Dhaka)

The environmental laws in the country have clear provisions for public consultations before Environmental Impact Assessment (EIA) reports of industries or projects that fall within the red category are approved. If complaints are registered, the Director General of the Department of Environment (DoE) is under a legal obligation to take measures required to redress the community grievances. These measures also include holding public hearings on such issues. Communities need to be made aware of their rights to participate, receive information and redressal under national laws. Civil society actors can invest in empowering the communities on a national level with technical knowledge, connections, capacity building, and facilitating their access to redressal mechanisms for a national-level development process.

What role can civil society organizations, such as NGOs and community groups, play in promoting environmental justice and protecting marginalized communities?
Asked by: Arman Zaman Chowdhury
(Shantinagar, Dhaka)

The NGOs and community groups can complement one another in their efforts to promote environmental justice. NGOs can work with communities to fact-check information regarding development projects that might be exploitative and guide community members in collecting evidence and monitoring grassroots-level conditions. The NGOs can effectively engage with the media. NGOs also can draw national attention to local issues by collaborating with community groups that bear the brunt of environmental injustices.

What are some successful examples of grassroots-led environmental initiatives in developing countries? What can we learn from them?
Asked by: Amarah Gilani
(Mirpur DOHS, Dhaka)

Countering the false solutions by the profit-driven sectors, the grass-root level successes on environmental matters are aplenty. Starting from the preservation of seeds and defending natural and safe agriculture to innovating integrated water resource management models with different high-efficiency, low-cost technologies to counter water scarcity issues in disaster-prone areas. When the government justifies tree felling on the grounds of funding the beneficiaries of its social forestry program, we see rickshaw pullers and school teachers setting inspiring examples of tree plantation and biodiversity conservation. To address the negative impacts of climate change, people are converting their water-logged lands into vegetable farms, accessing potable water through online payment, engaging in inventing seeds that are natural disaster-prone and many such initiatives.

“Multi-stakeholder dialogues beneficial for resource mobilization”

ARIF MOHAMMAD FAISAL
Programme Specialist - Environmental Sustainability and Energy, UNDP

How can UNDP support Bangladesh in effectively implementing international environmental agreements at the local level?
Asked by: Samira Sattar
(Khilgaon, Dhaka)

The UNDP can effectively support Bangladesh in implementing international environmental agreements such as the UNFCCC, UNCBD, UNCDD, and Montreal Protocol through a multi-faceted strategy. This includes capacity-building programmes to enhance understanding among stakeholders, and policy support to local governments so that their policies align with international standards. Additionally, facilitating stakeholder engagement through multi-stakeholder dialogues and partnerships can foster collaboration and resource mobilization. The UNDP can also assist in mobilizing financial and technical resources for local projects , and promoting knowledge sharing and technology transfer.

How can UNDP ensure full inclusion of marginalized populations, particularly people with disabilities, in its ‘Climate Promise’ Programme?
Asked by: Jahidul Islam
(Mirpur, Dhaka)

The UNDP can implement several strategic actions in the Climate Promise programme to include people with disabilities. These include integrating disability perspectives into all climate policies, consulting with disability organizations, and ensuring their representation in policy-making processes. Nationally Determined Contributions (NDCs) and National Adaptation Plans should explicitly address the needs of people with disabilities. The upcoming “circular economic strategy”, Net Zero Strategy, NDC investment plan should be also inclusive.

Targeted programmes should focus on disability-inclusive disaster risk reduction (DRR) strategies and adaptive infrastructure that is accessible to people with disabilities. Partnerships with Disabled People’s Organizations (DPOs) and collaboration with international and regional bodies are crucial for sharing best practices.

Are there any modern and readily available solutions to combat the deteriorating air quality in Dhaka?
Asked by: S.M.M Musabbir Uddin
(Segunbagicha, Dhaka)

Key strategies include enforcing stricter emission standards for vehicles and industries, transitioning to Euro VI standards, and phasing out obsolete brick kilns. Promoting low-emission zones and renewable energy sources such as solar and wind power are also crucial. Investing in electric and hybrid buses and expanding public transit infrastructure can significantly reduce private vehicle use.

Additionally, deploying air quality monitoring systems, encouraging emission control technologies like catalytic converters, and setting up air purifying towers in highly polluted zones and industrial scrubbers can be helpful. Urban planning should emphasize green infrastructure projects, along with zoning regulations to separate industrial and residential areas, community engagement and awareness-raising.

Sundarbans must be left alone to recover

Alarming rise of resort business surrounding it should be checked

The heavy battering that the Sundarbans took while trying to fend off fierce winds and tidal surges that came along with Cyclone Remal is beginning to be clearer. The forest department estimates infrastructural damage worth over Tk 6 crore within the forest. But that may be the tip of the iceberg as the actual damage—caused to its biodiversity—is impossible to quantify. The forest floor lies covered with uprooted trees and foliage, with animal carcasses being discovered every day. Experts say it might need 30-40 years to restore its natural balance. What, then, the Sundarbans requires is to be left alone to recuperate, not further assaults from the very people it protects.

Yet, that may be precisely what's in store for the forest, with an alarming rise of resort business surrounding it in recent years. As per a report by Prothom Alo, resorts are being built close to the Sundarbans, some extending into its rivers, despite environmental laws prohibiting construction or activities detrimental to the forest within 10 kilometres of it. So far, some 14 resorts have been built in Khulna and Satkhira by cutting down trees and filling up canals and low-lying areas, with eight more under construction. These resorts operate generators and air conditioning systems, causing noise, water, light, and soil pollution, as well as disturbing and even driving away the wildlife.

Since 2021, the number of resorts has increased fourfold to accommodate an ever-growing number of tourists. If the trend holds, experts fear it may not be long before the Sundarbans meets the fate of the heavily degraded Bhawal Forest in Gazipur. It's an irony that while the Sundarbans stands as our first line of defence against natural disasters in coastal regions, we are failing to defend it from our own actions. True, the rise in so-called community-based ecotourism has brought some benefits to local populations. But the lack of environmental scrutiny has meant that it has been totally unsustainable. The risk comes not just from resorts and cottages alone. Over the years, we've seen how various development projects, both private and public, have been undertaken despite protests from environmentalists.

This is not a healing environment for a forest that just took a heavy hit and will again be expected to do in case of future cyclones. We urge the relevant authorities to ensure strict enforcement of the environmental laws to preserve the Sundarbans. New developments must be halted, and existing resorts should be subjected to rigorous environmental scrutiny, preferably under a new legal framework for ecotourism business as recommended by those involved. We must prevent further degradation of this vital lifeline for Bangladesh at all costs.

Health budget must increase in real terms

Poor budget and budget execution causing suffering for people

In a country where a large segment of the population lives below the poverty line, public healthcare should have been a top priority for the government. Instead, an analysis by this daily shows that the healthcare budget has been decreasing as a percentage of the total budget since 2010. This has resulted in people spending more on healthcare out of their own pockets. So much so that Bangladesh has the second highest out-of-pocket (OOP) expenditure on health in the world, which is really concerning. Moreover, people are not even getting desired services despite spending considerable sums of money. Rather, those who can afford it often go for treatment abroad, draining our precious forex reserves.

The sorry state of the healthcare budget is not just limited to falling numbers. Corruption and irregularities in the sector, along with poor planning and execution of the budget, also add to the burden of costs on people. According to our report, a large portion of the healthcare allocation is actually spent on the salaries and perks of government officials as well as other regular expenditures, which does little to help the public. The saddest part is, while they are paying through their noses, a portion of the allocated money remains underutilised on a regular basis. This led to a reduction in the development budget for health by 25.53 percent—from Tk 16,204 crore to Tk 12,066 crore—in FY2023-24.

Considering the poor state of budget, budget implementation, and health services, it is imperative that the government finds innovative ways of financing and overhauling the health system with consultations from experts. The focus needs to shift from curative to preventive care, thus reducing our dependence on medicine, which makes up the main portion of our OPP health expenditure. Similarly, irregularities such as the mushrooming of unlicensed medical facilities must be stopped. We also must root out corruption in medical recruitment and procurement in public sector, which would help save money from the relatively meagre allocation this sector receives. All this will require astute leadership which the health ministry must be able to deliver.

ZAIDI SATTAR

The bell tolls for Bangladesh. November 24, 2026 is a historic milestone and could be a day of reckoning for the nation. Almost 50 years after it was classified by the UN Committee for Development Policy (CDP) as a Least Developed Country (LDC), with the associated international support measures (ISMs) prescribed in its favour, Bangladesh will be graduating into a "developing" country under UN classification. ISMs will soon be phased out with consequent preference erosion in hitherto zero-tariff accessible markets. Tariff exemptions will soon be replaced with high tariffs that are typically imposed by most developed economies on textile products. That would mean stiffer competition for our RMG and some other exports.

No doubt, there are challenging times ahead. But resilience is instilled in our economic firmament. So economic challenges will have to be met with appropriate policy instruments that are available. The forthcoming FY2024-25 national budget must show that we mean business. Wherever we look, whether it is the tax system, banking governance or trade policy stance, the economy is crying for reforms—deep and structural, rather than cosmetic.

First, macroeconomic stability needs to be restored for the economy to return to its long-run path of stable growth. While policies for restoring internal balance is critical, i.e. moderating inflation through monetary and fiscal management, restoring sustainable external balance via exchange rate management and stabilisation of foreign exchange reserves with strong export and robust remittance inflows is just as crucial, without which macroeconomic stability could be short-lived and ephemeral.

Just as augmented revenue mobilisation in the current state of public finances warrants structural reforms of the tax regime, so too does the resurgence of the export sector, which needs to see another round of trade-oriented reforms to put our export performance back on track.

We could take a leaf out of our own book. There was a severe balance-of-payment crisis in 1990 that made fundamental trade policy reforms a fait accompli. But it was the trigger that unleashed the forces of rapid economic growth. It was the radical change of direction in trade policy (complemented by market orientation and deregulation) during much of the 1990s that changed the course of Bangladesh's economic history. It is now possible to make the assessment that after the first two decades of prevarication in trade policy, Bangladesh was able to change direction and get it right—at least partially so. Evidence shows that the country massively reaped the benefits of those changes in the subsequent decades, prompting a leading development economist to describe Bangladesh as a "development paragon." In my view, switching gears in trade policy in the 1990s from an inward-looking, import-substituting approach to an outward-looking, export-oriented one was the game changer.

Compared to the previous 20 years, the trade policy changes undertaken in the 1990s could be termed radical indeed, and included (a) sharp reduction and rationalisation of tariffs; (b) significant import liberalisation through removal of bans, quantitative restrictions (QRs), and import licensing (end of licence raj); (c) move from fixed to flexible exchange rates; and (d) limited convertibility of the current account. Overall, trade liberalisation during the 1990s was deep and transformative. In 2001, a seminal World Bank study on the impact of trade liberalisation on growth and poverty, titled Trade, Growth and Poverty, listed Bangladesh among the "globalisers" of the developing world, confirming through empirical evidence that these globalisers were experiencing rapid growth in incomes and declines in poverty.

One of the major disappointments on the economic policy front has been the lack of sustained progress in structural reforms in macroeconomic and trade policy areas. As a consequence, the external shocks of 2022 that rocked the economy have disrupted two decades of macroeconomic stability that was assiduously maintained to give the needed boost to economic growth and poverty reduction. The GDP growth averaged five to seven percent during this period, while the poverty rate fell from 57 percent in 1990 to 18.7 percent in 2022, prompting the World Bank to call Bangladesh "an inspiring story of reducing poverty"—2.5 crore lifted out of poverty in 25 years.

With the FY2024-25 budget imminent, it is critical that policymakers reflect on the key challenges the economy faces on several fronts. As in the 1990s, the current situation warrants a radical approach to addressing some of the most critical issues of the day for restoring internal and external macroeconomic balance. While there has been a profusion of "what to do" messages from all and sundry, there is still a conspicuous void in the matter of trade policy direction to restore external balance, i.e. stabilise the balance of payments and build forex reserves. Here, while moving to a regime of exchange rate flexibility makes a good starting point, building forex reserves of the kind we have been used to will be the challenge of the decade.

Our trade policy regime suffers from at least two fundamental constraints. First, there is trade policy dualism, which essentially frames one policy for RMG exports with notable success, and another policy for the rest with little success to speak of. Second, there is persistence of anti-export bias of high tariff protection that simply makes sales in the domestic market far more profitable than exporting activity. Under this dualistic regime, we may continue to count on robust RMG export performance with little traction on the export of non-RMG products, no matter how much we improve logistics and trade facilitation processes. PRI research has revealed that numerous non-RMG exports have a high to moderate degree of competitiveness when matched with competing exporters globally, proving conclusively that competitiveness is not the stumbling block. It is logical to expect that if we have strong competitiveness in a labour-intensive product like RMG, there must be numerous other labour-intensive products like footwear, jute, cotton, specialised textiles, plastics, electronics, and light engineering that beckon for policy attention. The problem, now widely recognised, is the anti-export bias of the protection regime.

Mind you, the World Trade Organization (WTO), in its last review, noted that tariffs and para-tariff are the main instruments of Bangladesh's trade policy. That is where change must come, and now is the time—in budget or off. Persisting with a strategy of high output tariffs with input tariffs trending downwards is the prescription for taking the wind out of the sails of future export performance. Both must be rationalised together.

To build forex reserves, if the economy must resume strong export (and remittance) performance with a diversified basket of export products, it is imperative—and NOW—that we engage in another round of radical trade policy reforms and tariff rationalisation scheme, to stand shoulder to shoulder with other high-performing export economies like Vietnam, China, and Malaysia.

Our past export performance says we can. We already have a National Tariff Policy 2023 that incorporates many of the critical measures and policy directions that our trade policy needs in order to fuel both exports and their diversification. Adopting some of the measures and policies from the NTP 2023 could bring change to the trade policy firmament, moving it in the right direction. These will also facilitate our FTA negotiations, which are essentially stuck in the quagmire of our tariff structure. Will the FY2024-25 budget lay the groundwork for change?

Bangladesh's export potential has not been exhausted yet. A bright future of export success awaits us if we change trade policy direction now. A crisis always brings opportunity. This nation of over 17 crore should not be made to regret missing it this time.

Social registry won't solve selection issues

FAZLEY ELAHI MAHMUD

Bangladesh launched a life-cycle based social protection system following the adoption of the National Social Security Strategy (NSSS) in 2015 offering support to citizens in addressing the risks encountered at different stages of life, including pregnancy, early childhood, school age, working age and old age. The government has expanded coverage of social protection significantly in recent years. However, a key challenge remains in selecting the eligible persons to receive the benefits. According to 2016 Household Income and Expenditure Survey data, 46 percent of the participants were included by errors (inclusion error), while 71 percent of eligible persons were excluded from the benefits (exclusion errors).

To address selection errors, the government initiated the development of a National Household Database (NHD), which collected data of 35 million households in 2017 and 2018. However due to disruptions caused by Covid-19, the project was delayed, and the data collected became obsolete. Internationally such a database is called a "social registry" that stores poverty data and generates ranked lists of poor households for selecting the deserving participants by social protection programmes. However, it has several drawbacks that undermine its effectiveness.

Social registries often collect data through household surveys using the Proxy Means Test (PMT) method, that assigns scores to easily observable indicators considered proxies for household poverty. For instance, the NHD survey included indicators such as the number of rooms, type of roof, toilet facilities, water sources, ownership of television, ownership of land, receipt of remittance and family size. However, the correlation between these indicators and actual poverty is weak. This generated inaccurate list of eligible households particularly with high exclusion errors. A leading international think tank organisation, Development Pathways, evaluated PMT based selection outcomes of 19 programmes, revealing exclusion error rates ranging from 29 to 96 percent. Flagship cash transfer programmes of Indonesia, the Philippines, Pakistan, and Kenya excluded 82 percent, 48 percent, 73 percent, and 69 percent of eligible households, respectively. These excluded households have to wait for the next survey for reconsideration for inclusion and they will be excluded from all programmes that use the social registry. If there is no social registry, a household excluded from one programme has a chance to access another programme.

The PMT-based survey may incentivise households to engage in dishonest practices. For example, they might hide durable assets, such as a television at a relative's house, or not disclose information about receiving remittances. Thus, they can secure a favourable score to qualify for social protection, effectively being rewarded for their dishonesty. Conversely, households that honestly disclose information could be penalised by being excluded from the benefits.

Besides there is no static group as "the poor" because natural disasters, economic shocks and sickness can change poverty dynamics overnight. Family size, a key indicator in PMT method, also changes due to marriage, birth of new babies, death, divorce, split in families and so on. In Rwanda, 87 percent of households experienced changes in size just in three years from 2010/11 to 2013/14. As a result, the data in social registries become obsolete quickly, as happened for Bangladesh's NHD initiative and the social protection programmes continue to use the outdated data for years, until it is updated.

High costs discourage governments to update social registries frequently. For example, the Philippines conducted a second survey six years after the first survey in 2009. In Indonesia, no updating has been done since 2015. In Pakistan, there was a 10-years gap between two surveys. Despite the massive changes of poverty status across the world caused by Covid-19, no substantial trend of updating the social registries has been visible.

Also, there is a basic difference between Bangladesh's life cycle approach and the poverty targeted approach of social protection in terms of payment modality. Bangladesh makes social protection payments to individuals, e.g., pregnant women, disabled persons and elderly persons, recognising their rights, and valuing them as citizens. The poverty targeted programmes in countries like Indonesia, Philippines and Pakistan, make combined payments to household-representatives without considering the right to social protection and a fair distribution of benefits among household members, including disabled and elderly members. Social registries, based on household poverty data, are designed for the latter approach. Thus, it is not compatible to Bangladesh's life cycle based system.

Finally, the purpose of a social registry should not be confused with that of a Management Information System (MIS). A social registry provides data for selecting programme participants, while an MIS tracks how many people are accessing which programmmes, how many are children, women, members of marginalised groups, disabled persons, elderly persons, the amounts of benefits, the transfer schedule etc. Regardless of having a social registry, an MIS database is required to track social protection system's performance and gaps.

Despite high optimism in Bangladesh, a social registry will not solve the selection challenge in social protection. Bangladesh needs to consider a universal approach to social protection to address this challenge.

This opinion piece heavily draws on a report titled 'Social Registries: a short history of abject failure.'

WORLD ENVIRONMENT DAY

Our forests are disappearing when we need them most

Bangladesh was once known for its lush greenery and biodiversity. But at present, the country faces significant challenges in preserving its forests, with the rate of deforestation almost double the global average due to land use change and human activities. According to the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), Bangladesh's forest cover is estimated to be 2.33 million hectares (15.78 percent of land), whereas the Forest Department says it is 2.57 million hectares (17.31 percent of land).

Over the past two decades, Bangladesh has witnessed a concerning loss of 8,390 hectares of humid primary forest, accounting for 3.5 percent of all tree cover depletion during this time. The country saw a significant decrease of 8.7 percent in the total area of humid primary forest.

Land use change, primarily driven by agricultural expansion, urbanisation and infrastructure development, has led to the degradation and fragmentation of forest lands in Bangladesh.

While agriculture is a cornerstone of our economy, finding a balance between agricultural productivity and forest conservation is crucial. According to a report in 1973, 9,749.98 hectares of Madhupur forest was completely covered with sal forest, whereas in 2015 the forest converted to acacia, pineapple, rubber, banana plantation, mixed forestry, agriculture and marsh, leaving only 2,671.99 hectares of actual sal forest. Initiated in 1989-1990 with ADB funding, social forestry cleared natural sal forests for exotic eucalyptus and acacia plantations of around 5,000 acres. In recent years, the Chittagong Hill Tract (CHT) forests have been illegally razed for cassava farming, destroying rich biodiversity.

Social forestry initiatives, which involve planting fast-growing species like eucalyptus and acacia, aim to meet the demand for timber and fuelwood. However, these plantations are usually harvested within a short period, raising concerns about their long-term sustainability and ecological benefits compared to natural forests. These fast-growing species of trees tend to dominate their locales, preventing ecological and biodiversity balance. Eucalyptus consumes 18-20 times more water than many other species and can negatively impact the water table. In areas with more limited rainfall, such as in northern Bangladesh and along the Barind Tract, this exacerbates environmental impacts.

According to the Forest Department, social forestry in Bangladesh has caused significant ecological and social issues. From 1981 to 2022, as many as 105,283 hectares of woodlot plantations and 78,832 kilometres of strip plantations were established, predominantly with harmful exotic species such as eucalyptus and acacia. Fundamentally with social forestry, these are trees being planted to be cut down. This cannot possibly be a replacement for the protection of our natural forests and, as such, the modality of social forestry must be rethought.

Development projects have emerged as a major threat to the conservation of our forests. Too often, forest land is seen as expendable and lucrative when allocating for large development projects, running contrary to environmental obligations. The development agenda has not as yet integrated sustainability and conservation into its ethos. Adverse environmental impacts are seen as unavoidable in the pursuit of economic growth.

The Chattogram-Cox's Bazar rail link, a major government project, threatens forests and wildlife habitats despite its benefits to communication and transportation infrastructure. Spanning 101km, the railway passes through Chunati Wildlife Sanctuary, Fasiakhali Wildlife Sanctuary, and Medhkachapia National Park, home to endangered species like Asian elephants. Despite plans of underpasses and overpasses for the elephants' movement, experts and officials believe this is inadequate. It has been reported that the project cut over 720,000 trees and razed parts of 26 hills. The construction severely impacted wildlife, exacerbating human-wildlife conflicts. Repeated protests from forest authorities, local and national activists have been ignored. All this destruction for a train which Bangladesh Railways DG Sardar Shahadat Ali said "is not a regular train," and many have alleged is being disrupted by lobbying by bus owners.

INFOGRAPHIC: SHAER REAZ

While the government committed to increasing forest land to 20 percent of total landmass, every year forest cover decreases and land is lost to government projects. In 2019, the environment ministry said almost 160,000 acres of forest land had been handed over to various government agencies or used for development projects. At least 22 projects taken up by the government and deemed important for the nation are on forest land between Mirsharai of Chattogram and Teknaf of Cox's Bazar. Most of the Mirsharai mangrove forest has been leased out to Bangladesh Economic Zone Authority (BEZA). These coastal mangrove forests are important protective barriers to salinity and other dangers, including natural disasters like cyclones which batter our coastal districts every year.

To stem the tide of deforestation, we need adequate administrative and legal platforms to prevent it. But as of now, we have neither.

The public forests are governed by the Forest Act, 1927, a colonial era legislation which, typical of its age, considers forests largely as a source of revenue for the government. The objectives of the law are not necessarily primarily preoccupied with conservation, but rather with protection of capital forest resources and penalties for damages and theft of said resources. In fact, it could go as far as to be said that the 1927 law lacks a conservation mandate. It does not define conservation, nor are there provisions for the specific conservation needs based on the type of forest, nor does it equip the state to deal with unique conservation challenges.

While the law was promulgated to regulate access to the forest areas, we have seen unprecedented numbers of encroachments on forest areas with the government having no answer. Forest areas are often not clearly demarcated, with land disputes obstructing government actions to conserve forests. Negligence and a lack of capacity also play a major role here. BELA Chief Executive Syeda Rizwana Hasan says, "Conservation being a management approach that requires affirmative actions also is not something the Act of 1927 has been able to promote. In dealing with the responsibilities of the forest officials, the Act fails to require them to develop management plans in consideration of the uniqueness of a forest ecosystem."

In 2023, two new forest laws were set to be passed in order to change the trajectory of forest loss. The Forest Bill, 2023 was set to replace the Forest Act, 1927, seemingly granting additional powers to conserve the forest, although sceptics have said it does not change enough to meet the need of the day. The Forest Conservation Bill, 2023 would go even further beyond forest lands. Saber Hossain Chowdhury, the current environment minister, highlighted that "globally, forests are no longer regarded as a source of government revenue," and encouraged that the focus has to change from revenue to conservation. Unfortunately, neither legislation has been made into law.

The Forest Department, which is the primary government agency overseeing the maintenance and protection of forests and wildlife in Bangladesh, lacks transparency and capacity. Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB) in 2020 found that a "lack of 'effective' oversight and monitoring of activities at all levels and lack of accountability contributes to the institutionalisation of forest sector-centric corruption". They also found that the Forest Department was passive in the face of environmentally devastating projects like coal-fired power plants and illegal occupation, which exacerbated the damage being done. Too often, the department lacks the standing to face up to land administration and other government agencies.

Desertification does not appear to be an immediate threat, but on World Environment Day, it is worth remembering that it is not an impossibility in Bangladesh. Especially in the northwest, in the Barind Tract, desertification is an emerging issue of concern. We often like to sell our vulnerability in the face of the climate crisis, but at the same time, not enough action is taking place in the country to protect our own environment. With the rapid rate of deforestation, at a time when we need to be consolidating our natural forests, we are instead losing them in the blink of an eye. We must immediately recognise the crucial role of our forests in acting as protective barriers against climate doom. And we then must thank our protectors and support them, building them up rather than cutting them down.

When law enables environmental damage

MOHAMMAD GOLAM SARWAR

Remarkably, Bangladesh has more than 200 environmental protection laws. Yet, our environment and natural resources continue to see unprecedented pollution, encroachment, and degradation. Being one of the countries that are most vulnerable to climate change, the way and at the scale that the country's natural resources are being exploited is immensely worrying.

Despite laws designed to protect the environment growing in number, their implementation continues to see a striking failure. The core problematic aspect of these laws is that they are designed to protect and benefit humans, not the environment within which humans live. By disaggregating humans from nature and enabling them to exploit natural resources to fulfil their needs, environmental laws have ended up legitimising and rationalising the destruction of natural resources and the degradation of the environment.

To provide context, let's take the example of the Environment Conservation Act, 1995, considered as one of the key laws in Bangladesh. A close reading of some of this law's provisions reveals its pivotal role in legitimising environmental destruction and producing and sustaining harmful practices that contribute to the creation and perpetuation of unjust environmental conditions.

The law reflects an "injury-therapy" model by allowing the degradation of the environment (injury) on the one hand, and restricting the detrimental activities to the environment (healing therapy) on the other hand. The law prohibits the cutting or razing of any type of hills and hillocks by any individual or institution. But it provides an exception allowing the Department of Environment (DoE) to issue a clearance certificate in favour of cutting or razing hills for the sake of "national interest." Similarly, the filling of reservoirs (river, canal, wetlands, etc) is prohibited, subject to an exception on the grounds of "national interest."

It is worth mentioning that the law does not provide any definition or explanation of the term "national interest." Naturally, this term, being overly broad and vague, leaves room for biased and arbitrary interpretation and provides space for manipulation. Now the question is, can the destruction of natural resources through razing mountains or filling reservoirs ever be justified in the national interest?

It is pertinent to note that the Supreme Court of Bangladesh recognised all rivers in the country as legal persons and living entities. Since the reservoir (river) is a legal entity, its loss or encroachment in the name of "national interest" is a clear violation of the apex court's ruling. While contradicting the framing of the rights of rivers and wetlands as separate living entities, the provisions also indicate how nature is treated as an object that can be tamed or exploited for satiating human needs. In this way, environmental damage is the intended outcome of a dysfunctional governance system where nature and humans do not co-exist, or only co-exist for the latter's benefits.

In addition, the provisions regarding environmental pollution and degradation are too broad, vague, and loosely defined, providing ample scope for manipulation. Further, the provision regarding the prohibition of polythene shopping bags lacks clarity and precision. Although the production, import, marketing, and sale of polythene is prohibited, its export has been allowed, which is a violation of the "no harm principle" of the overarching international environmental legal scheme. The principle requires state parties to prevent, reduce, and control the risk of environmental damage to other states. The question here is: if polyethylene is harmful for the environment in Bangladesh, will it be beneficial for other countries? Or how is it possible to export polythene bags whose production is banned? As a result, the reality is that even after all these years post so-called banning, polythene bags are sold in the market and widely used in our daily lives. Such eccentric provisions of environmental laws are not only inconsistent with international law, but also raise questions about their credibility and proper implementation.

It may be argued that the abuse of "vague and loosely defined provisions" can be checked or overcome if there remains a proper monitoring body. Here, the problem is more acute in Bangladesh. The DoE is the core authority that is entrusted to control and oversee environmental pollution and undertake environmental protection measures. In outlining the DoE's role and functions, the law empowers the body with unfettered authority without inserting any corresponding duties or obligations. To put it simply, if the DoE fails or neglects to prevent environmental degradation and pollution, there is no provision to hold the agency accountable.

VISUAL: ANWAR SOHEL

Apart from vague legal provisions and unaccountable institutions, the law fails to provide an effective forum to vindicate environmental harms and avail remedies against environmental crimes. Rather the concerned law provides a limited jurisdiction to the Environment Court to adjudicate environmental disputes. The Environment Court law creates a bar for general people to file complaints directly. The DoE has been made the authorised body to file cases on behalf of the aggrieved individuals. Due to such limited jurisdiction, legal bar, and lengthy procedural complexity, access to environmental justice is severely restricted which is evident from the low filing of cases to the environment courts. In the last 21 years since the creation of the Environment Court in 2003 till December 31, 2023, a total of only 587 cases have been filed to the environment courts which is an average of less than 28 cases per year.

This low frequency of environmental cases coupled with the rampant violation of the laws also indicates how the laws not only provide a restricted approach to environmental justice but also create an enabling atmosphere for environmental offenders to commit wrongs, remain unaccountable and thereby establish a culture of impunity.

It is worth mentioning that in order to address the widespread failure of the implementation of environmental law, UNEP offered an Environmental Rule of Law framework that aims to reduce the gap between environmental laws on the books and in practice. The core elements of the environmental rule of law include, among others, fair, clear and implementable environmental laws, access to environmental justice, public participation and community-based approach in environmental law-making, accountability and integrity of institutions and decision-makers, and accessible, fair, impartial, timely and responsive adjudication of environmental cases.

It goes without saying that Bangladesh's environmental law framework is inconsistent with the core elements of the environmental rule of law which requires transformative reforms through addressing the vague, inconsistent, and rather scattered legal provisions that hinder effective environmental governance. Environmental rule of law is necessary to formulate clear and just environmental laws, to build strong environmental institutions, and to improve transparency and accountability, thereby increasing trust in the institutions and fostering a culture of compliance.

The failure to enforce environmental laws not only hinders environmental objectives but also creates obstacles to ensure inclusive and sustainable socio-economic development. The unabated pollution, degradation, and damage to natural resources as well as the environment, if not prevented, will also intensify our climate crisis and multiply the burden of climate adaptation, mitigation, and loss and damage. In addition, it will be difficult for us to avail of necessary grants and compensations from the international climate funds or to negotiate at the international fora unless we can ensure strong environmental governance and the rule of law at the domestic level.

DRIVING GROWTH in clean cooking solutions

Practical Action and SNV Bangladesh in collaboration with The Daily Star organised a roundtable titled "Catalysing Growth: Strategies for Strengthening the Entrepreneurial Ecosystem in Higher-Tier Clean Cooking" on February 4, 2024. Here we publish a summary of the discussion.

ROUNDTABLE DISCUSSION
Catalysing Growth: Strategies for Strengthening the Entrepreneurial Ecosystem in Higher-Tier Clean Cooking
Date: February 04, 2024

OPENING REMARKS

Shawkat A. Begum, PhD, Bangladesh Country Director, Practical Action

There is no denying the paramount importance of clean cooking for health and environmental preservation. Our focus remains on safeguarding the health of mothers and children, given the severe health and environmental ramifications of traditional cooking methods. With staggering statistics highlighting the deadly impact of indoor pollution, our collective efforts aim to transition to 100% clean cooking, aligning with government objectives as the government's national clean cooking action plan is soon to be finalised.

Our project, titled 'Strengthening the Entrepreneurial Ecosystem for Higher Tier Clean Cooking' (SEE-Clean Cooking), prioritises policy advocacy, awareness campaigns, and inclusive development strategies, emphasising gender equality and social inclusion. We aspire to reshape societal norms, encouraging greater male involvement in cooking. With diverse representation and a commitment to active participation, we seek collaborative solutions to ensure the success of this endeavour and provide a blueprint for future clean cooking initiatives.

RECOMMENDATIONS

- Promote entrepreneurship, from large firms to MSMEs, to drive the adoption of advanced cooking methods.
- Challenges such as awareness gaps, affordability, and systemic barriers should be addressed to develop the adaptivity of e-cookers.
- Comprehensive community engagement is vital to reshape societal norms, encouraging greater male involvement in cooking.
- Affordability and consumer ease while using the product, along with continuous supply, ensure the sustainability of the approach.
- The government should streamline the importation process for e-cooking device materials.
- A well-designed pilot project in a particular area can be helpful in the conversion from traditional to the ultimate clean cooking system commercially.
- The effective implementation of labelling and standardisation initiatives rely significantly on the concerted efforts of stakeholders, empowering local administrators in the process.
- A precise policy is needed to define the authority that will determine the standards for Bangladesh.
- Bangladesh's energy generation must prioritise renewable energy sources over fossil fuel sources; otherwise, it will fail to fulfil the purpose of clean e-cooking.
- Offer tailored financial schemes that suit the specific needs and preferences of marginal customers.

Ismène R.A.C. Stalpers, Country Director, SNV

Clean cooking is not just a technical shift but also represents a critical step towards a sustainable and healthier future for communities.

One important strategic aspect of the SEE Clean Cooking project is targeting and working with the commercial clean cooking sector, particularly Small and Medium Enterprises (SMEs), with a focus on access to finance through results-based financing (RBF) and Innovation Grants. The journey has already begun through conducting multiple workshops in three districts and engaging with stakeholders, including SREDA and local government bodies, developing partnerships under results-based financing. We have already onboarded over 19 SMEs that have access to RBF and aim to increase this number to 60

Bangladesh's commendable leadership in supporting e-cooking initiatives is inspiring, and we eagerly anticipate future collaborations.

Edwin Koekkoek, Team Leader, Green Inclusive Development and Social Protection, Delegation of the European Union to Bangladesh

Under the EU-Bangladesh cooperation, the EU has significantly increased its commitment and financial investment in climate change mitigation, with a specific focus on the energy and power sector.

Despite significant progress globally towards sustainable energy for all, a shocking reality persists: four billion people lack clean and modern cooking fuels and technologies. Nowhere is this more apparent than in Bangladesh, where the vast majority of households still rely on biomass-based cooking methods. Clean cooking technologies offer a way out, promising improvements in public health, conservation of natural resources, and mitigation of climate change.

The project aims to introduce modern cooking appliances in rural areas through innovative financing and collaboration with local stakeholders. The project rightly considers entrepreneurs a powerful force for economic development, supporting clean cooking. Growing an enabling ecosystem requires providing finance, human capital education and skills, a competitive business environment, and a transparent regulatory framework. Lastly, it is important to be inclusive, involving both the government and the private sector in collaboration.

KEYNOTE PRESENTATION

Samir Muhammad Korban, Project Manager, Practical Action

The SEE Clean Cooking project is coordinated by our partners the Netherlands Enterprise Agency (RVO), who advocate for a private sector-led strategy. Our focus lies on promoting clean and affordable cooking solutions through a private-sector approach, advancing higher-tier cooking solutions in Bangladesh, like other regions across Asia and Africa.

Our main concept revolves around harnessing the entrepreneurial spirit, whether through established private sector entities or local micro, small, and medium-sized enterprises (MSMEs), as a catalyst for economic progress in support of higher-tier cooking. Our efforts predominantly concentrate on the supply side, with a target of reaching 140,000 individuals in Faridpur, Gazipur, and Jhenaidah.

The program consists of three distinct components: pipeline development, access to finance for innovation and scale, and the cultivation of a dynamic and proactive enabling environment.

Afrida Ahmed Orthee, Project Officer, SNV & Nusrat Zahan Fatema, Project Officer, SNV

Result-Based Financing (RBF) is an umbrella term for a variety of financial mechanisms tied to the achievement of pre-agreed and independently verifiable outcomes. Within the principality of the clean cooking sector, RBF serves the primary purpose of driving product adoption and rapidly expanding the market reach of innovative technologies. This is achieved by empowering distributors and stakeholders to procure these appliances in bulk, mitigate associated risks, and enhance unit economics.

Since January, we have diligently pursued RBF partnerships as part of the project. We aim to establish a total of 60 partnerships with both national-level manufacturers and local MSMEs by the end of the project.

Md Mubassir Rahman, Project Manager and Senior Business Consultant, LightCastle Partners

In Bangladesh, systemic challenges, especially limited household electricity capacity and high manufacturing costs, are affecting product affordability and quality. Although locally manufactured and branded products dominate the market, with after-sales services being crucial for consumers' trust, however, product quality regulations and efficiency labelling are still missing at the national level for local manufacturers. Local production affordability must be ensured if we want to set up e-cookers as the next generation solution for our clean cooking.

OPEN DISCUSSION

Moderated by Uttam Kumar Saha, Strategic Lead, Urban & Energy, Practical Action

Shuvasish Bhowmick, Country Director, ATEC

Even though e-cookers are present in the market, only one percent of people use them as their primary device. One of the main reasons behind this is the perception that the initial investment and running costs are high. Although people may perceive it as more expensive than LPG, in reality, it can save up to 45 percent costs compared to LPG. Retailers often lack knowledge about the product, and there is a lack of promotion of such features.

Rawnak Faria, Esho Jati Gori, Faridpur

Operating in the predominantly rural area of Faridpur presents a unique challenge, as families are often hesitant to adopt new cooking methods. However, our extensive women workforce is poised to play a crucial role in overcoming this challenge.

Md. Samiul Islam, Head of Supply Chain Management of Home Appliance, Walton Hi-Tech Industries PLC.

For products such as rice cookers and electric induction cookers, there lacks a comprehensive standardisation framework. Despite this, we have taken proactive steps to establish voluntary standards, including addressing electric safety protocols and advocating for certifications. We strongly urge the government to mandate these standards to ensure uniformity across the industry, enabling us and other companies to deliver products of consistent quality to consumers.

Md. Mazbah Uddin, Manager, SCM, Kiam Metal Industries Limited

We've initiated several educational programs. During a session with major retailers from Dhaka, we provided insights on how to effectively communicate the benefits of e-cookers to customers.

Additionally, we've taken steps to enhance customer understanding by including Bengali translations on our warranty cards, recognizing the linguistic diversity in our market. Furthermore, we've deployed maintenance personnel to assist customers facing operational challenges with e-cookers, particularly with rice and induction cookers, which are often areas of difficulty.

Utpal Bhattacharjee, Lighting (Energy) Market Assessment Expert, CLASP

Central to our discussion is the need for concerted efforts to accelerate the dissemination and adoption of e-cooking systems. Standardisation is a pressing issue, with two standards submitted to BSTI awaiting approval.

Without after-sale warranties or guarantees, consumer trust is compromised. Addressing these issues requires a focused policy direction.

Segment-focused strategies are essential, catering to rural, lower, middle, and higher-income groups.

Onkar Nath, Programme Manager, EnDev, GIZ

Standardisation and labelling are pivotal for promoting e-cooking appliances effectively in the market. Consumers often lack awareness regarding the quality of the products they purchase, underscoring the urgency for standardised guidelines.

Over the past few years, we've collaborated with BSTI on developing these standards. Yet, there seems to be a disconnect between BSTI, the market, private sectors, and the overall development sector.

Khandakar Rashid Uz Zaman, Retailer, Faridpur

The design of e-cooking appliances should prioritise energy efficiency to minimise electricity consumption. In rural areas, affordability is a critical issue, and efforts should be made to ensure that e-cooking is more economical than existing systems. Crafting pricing strategies to make these appliances accessible in villages will encourage widespread adoption.

Mostafa Kamal, Chief Business Officer, Walton Home and Kitchen Appliances

To successfully execute this project, consider these five key points. Firstly, ensure your products are readily available in the market. Secondly, focus on creating a distinct market presence. Thirdly, establish effective awareness campaigns to enhance product visibility. Fourthly, maintain a competitive edge by offering high-quality products at a reasonable price. Lastly, prioritise post-sale services, aiming to assist within 72 hours.

SPEECHES

Siddique Zobair, Ex-Additional Secretary and Member, Sustainable and Renewable Energy Development Authority, Ministry of Power, Energy and Mineral Resources

There is a persisting confusion regarding which authority will decide on the minimum standard for cooking stoves. Besides BSTI, there already exists an internationally accepted tier-based standard for cooking stoves. Moreover, the issue at hand is determining which tier will be designated as the minimum standard for Bangladesh.

The creation of demand, as well as ensuring the supply of standard products at an affordable price in an acceptable manner, is very crucial. From the government side, there are several scopes to work with stakeholders such as NBR to minimize the financial burden of importing materials for e-cooking devices.

If the country produces all its electricity from coal, then it cannot be considered a source of clean e-cooking. Being environmentally friendly, a solar thermal cooker can be an appropriate option for accommodating e-cooking methods. However, a significant challenge lies in its high price, bulky size, as well as the requirement for additional solar panel equipment. Nonetheless, as the product enters the market development phase and undergoes commercial production, we anticipate a substantial price reduction.

Dr Bianca van der Kroon, Programme Manager SEE-Clean Cooking, Department of International Development, Netherlands Enterprise Agency

The need for access to clean cooking technologies is a global one. Relying on traditional, biomass-based cooking methods presents many challenges, including indoor air pollution, health risks, greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions, etc. With Strengthening the Entrepreneurial Ecosystem for Clean Cooking - SEE Clean Cooking, RVO has launched a private-sector approach to promote clean, affordable cooking solutions. Under this, the Higher Tier Cooking Component (HTCC) is a 5-year programme that aims to further strengthen the supply side of the clean cooking sector. It does this by helping small and medium-sized enterprises improve their business operations, get access to finance for scale and innovation and by helping build an enabling environment in support of clean cooking. HTCC aims to reach 600,000 people in Bangladesh, Cambodia, Ethiopia, and Uganda.

RVO is very pleased to see the formal launch of the HTCC programme in Bangladesh. We are confident that the Bangladesh team will continue to work closely with the private sector, the government and other relevant organisations to support a sustainable market for e-cooking appliances.

Nirod Chandra Mondal, Joint Secretary, Renewable Energy Wing, Power Division, Ministry of Power Energy and Mineral Resources

We are currently working towards the ambitious goal outlined by our esteemed Prime Minister, Sheikh Hasina, during COP26: achieving 40 percent of our energy from renewable sources by 2041. This commitment not only holds promise for sustainable energy but also presents a significant opportunity to transition to clean cooking systems. With approximately 80 percent of our population residing in rural areas, harnessing solar energy for cooking purposes emerges can be a compelling solution.

A well-designed pilot project could serve as a blueprint for a scalable business model. By evaluating the outcomes of transitioning all cooking stoves to e-cooking and subsequently to clean cooking in a specific area, we can gain insights into the mechanisms involved in moving from traditional to ultimately clean cooking systems.

Tazeen Hossain, Head of Programme Delivery and Operations, Practical Action

On behalf of SEE-Clean Cooking Bangladesh, I would like to thank everyone for driving an insightful discussion and making this roundtable event a success.

We believe that a collaborative approach from different stakeholders like the private sector, the government, local entrepreneurs, policy experts, etc., is critical to ensure the progress of clean cooking technologies in Bangladesh. Thus, the diverse representation here today is a notable step towards the right direction.

Tanjim Ferdous, In-Charge, NGOs & Foreign Missions, Business Development Team, The Daily Star

The Daily Star consistently covers environmental issues, recognising the pressing challenge of the climate crisis. Through our reports and opinion pieces, we strive to raise awareness among people about ongoing environmental issues. Our ultimate goal is to contribute to a greener planet for future generations.

Lankans' loss gives Tigers 'ray of hope'

SPORTS REPORTER

Back in 2007, Bangladesh's journey in T20 World Cups had started with a bang with the Tigers notching up a convincing win over the West Indies in their opening match of the tournament in South Africa.

But eight editions in, that win over West Indies remains Bangladesh's only victory over a higher-ranked team in the tournament, a fact that aches one of the chief architects of that victory: former captain Mohammad Ashraful.

"Comparing the way associate teams like the USA, Canada, Papua New Guinea have played, I feel that Bangladesh have regressed in T20s," Ashraful told The Daily Star.

"We still don't understand the rhythm of the format. Our only T20 tournament is the BPL [Bangladesh Premier League], which also is not up to standard. The associates mostly play T20s and are quickly improving."

Bangladesh are days away from starting their ninth edition of the T20 World Cup and their prospects aren't looking too good.

The Najmul Hossain Shanto-led side are heading into the tournament on the back of an embarrassing 2-1 series defeat against the USA last month and a 60-run defeat against India in a warm-up match.

The Tigers will begin their campaign on June 8 against Sri Lanka, who lost to South Africa on Monday.

Sri Lanka will be under pressure as another defeat will put their Super 8 chances under serious threat.

But to capitalise on Sri Lanka's vulnerability, he Tigers first have to play to their potential, feels Ashraful.

"The team is eally short of confidence. They have not been able to play to their potential at all. Bangladesh's lack of options has also become really apparent. We don't have enough options in T20s. We are continuing with the same options from 2021-22, even though they haven't clicked.

"Realistically, Bangladesh's chances of progressing to the next phase are very slim. The only ray of hope for them is that Sri Lanka have lost their opening game, after losing to Netherlands in a warm-up match, and are under pressure. They have a chance to capitalise on that."

Unlike most ICC events, where pitches are usually of a sporting nature, there have been a variety of pitches on display in the first few matches of the T20 World Cup.

Ashraful feels that teams cannot hope to play the same way in all pitches this time, and senses that a few upsets may be on the horizon.

"The pitches this time are not like the ones we usually see in ICC events. Teams can't succeed playing typical T20 cricket -- they will have to assess the pitch first and then play accordingly. It seems that ICC's plans of using T20s to spread cricket around the world is working. The associates are showing great improvement. I expect to see a few upsets in the World Cup," he concluded.

India skipper Rohit Sharma leads the pack in training as the Men in Blue start their T20 World Cup campaign against Ireland at the Nassau County International Cricket Stadium in New York today. India face potential banana skin fixture

Sceptics call them 'old wine in new bottle' but a clutch of superstar Indian cricketers would leave no stone unturned to break away from their archaic template when they take on a plucky Ireland in their opening game of the T20 World Cup in New York on Wednesday.

The team knows that it is a touch undercooked with a lot of confusion still persisting about what could be the best combination on a drop-in virgin strip. As is clear from the games so far, scoring won't be a walk in the park like it was during the Indian Premier League the last couple of months.

But the bigger concern is the baggage of being favourites who don't really make it count in the end.

Rohit Sharma and Virat Kohli have individually laid their hands on global silverware but an assortment of some other 'once in generation' cricketers, including Jasprit Bumrah and Ravindra Jadeja, have not and they would be eager to finally lift one.

The most poignant sight of last year's ODI World Cup was a forlorn Rohit, after the final, desperately trying to hide his welled-up eyes from the TV cameras as he quietly climbed the steps of the Narendra Modi Stadium dressing room.

There was also Kohli, who after scoring those 765 invaluable runs, could only get a fleeting blank gaze towards the podium where the trophy was kept.

The best players sometimes don't add up to become the best team and while India have put faith in their most experienced lot, it can't be simply wished away that this current batch has faltered at the final two hurdles way too many times.

At 37, this could safely be termed as Rohit's last World Cup in the white-ball format as one doesn't have to be Nostradamus to predict that he won't be around for the next T20 World Cup in India and the 50-over World Cup in South Africa in 2027.

A very gutsy Irish team with some quality T20 players like Paul Stirling, Josh Little, Harry Tector, Andy Balbirnie, awaits India in the lung-opener.

On a slow track and a sub-standard outfield at the Nassau County ground, how India plays against Irish left-arm spinner George Dockrell will be interesting.

Where India hold the advantage is their spinners who are way better compared to what the Irish team have though the pace attack, aside from Bumrah, looks a bit weak in absence of the redoubtable Mohammed Shami.

Often having too many options isn't the best option just like Indians have at the top. To fit in skipper Rohit and team's most elite batter in Kohli, they have to probably sacrifice Yashasvi Jaiswal.

Rishabh Pant's batting at No.3 in the practice game was like a breath of fresh air and Hardik Pandya's bowling form will indicate how India fares in this competition.

Like earlier days, Ireland aren't exactly a minnow in this format and very recently, they have beaten Pakistan in their own den in the run-up to the World Cup.

Little has more than little experience of playing IPL for Gujarat Titans and the troika of Balbirnie, Stirling and Tector can more than chance their arms.

The 'Green Shirts' will be the banana peel that Rohit and his men can ill-afford to slip on before they meet the more famous 'Green Jerseys' at the weekend.

- India have won all seven of their meetings in T20Is against Ireland, including an eight-wicket victory in the 2009 T20 World Cup – the only meeting between the two sides in the major event.
- India skipper Rohit Sharma is 26 runs away from reaching 4,000 runs in T20Is. He will become only the third player to reach the milestone after Virat Kohli (4037) and Babar Azam (4023).
- Andy Balbirnie has scored 156 runs – the most in India-Ireland contests – at a strike-rate of 138.05. Meanwhile, India's wrist-spin dup Kuldeep Yadav and Yuzvendra Chahal have taken the most number of wickets – seven each – amongst players from both sides.

Djokovic out of French Open with knee injury

AFP, Paris

Novak Djokovic withdrew from the French Open ahead of his quarter-final against Casper Ruud due to a knee injury suffered in the previous round, tournament organisers announced on Tuesday.

"Due to a torn medial meniscus in his right knee (discovered during an MRI scan performed today), Novak Djokovic... has been forced to withdraw from the Roland Garros tournament," organisers said in a statement.

World number one and 24-time Grand Slam champion Djokovic was due to play Ruud on Wednesday for a place in the last four. Djokovic defeated Ruud in last year's final at Roland Garros.

The 37-year-old Djokovic had cast doubt over his fitness following Monday's five-set win over Francisco Cerundolo, admitting he needed anti-inflammatory drugs to get through the match.

Djokovic blamed the "slippery" Philippe Chatrier court for the injury he sustained early in the second set of his 6-1, 5-7, 3-6, 7-5, 6-3 victory over Cerundolo.

"I don't know what will happen tomorrow or after tomorrow if I'll be able to step out on the court and play. You know, I hope so. Let's see what happens," Djokovic said after the match.

Mbappe arrival ignites Madrid fans and press

AFP, Madrid

Kylian Mbappe's long-awaited arrival at Real Madrid sparked joyous reactions in the Spanish press and amongst the club's fans on Tuesday, though the French superstar will know he must live up to his billing on the pitch.

The official announcement of the 15-times Champions League winners' latest star signing on Monday was a seismic event in Madrid. After seven years of rumour and anticipation, Mbappe had finally landed at the "club of (his) dream".

"What you dreamed of", proclaimed the front page of Marca, alongside a photo edit of Mbappe wearing a Madrid shirt, in response to the 25-year-old's social media post in which he referred to the move as "a dream come true".

"Mbappe at last", said sports daily AS, who went on to celebrate "another galactico" in Real's stable, following on from the much-heralded signings of Zinedine Zidane, David Beckham, Luis Figo and Cristiano Ronaldo earlier in the 21st century.

Popular radio station Cadena COPE called Mbappe "the cherry on the cake many years in the making thanks to the fantastic management" of Real president Florentino Perez.

Madrid legend Iker Casillas took to social media to welcome Mbappe to "the best club in the world", adding: "The path to 16 (Champions League trophies) begins with you."

Outside the club's official store in central Madrid, Zein Mroueh, a 52-year-old French fan, believes that Mbappe "has come at the right time", but that "he's going to have to hit the ground running because he's entering another stage of his life".

Despite the glowing reception he has so far received, Mbappe will be under no illusions that he must back up his reputation as one of the world's best players on the pitch in front of the Madrid faithful.

"He's a great recruit, an immense player. But here, he will be just another player in Real's great history," Luis Caceres, president of the Penas federation (Real's supporters' groups) told AFP.

"With what happened two years ago, when he decided to extend his contract with Paris Saint-Germain, Kylian needs to know that he'll have his work cut out for him. When will he be forgiven? When he shows us on the pitch that he's now at the club he loves," added Caceres.

Shimana passes away at 39, showbiz mourns tragic loss

Model and actress Rista Laboni Shimana breathed her last yesterday at the Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University (BSMMU), succumbing to severe complications from a brain haemorrhage at the age of 39. The talented artiste, who rose to fame through the 2006 Lux-Channel i Superstar competition, left behind two children, eight-year-old Shreshtho, and three-year-old Sworgo.

ZAHID AKBAR

The heartbreaking scene at the Channel i building around noon saw Shimana's children innocently playing near a condolence book, unaware their mother's untimely demise had forever altered their lives. "Look, Mom has come. Let's go and see her, Sworgo," Shreshtho remarked as the ambulance carrying his mother's remains arrived. Little did they know, this would be the last time they ever saw her.

A little distance away, we could hear the heartbreaking cries of a devastated mother. She was still numb from the loss of her daughter. Unable to control her emotions, she hugged Salahuddin Lavlu and wept inconsolably. She couldn't grasp losing her daughter at such a young age. "I really can't believe she is gone just like that. Why did it have to be her?" she sobbed, tears rolling down her cheeks. Her trembling hands clutched her daughter's photo, unable to comprehend the tragedy.

Shimana's colleague, director Salahuddin Lavlu, lamented, "She messaged me a month ago, saying she wanted to return to work. I told her I wasn't working on anything at that moment but would let her know as soon as I started something new. Now, I will never be able to cast her, as she has left us too soon." Lavlu had directed Shimana in the acclaimed drama Sakin Sarisuri, which brought her widespread recognition for her role as Kakoli.

Actor Chanchal Chowdhury expressed his condolences on his social media, stating, "Shimana... You've crossed from life into the realm of death...! May you find eternal peace in the infinite beyond. Our hearts ache with sorrow for you. Countless memories linger...!"

Director Chayanika Chowdhury shared a photo of the late actress' children, captioning, "I'm at a loss for words...My heartfelt prayers go out to the two children. May she find peace in the afterlife, and may the One above watch over her children. I pray that all motherless children around the world find comfort, care, and happiness."

The talented actress emerged in the entertainment industry through the 2006 Lux-Channel i Superstar contest. In addition to her television work, she made her silver screen debut in Tauquir Ahmed's film Daruchini Dwip. In terms of her recent work, she appeared in Biplob Haider's Roshni last year, playing the role of a journalist, after a six-year break due to family commitments.

Shimana's battle began around two weeks ago as she suddenly fell ill on the night of May 21. Around 11:30pm, she was rushed to a private hospital in Dhanmondi, where it was discovered that she had suffered from a brain haemorrhage. The following day, she was transferred to another hospital in Dhanmondi for better treatment. Eventually, on doctors' advice, she was admitted to the National Institute of Neurosciences and Hospital in the capital's Agargaon, where she underwent brain surgery on May 25.

Despite undergoing surgery, her condition remained critical, leading to her transfer to the BSMMU, where she was put on life support last Wednesday (May 29). Tragically, she passed away around 6am yesterday.

The first janaza was held at 12:30pm at the Channel i building on the same day. She was laid to rest at her family graveyard in Nakla upazila, Sherpur, later in the evening.

As the nation mourns the devastating loss of the 39-year-old's talent and vibrant spirit, Shimana's colleagues and loved ones struggle to come to terms with her tragic and untimely passing, ensuring her legacy lives on.

Actor Chanchal Chowdhury expressed his condolences on his social media, stating, "Shimana... You've crossed from life into the realm of death...! May you find eternal peace in the infinite beyond. Our hearts ache with sorrow for you. Countless memories linger...!"

Arjun Rampal to walk on ramp in Dhaka this month

Bollywood heartthrob Arjun Rampal is set to visit Dhaka this month, after 14 years. The actor, known for his fantastic performance and charismatic personality, has impressed audiences worldwide and made a name for himself.

Arjun Rampal will be in Dhaka on June 7 to attend the upcoming fashion show titled BHN Experiences Presents Blue Drops by Zurhem.

Zurhem announced the news on their social media with a personalised video from the actor, confirming that he will be walking the runway in Dhaka this month.

This event is being exclusively organised for Zurhem's loyal and frequent customers, and attendees must register to attend the fashion show.

Sabina Yasmin returns home after months of treatment abroad

Legendary singer Sabina Yasmin has returned to Bangladesh after undergoing treatment for three and a half months at Singapore General Hospital.

The singer arrived back in Dhaka on May 31 and is currently recuperating at her home.

Recently, a family source confirmed to the media that the singer's health is stable. However, she will need to return to Singapore later this month for regular medical check-ups.

Yasmin initially travelled to Singapore last February for a routine medical examination. During the check-up, doctors discovered a dental issue, necessitating surgery on February 7.

Tigers' injury woes in WC continue

The pacer went through the grind in an indoor session on Monday, trying to get back his rhythm.

While Bangladesh Cricket Board's medical department were hopeful of Taskin's recovery when talking to The Daily Star earlier last month, there may be a risk involved in Taskin pushing himself too far. Fellow quick Shoriful Islam, meanwhile, is unlikely to play the Sri Lanka fixture after having injured his bowling hand during the warm-up fixture against India on June 1 and needed six stitches afterwards.

Bangladesh's batting has already been under fire in recent series, and with the most promising among the three departments in the Tigers' dugout still in doubt for World Cup games, the backup options would also be kept ready. Bar Hasan Mahmud, there are no other options for the recovering speedsters.

Given Bangladesh's first two World Cup matches are against Sri Lanka and South Africa, failure to win any of those two affairs can make or break their tournament, leading to certain elimination from the first round.

Meanwhile, criticism of wickets and grounds in the USA has been a big talking point among experts. Whereas Canada and the USA played out a high-scoring game in Dallas, the venue for Bangladesh's first game, Sri Lanka were thumped by South Africa in New York where the ground was inadequately prepared and the wicket made for a low-scoring affair. Cricket commentator Harsha Bhogle went as far as saying that cricket will not gain ground in the USA, with playing surfaces and outfields of that quality.

There are plenty of questions for the tournament organisers to answer in this regard. However, with wickets unlikely to alter in the next few days, Bangladesh are faced with multiple hurdles as they seek to regain lost confidence.

Benazir may not appear

IGP and his family had left the country.

On May 28, the ACC issued a notice to Benazir Ahmed and his family for interrogation over the allegations that he amassed illegal wealth through corruption. According to the notice, Benazir Ahmed was summoned on June 6, his wife Zeeshan Mirza and two daughters on June 9.

Sources said, considering how things stand, it is unlikely that Benazir Ahmed will appear before the ACC for questioning tomorrow.

Meanwhile, Benazir's lawyers did not provide any information about the whereabouts of the former IGP and his family and refrained from commenting on whether he will appear before the ACC.

Sources at immigration police confirmed to The Daily Star that Benazir Ahmed and her family members left for Singapore on a Singapore Airlines flight on the night of May 4.

A reliable source close to Benazir said that Benazir went to Singapore with some of his wife's medical documents. However, he did not confirm whether Benazir is currently in Singapore or any other country.

Moreover, it is uncertain how the corruption charges against Benazir will proceed as he is not in the country.

Speaking on the issue, ACC Chairman Mohammad Moinuddin Abdullah told The Daily Star, "We have requested him [Benazir] to submit a statement on the corruption allegations raised against him. He is expected to come and speak on his behalf. That is what we are hoping for."

"We don't really know where he is right now. We have not issued any travel ban against him or any of his family members," he added.

"The investigation team is probing allegations of corruption against Benazir Ahmed. If they think they need to summon him again to get his statement, they can do so. The investigation committee is completely independent."

The murder plan

In his statement, Tanvir further said the killing was planned as per the instructions of Aktaruzzaman, who had been in India for some time and then returned to Bangladesh.

The last meeting, which firmed up the murder plan, was held at a restaurant named "O2" near the Kolkata Airport, in the presence of Aktaruzzaman. He is now in the USA, court sources said.

Amanullah, Mostafizur Rahman, Jihad Howlader, Tanvir, and Siam, among others, were present at the meeting.

About how the lawmaker was lured, the sources said Tanvir had assured Azim that arrangements were made to pay back all the dues of his business.

On Monday, another arrestee, Celesty Rahman, confessed before the court.

Meanwhile, a Bangladesh police team, which went to Nepal on June 1 following information that another suspect, Siam Hossain, was arrested, returned home yesterday. Nepal police arrested Siam, acting up on Bangladesh's alert.

However, there are complications in bringing back Siam due to the absence of an extradition treaty between Bangladesh and Nepal.

Siam might be handed over to India instead, where a murder case was also filed against him for the lawmaker's killing, sources said.

Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (DB) of DMP, who led the police team in Nepal, yesterday said both countries (India and Bangladesh) have the same intention in this regard.

"We are exchanging information. Whether Nepal hands over the accused to India or to us, there will be no problem in the investigation. The Indian police team came to interrogate the three arrestees – Aktaruzzaman, Celesty, and Tanvir -- in Bangladesh, while we went to India to interrogate Jihad Howlader."

He further said that Siam was close to the mastermind Aktaruzzaman.

"If Kolkata police gets Siam in its custody, it will be very helpful in getting more evidence. We'll also get the chance to interrogate him ourselves."

Addressing reporters at the airport, Harun said Siam went to Nepal via Muzaffarabad after abducting and killing the lawmaker in Kolkata, adding that MP Azim's phone was activated in Muzaffarabad as Siam used it to make some calls.

He further said they have received important information and footage from Kathmandu Police about Siam, which will be useful in the investigation.

Benazir, Aziz have nothing to do

"Who had created former IGP Shamsul Huda and SP Kohinur?" he said.

Quader said BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir might have forgotten that his party's acting chief is a convict on the run.

On the other hand, Hasina is well-known at home and abroad as an honest politician, and there is no scope for raising question about her honesty, he said.

The AL general secretary said Khaleda has been sentenced on corruption charges and she can receive treatment at home as her jail term has been suspended due to the generosity of the prime minister.

"This BNP is now talking about corruption and money laundering," Quader said.

He said BNP is now trying to portray their corrupt convicted leader Tarique Rahman as a good person.

Quader said Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB), Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik (SHUJAN) and BNP make comments in the same tone. "Are TIB and SHUJAN the B-team of BNP?"

The meeting was moderated by Dhaka City North AL General Secretary SM Mannan Kachi, with its President Sheikh Bazlur Rahman in the chair.

Flood situation worsens further

Floodwater enters the city through drains and canals as the rivers surrounding the city are overflowing, said Sajlu Lashkar, public relations officer of Sylhet City Corporation.

Amid this situation, Zakiganj and Kanaighat upazila parishads go to polls today.

"The flooded polling stations have been changed. We have taken all-out preparations to hold the elections," said Returning Officer Imrul Hasan, who is an additional district magistrate of Sylhet.

Meanwhile in Sunamganj, hundreds of people have been affected by the flood in the district. Many roads have been submerged, disrupting communications, said locals.

14-party allies vent anger

and corruption, for which the government is to ultimately blame, they said.

"Since Awami League alone is in power, why should the partners take responsibility for the government's misdeeds?" one partner asked.

Top leaders of several allies also expressed their frustration over the government's inaction and silence about market manipulation and corruption, especially in the banking sector, when the culprits are already identified.

The meeting was held at Amu's Eskaton residence in the capital. It was a follow-up meeting after AL chief Sheikh Hasina, also the prime minister, sat with them on May 23.

At the beginning of the meeting, Amu informed the AL's plan to go for united programmes to counter anti-state and anti-government propaganda, but the alliance partners rejected the idea, said meeting sources.

After the meeting, Amu told reporters that there were some confusions among some alliance partners, and that they will organise joint programmes after "resolving the disputes".

In response to Amu's proposal for joint programmes at the meeting, Workers Party President Rashed Khan Menon, Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal President Hasanul Haq Inu, Jatiya Party (Manju) Chairman Anwar Hossain Manju and Tarikat Federation Chairman Syed Nazibul Bashar Maizvandari said they do not even know how the AL view this partnership.

They added that they now wonder whether the alliance exists anymore or whether it is relevant now.

AL leaders are now raising questions about the partners' organisational strength and vote bank, but the alliance was formed out of a political necessity, and that AL termed the alliance its "ideological" partners, they said.

Inu alleged that candidates from the 14-party were not allowed to win in the January 7 national election as part of a pre-planned strategy.

AL shared only seven seats with its three partners in the election, down from 16 in the 2018 polls.

Maizvandari demanded an explanation as to why the partners were not offered their desired seats and what problem would the AL have had if some of the partners won some seats.

He said they are aware how the election was conducted and how many of the AL candidates actually won the election, according to meeting sources.

Some 14-party leaders told Amu that the AL is now seeking to go for joint programmes since the government is facing some difficulties on multiple fronts, but they will be "thrown aside" again once the crisis is over.

Manju, a seven-time lawmaker from Pirojpur-2, said he was defeated by a so-called AL independent candidate, whose family had questionable roles during the 1971 war, through use of police force.

"Awami League always talks about the spirit of the Liberation War, but in many cases its activities don't match its claims," he said.

AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader is expected to sit with the alliance partners on June 12 in efforts to bridge the gap.

Biden added that he had a "major disagreement" with Netanyahu over the post-conflict future of Gaza, and said Israel had engaged in "inappropriate" conduct during the offensive.

But for now, the Gaza offensive raged on unabated yesterday, with the Israeli military reporting more air and artillery strikes and ground combat against Hamas, and Palestinians bemoaning more civilian deaths.

Overnight bombardment hit targets in Gaza City and the southern Rafah area, said AFP reporters and witnesses.

Four bodies were retrieved from a bombed house in the Bureij camp in central Gaza, and three more from the rubble of a destroyed building in Gaza City, Gaza's civil defence agency said.

Israel's military offensive in the Gaza Strip has killed at least 36,550 Palestinians and wounded 82,959 since October 7, the Palestinian enclave's health ministry said yesterday. A total of 71 Palestinians have been killed and 182 wounded in the past 24 hours, the ministry said in a statement.

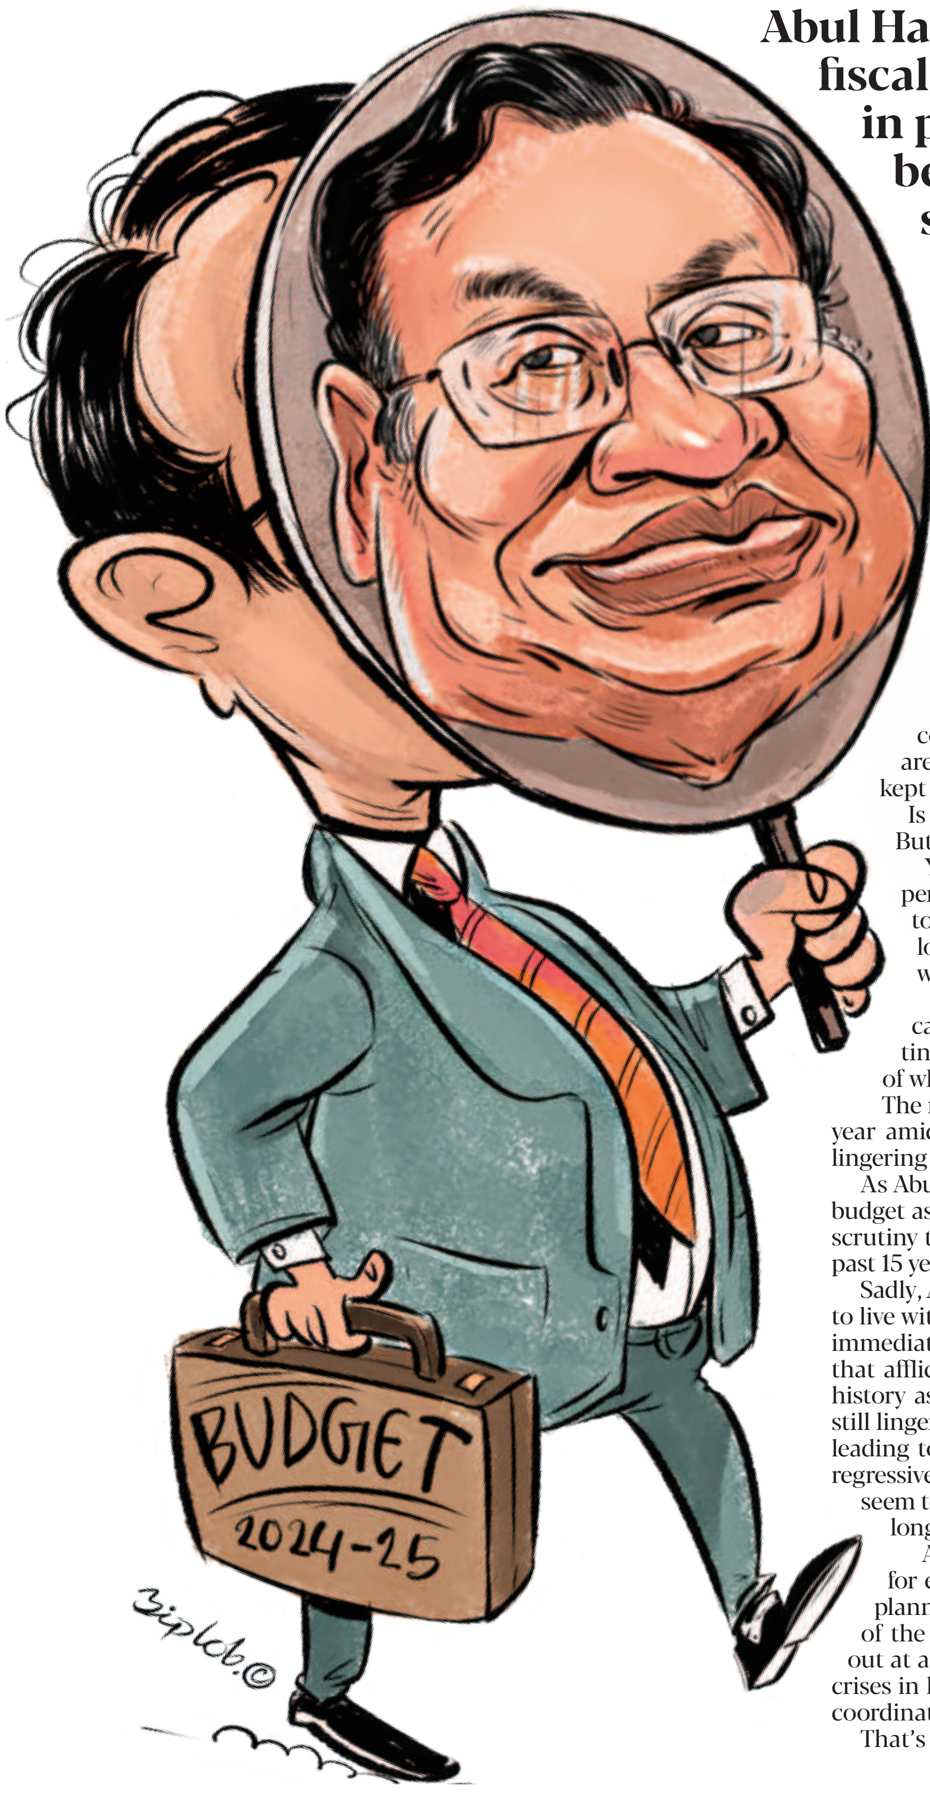
A wounded economy, another perilous year

Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali unveils fiscal goals in his maiden budget in parliament today. Will he be able to fix the precarious state of the economy?



ARUN DEVNATH

It's not the best of times. It's not the season of light. The future will tell whether it's the period of Dickensian despair on the economic front. But this is not the moment for business as usual, for sure.

The cycle of economic exhilaration that portrayed Bangladesh as a stellar performer in Asia for a decade is no more on the steady ground that it once was. A triad of crises is now seeping into every corner of the economy. Inflation is an index of chronic consumer pain. The exchange rate shock is hurting almost everyone. Foreign exchange reserves are still haemorrhaging -- half a billion dollars per month.

A sea of red ink appears on the horizon as almost all indicators depict a gloomy picture. GDP growth has come down from its exuberant peak. Stock prices continue to drift downward. Most banks, save for a dozen, are lurching in and out of fund shortages. The zombie banks kept alive for too long are dragging the sector down.

Is the economy becoming a chronic patient? Perhaps not. But it's grievously bruised and needs to be healed and fast.

Years of stability lulled us into believing everything was perfect. People in almost every sphere became habituated to an equilibrium of low inflation, low interest rates and low exchange rate volatility. Under this apparent calmness was a layer of stress.

Then the global crisis came more as a trigger than a cause, exposing Bangladesh's vulnerabilities. Now the tinted perception of the economy is wearing off, acceptance of which we are resisting.

The new fiscal year starting in July could be another perilous year amid a confluence of global economic headwinds and the lingering effects of the government's past misguided steps.

As Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali unveils fiscal goals in his maiden budget as the finance minister today, he will come under sharper scrutiny than his predecessors who managed the economy in the past 15 years.

Sadly, Ali has inherited a wounded economy, but he doesn't have to live with a controversial legacy left by AHM Mustafa Kamal, his immediate predecessor, whose 6/9 percent interest rate formula that afflicted the banking sector for three years will go down in history as the most perverse practice. Its toxic fallout, some say, still lingers as it created unnecessary aggregate demand for credit leading to inflationary pressure. Inflation, equivalent to a highly regressive tax on already stagnating wages and salaries, doesn't seem to be coming down to a tolerance level so soon. It will be a long slog for the government to tame consumer prices.

Ali, 81, was well known for foreign service, but not so much for economic management. Still, the heavy lifting of budget planning fell on his frail shoulders right after he took the helm of the country's finance ministry in January. And it's playing out at a time when Bangladesh faces one of the worst economic crises in history. Now, he is diving into a territory that requires a coordinated policy approach to bring the economy back on track.

That's an enormous task.

Govt to rely more on local banks than foreign funds

REJAUL KARIM BYRON and ASIFUR RAHMAN

The government will rely more on domestic bank borrowing than foreign financing in the next fiscal year, intensifying pressure on the economy.

In the revised budget for the current fiscal year of 2023-24, the net foreign financing was cut by 25 percent due to the increasing debt servicing cost and low utilisation of foreign funds.

Net foreign financing is calculated after excluding the expenditure on debt servicing.

The net foreign financing is likely to be reduced by 12 percent in 2024-25. In the current fiscal year, Tk 1,02,490 crore was allocated as net foreign financing, which was later reduced to Tk 76,293 crore.

Foreign aid in the pipeline as of April 24: $46b

The amount will be Tk 90,700 crore in FY25.

In the revised budget, the allocation for debt servicing has increased by 2.7 percent to $3.82 billion, including principal amount and interest payments. The expenditure climbed 13.8 percent due to the depreciation of the taka and stood at Tk 42,200 crore.

When the budget was placed last year, an exchange rate of Tk 99.46 per dollar was used. An exchange rate of Tk 110 per dollar has been taken into consideration in the case of the revised budget of FY24 and the proposed budget for FY25.

On May 8, the central bank, however, fixed Tk 117 as the mid-rate as it looks to allow the market to set the exchange rate.

Modi invites PM to his inauguration

Hasina congratulates him on polls victory

STAR REPORT

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi yesterday invited his Bangladeshi counterpart Sheikh Hasina to attend the swearing-in ceremony of his government on June 8.

Hasina accepted the invitation, Noorelahi Mina, PM's deputy press secretary, told the media yesterday, reports UNB.

In a telephone conversation yesterday evening, Hasina congratulated Modi on the resounding victory of National Democratic Alliance (NDA), led by the Bharatiya Janata Party, in the 18th Lok Sabha elections.

PALLAB BHATTACHARYA, New Delhi

Narendra Modi moved a step closer to becoming India's prime minister for a third successive time as he was unanimously elected the leader of the BJP-led National Democratic Alliance yesterday.

The only other Indian to have been elected prime minister three times in a row was the country's first PM and Congress stalwart Jawaharlal Nehru.

Modi will take oath on June 8.

Leaders of the NDA passed a proposal to this effect in a meeting at Modi's official residence in New Delhi's Lok Kalyan Marg .

The decision came a day after the NDA won 293 seats in the Lok Sabha election, giving them a majority in the 543-member legislature. The alliance is likely to stake claim to form government for the third consecutive time.

'New law may dent BTRC's autonomy'

Experts say as draft act gives ministry power to remove its commissioners

MAHMUDUL HASAN

The government will have the power to set the terms of removal and resignation of the commissioners of the telecom regulator, according to a draft law.

Currently, when a commissioner of the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission faces allegations of conflict of interest, corruption or abuse of power, a committee of Supreme Court judges investigate the matter and the government takes action as per its recommendations.

According to recent changes made to the draft telecommunications act, the ministry will handle such matters.

According to telecom and ICT specialist TIM Nurul Kabir, the BTRC would lose whatever autonomy it has if the ministry has such power.

"The BTRC should be autonomous," he said.

At a discussion on the draft law, BTRC Chairman Mohiuddin Ahmed yesterday said, "I want to perform my duty without fear or intimidation. I am an engineer with years of experience. I am 64. If someone supervises me and tells me what should or should not be done, my brain does not function."

The discussion at the ICT Division was organised by the Telecom and Technology Reporters Network

Questions may arise over rule of law

US state dept says about case against Prof Yunus

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The US has expressed worries that the perceived misuse of labour and anti-corruption laws in relation to Nobel laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus can raise questions about the rule of law in Bangladesh and dissuade foreign direct investment.

"So, we continue to closely monitor developments in the case against Dr Yunus. We have expressed our concern that these cases may represent a misuse of Bangladesh's labour laws to harass and intimidate Dr Yunus," said State Department Spokesperson Matthew Miller at a regular press briefing in Washington DC on Tuesday.

He said the US would continue to encourage the Bangladesh government to ensure a fair and transparent legal process for Dr Yunus.

Miller made the comments in response to a question from a journalist regarding Dr Yunus'

Benazir seeks 15 days' time to appear before ACC

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Former IGP Benazir Ahmed may not appear before the Anti-Corruption Commission for questioning today as he has sought 15 days' time to appear before the commission.

His lawyer on behalf of him sought the time, said Md Jahurul Haque, ACC commissioner (investigation), in reply to a query from a journalist at the ACC headquarters yesterday.

"I don't know exactly. But I heard he [Benazir] sought time," said the commissioner.

"The investigation team will decide about it [summons]. It is their matter. They will know better."

On May 28, the anti-graft body issued a notice to Benazir and his family for interrogation over the allegations that he amassed illegal wealth through corruption. According to the notice, Benazir was summoned to appear before the ACC today, his wife Zeeshan Mirza and two daughters on June 9.

Although the ACC sent the summons to his Gulshan home last week, no one from Benazir's family received the letter. As of yesterday, the letter remained at the guardroom of their Gulshan home amid speculations that the ex-IGP and his family had left the country.

However, it is still unknown whether Benazir's wife and two daughters will appear before the anti-graft body on June 9.

A wounded economy, another perilous year

Two years in a row, fiscal policy failed to heal festering wounds. But the new budget presents an opportunity for the new minister to reveal a vision to turn things around. Ali faces a difficult trade-off between maintaining economic growth and strengthening public finances.

One of his fiscal goals is a narrower budgetary deficit equal to 4.6 percent of the gross domestic product, a clear departure from the golden rule of the 5 percent gap that Bangladesh has followed for ages with some exceptions. Some economists say the new deficit plan is still too high. The issue is not debt sustainability but macroeconomic stability because more than half of the deficit financing will come from domestic borrowing. That could either come in conflict with monetary policy targets to reduce domestic credit growth or severely crowd out private credit by driving interest rates too high. The economists suggest it should be contained to 3 percent of GDP at least for fiscal 2024-25, another uncertain year, to reduce the burden.

"The main elements of the budget strategy should be to reduce fiscal deficit significantly to lower aggregate demand. This demand reduction should be achieved in a way that it does not compromise the future growth prospects," said Sadiq Ahmed, vice-chairman of the Policy Research Institute.

For this to happen, the strategy involves raising tax revenues through effective reforms, increasing the profitability of state enterprises through corporate governance, reducing unnecessary subsidies, and increasing spending on education, health and social protection, according to Ahmed.

Bangladesh's tax-to-GDP ratio is a long-standing fiscal weakness. At 7.3 percent of GDP, this ratio is one of the lowest in the world. Revenues continue to be underwhelming due to tax exemptions, weak administration and challenges in implementing tax reforms.

The budget day is a cacophony of big numbers that drowns out the need to cushion the poor against price shocks. The finance minister is expected to do more than just keep the poor in his thoughts. Urban poverty is deepening. In Bangladesh, more than 18 percent of the population lives under the poverty line and another 20 percent, as research organisation SANEM suggests, are very vulnerable and run the risk of falling into poverty due to any shock.

"The budget should look at the pressure heaped upon the marginalised groups, the fixed-income groups, and the low-income people, and how they can be helped through budgetary allocations, fiscal policies, and fiscal incentives," said Mustafizur Rahman, a distinguished fellow at the Centre for Policy Dialogue, a think-tank.

One easy way to free up funds for social protection is by cutting subsidies as the International Monetary Fund suggests. By loosening the exchange rate further, Bangladesh, for example, can eliminate subsidies on exports and inward remittances. However, some agriculture input subsidies on fertiliser, seeds and irrigation are necessary. Overall, it is possible to reduce subsidy spending from a high of 1.9 percent of GDP in FY2023 to 0.8 percent of GDP in FY2025, according to an estimate by Sadiq Ahmed of PRI. These savings can be redeployed to healthcare, education and social protection.

In the new fiscal year, the government will bear a heavier burden of interest payments. So, the allocation for interest payments of domestic and foreign loans will likely jump more than 20 percent to an all-time high. The government has already intensified local borrowing to plug the fiscal deficit, pushing the yield on treasury bonds and bills to a peak. While it opened an avenue for investors to park money in government securities, it has some consequences. Public debt accumulated through treasuries is largely a way to transfer funds from taxpayers to wealthy bondholders, as famed French economist Thomas Piketty argues.

In the run-up to the budget, there were some refreshing changes, albeit pushed by the IMF. In early May, Bangladesh made three major decisions to cushion the economy against critical risks such as stubborn inflation and forex erosion. In a rare move, the central bank let the local currency slide by the most in a day against the mighty dollar. Bangladesh Bank also raised the key policy rate for the second time this year and made lending rates market-based, abandoning a treasury bill-linked formula for banks.

These steps testify to the authorities' belated realisation. Realisation, nonetheless.

This year's budget is coming at a very distinctive time in the history of Bangladesh's economic development. While the budget is simply an estimate of government revenues and expenditures for a fiscal year, it's also an occasion for soul-searching -- a day of reckoning.

It's time to gaze inward.

Izaz was shot around 6:00pm when the procession reached the College Para Hostel area.

As Izaz fell to the ground, some participants of the procession rescued him and whisked him to Brahmanbaria Sadar Hospital. Doctors at the hospital referred him to Dhaka for better treatment but he died around 7:00pm on the way to the capital.

This newspaper has seen a video showing Joy hiding his gun and fleeing the scene after the shooting.

Hearing about the shooting, a large number of Chhatra League leaders and activists gathered in front of the Brahmanbaria Sadar Hospital. They took out a protest procession.

Mohammad Shakhawat Hossain, superintendent of Brahmanbaria police, said that there was a dispute between two factions of district Chhatra League.

The OC said Izaz's relatives took the body to Dhaka Medical College for an autopsy.

Zunaid Ahmed Palak, state minister for telecom, said changes would be made to the draft in light of the concerns.

As a one-stop service provider, the BTRC needs independence, he said.

"If the law puts pressure on them, they cannot act autonomously," he said, adding that the BTRC and the ministry should work together.

As per the draft, social media sites like Facebook or X will need licences to operate in Bangladesh.

The current law's Tk 300 crore fine for unlicensed telecommunication activities will stay in the new one.

Shahed Alam, chief corporate and regulatory officer of Robi, said, "We believe excessive regulation through licensing will hinder growth in the sector."

China accuses US of interfering after Tiananmen comments

AFP, Beijing

China yesterday lashed out at the United States after Washington's top diplomat Antony Blinken vowed never to forget the crackdown in Tiananmen Square 35 years ago.

"The move of the US seriously interferes with China's internal affairs," foreign ministry spokeswoman Mao Ning said.

"China is strongly dissatisfied and firmly opposes it," she added.

She called on the United States to "stop provoking ideological confrontation, and stop interfering in China's internal affairs under the pretext of human rights."

Chinese troops and tanks forcibly dispersed peaceful protests in Beijing's Tiananmen Square on June 4, 1989, quelling huge, weeks-long demonstrations demanding greater political freedoms.

The exact toll is unknown but hundreds died, with some estimates putting the figure at more than 1,000 people. China's leaders have since sought to erase any public mention of the crackdown.

was made possible due to your strong leadership for the third consecutive term," the PM's deputy press secretary quoted the premier as saying.

Hasina hoped India and its people will move forward through this victory.

Modi prepares for a record third term as Indian prime minister as nations congratulated him on the election victory.

Hasina also mentioned the very cordial and friendly relationship between Bangladesh and India.

Meanwhile, Modi has thanked Hasina for her warm wishes following his election victory.

"India and Bangladesh share historic relations, which have seen unprecedented growth in the last decade," Modi said in a message shared through X, formerly known as Twitter.

Modi said he looks forward to working together to further strengthen the people-centric partnership between Bangladesh and India.

Hasina was among the first foreign leaders to congratulate him, reflecting the warmth and personal rapport between the two leaders, the message said.

Govt to rely more on local banks

How much money Bangladesh would have to pay will ultimately depend on the exchange rate at the time of payment.

In the proposed budget to be placed today, the debt servicing cost is likely to be $5.18 billion or Tk 57,000 crore, a 35 percent increase compared to the revised budget.

The debt servicing cost is increasing, and foreign funds are not being utilised fully. As a result, the net foreign financing has reduced.

The government had set aside $13.17 billion as foreign financing in the budget for this year, but it was later revised to $9.65 billion. Of the amount, $2.92 billion was earmarked as budgetary support in the original budget, and it was revised to $1.35 billion.

The new budget is likely to allocate $12.86 billion as foreign financing and $3 billion of it could be kept as budget support.

A top finance ministry official said the government had, in most years, failed to utilise the allocated foreign funds. The low use is another reason behind the decreasing foreign financing, according to the officials.

As of April, at least $46 billion in unused foreign financing was in the pipeline.

During the National Economic Council meeting last month, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina asked all ministries and divisions to quickly finish foreign-funded projects.

While foreign fund utilisation is decreasing, the amount of bank borrowing is increasing significantly.

The highest borrowing will be from banks, Tk 1,37,500 crore. In the revised budget, the bank borrowing increased by 17.78 percent to Tk 1,55,935 crore.

Zahid Hussain, a former lead economist at the World Bank's Dhaka office, said if the government increases bank borrowing, it leaves fewer chances for the private sector to get loans.

"This affects inflation and puts pressure on foreign currency reserves."

Nitish Kumar and Telugu Desam Party (TDP) President N Chandrababu Naidu, whose support is crucial to the government and its stability, attended the NDA meeting. Top leaders of the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) and its other allies were also present.

Both Kumar and Naidu handed over formal letters to Modi, declaring their support for him as PM.

Kumar's party won 12 seats and the Naidu-led TDP, the second largest party in the NDA, bagged 16. The support of both the parties is vital to prop up the Modi dispensation.

Earlier yesterday, NDA leaders met at Modi's residence to review the election result and discuss the government formation, after which a delegation of senior figures from the BJP and its NDA partners was supposed to meet President Droupadi Murmu at Rashtrapati Bhavan to stake claim to power.

With Modi's BJP failing to secure a majority on its own in the parliamentary election and looking up to NDA allies for support, the shape of national politics and governance at the Centre will be impacted. The electoral verdict has taken India back to the tricky terrains of coalition politics after a decade.

Ever since he became the prime minister for the first time in 2014, Modi has enjoyed the cushion of a comfortable BJP majority in the Lok Sabha and a much-weakened opposition.

With that cushion now gone, he will need considerable support from its allies like TDP, Janata Dal, and Eknath Shinde's faction of Shiv Sena.

However, the first challenge for BJP now would be to keep the NDA intact with a numerically resurgent opposition INDIA bloc snapping at its heels and not giving up the idea of cobbling together a majority in the Lok Sabha.

Both Naidu and Kumar are old hands in playing coalition politics and have switched sides a number of times. The allies will look to drive hard bargains and extract their pounds of flesh as the government formation exercise is set into motion. This raises questions about their reliability.

The allies are expected to push BJP for a common minimum programme in the coming days. It is quite possible that BJP is forced to put its ideological core issues, like a nationwide uniform civil code, on the back-burner.

Sources said a variety of "demands", including special status for their states and a pick of ministerial berths, are on the table in talks between Modi, Kumar and Naidu. There are chances Modi will feel the often-conflicting pulls of coalition politics.

On the other hand, Nitish Kumar is likely to insist on conducting a countrywide caste census, an issue Congress and INDIA parties have also been flagging to give reservation on the basis of numerical strength of the backward populace. This is particularly important for Kumar, who faces a fresh assembly election in his home state.

Meanwhile, passing laws in parliament will require Modi to go for a consensual approach across the political spectrum -- something he is not used to.

Naidu, who contested the Lok Sabha polls and the assembly polls in Andhra Pradesh in alliance with BJP, and actor-turned-politician Pawan Kalyan of JanaSena party, had been kingmakers on many occasions in the past.

In 1996, when the Lok Sabha election produced a hung parliament, it was Naidu, as the convenor of the United Front (a coalition of parties not aligned with either Congress or BJP), who propped up the HD Deve Gowda government with outside support from Congress. A few months later, he also played a key role in forming the government at the Centre with Inder Kumar Gujral at the helm.

In 1999, Naidu contested the Lok Sabha polls in alliance with BJP and secured 29 seats. He backed the then Atal Bihari Vajpayee government, which was short of the majority mark. However, TDP did not join the government.

On the other hand, Nitish Kumar was, for a short period, the railways minister, surface transport minister and agriculture minister in the Vajpayee government from 1998 to 1999. He got the portfolio again in the Vajpayee government of 2000-2004.

Critics have accused Modi of having authoritarian streaks in the past. But when he assumes office in the coming days as head of the NDA coalition, can he live down that image and reinvent himself as a consensual leader who takes onboard his allies?

Ukraine downs 22 of Russia's 27 drones launched overnight

REUTERS, Kyiv

The Ukrainian air force said it shot down 22 of the 27 Shahed-type drones launched over five Ukrainian regions in Russia's overnight attack yesterday.

The attack damaged an industrial facility and injured one person in the region of Poltava, its governor, Filip Pronin, said on the Telegram messaging app.

The Ukrainian military destroyed six drones over the southern region of Mykolaiv, its governor said. Debris from one of them destroyed a private home, and damaged about 10 more, but no casualties were reported, he added.

Four drones were shot down over the southern region of Kherson and four more over the central Dnipropetrovsk region, the regions' governors said.

The attack also targeted the northern region of Sumy, with no details of damage reported by regional authorities.

30pc quota for children of freedom fighters restored

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday declared illegal the government decision that in 2018 cancelled the 30 percent quota for the freedom fighters' children in the civil service of ninth to 13th grades (first and second classes of government jobs).

The 30 percent quota for the freedom fighters' children has been restored following the HC verdict, Deputy Attorney General Sk Shaifuzzaman told The Daily Star.

He said the government may move an appeal before the Supreme Court challenging the HC verdict.

The bench of Justice KM Kamrul Kader and Justice Khizir Hayat Lizu delivered the judgement following a petition filed by Ohidul Islam Tushar and six others, who are children of freedom fighters, challenging a circular issued by the Ministry of Public Administration on October 4, 2018 that cancelled the quota system.

Details of the HC verdict will be known when its full text is released.

Two held for killing child after rape

OUR CORRESPONDENT,
Gazipur

Police yesterday arrested two teenagers for raping and killing a three-year-old in Gazipur's Konabari upazila.

The arrestees, aged 16 and 14, are from Kurigram's Rajarhat upazila, said KM Ashraf Uddin, officer-in-charge of Konabari Police Station.

According to the victim's family, the child went missing on Tuesday.

Her body was found in a sack near a house in the upazila's Madhyapara area around 11:00am yesterday, the OC said.

The family filed a case with the police station.

The arrestees confessed to the crime during primary interrogation, the OC said.

Govt alone felled over 7 lakh trees last year

MD ABBAS

At a time when heatwaves and rise in temperatures have become a headache for the country, different government agencies felled over seven lakh trees across the country last year in the name of development work, according to a new study.

The study, titled "Logging off Plants in Bangladesh," presented statistics on tree felling from March 2023 to March 2024, conducted by the River and Delta Research Centre (RDRC), a research organisation.

The study report, unveiled yesterday, said a total of 7,46,465 trees were chopped down during this period.

In the report, the Forest Department was identified as the government agency that was behind the felling of most trees.

Additionally, 24 other government organisations were also named in the report for felling trees.

Apart from that, private organisations and influential people have also cut trees during this period.

According to the study report, the Chattogram district experienced the highest tree cutting, with 506,222 trees being felled, while the Rangpur district saw the least amount of tree felling.

A total of 1,081 trees were logged last year in Dhaka, meaning 83 trees per month and about 3 trees per day, said the report.

On average, approximately 88,190 trees were logged per month, amounting to around 2,902 trees per day over the last year, it added.

Meanwhile, the felling of 400,152 more trees is ongoing under different projects. The Teesta Irrigation Project in Nilphamari alone is the single largest contributor to tree felling, with 400,000 trees being cut down for its implementation, the report also said.

RDRC Chairman Mohammad Azaz, who led the research, said, "Though some projects are ongoing, this report took into account the newly reported tree-cutting figures."

However, experts said the actual number of felled trees would be three times the reported figures.

They added that there is no estimation of how many shrubs, small trees, and biodiversity have been lost with these trees.

Syeda Rizwana Hasan, executive director of Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association (Bela), said these figures show the government's insensitivity towards protecting the environment and its slogan-based, so-called environmental protection initiatives.

"The government has purposefully prioritised development over the environment, which is completely unacceptable. The government does not make laws to prevent the felling of trees because many government projects involve extensive cutting down of trees," she said.

The government does not have the licence to cut trees in the name of development, she added.

"We must carry out development work while preserving trees and planting more to combat the effects of climate change," she said, advocating for strong laws to prevent the felling of trees.

She opined that it should be made compulsory to save trees while implementing development projects.

Amir Hosain Chowdhury, chief conservator of forests at Forest Department, said the department has marked 116,000 trees for cutting so far and has felled 86,000 trees under the social forest scheme.

"If we cut any trees, we plant more trees in their place. We have already signed a MoU with the Water Development Board to plant 71,000 trees once they allocate the land," he added.

STUDY AT A GLANCE

Chattogram district experienced the highest tree cutting, with 506,222 trees being felled, while Rangpur district saw the least amount of tree felling.

A total of 1,081 trees were logged last year in Dhaka, meaning 83 trees per month and about 3 trees per day.

On average, approximately 88,190 trees were logged per month, amounting to around 2,902 trees per day over the last year.

'It might take country 215yrs to end child marriage'

Speakers stress education, awareness

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Marrying off children at an early age is a waste of the country's most valuable asset, said Simeen Hussain, state minister for Women and Children Affairs, at a programme yesterday.

"If we invest in children, particularly girls, the returns will benefit the family, society, and the country," she said while inaugurating a joint Global Programme to End Child Marriage at a Dhaka hotel.

The Ministry of Women and Children Affairs in Bangladesh, in collaboration with UNFPA and Unicef, launched the third phase of the programme.

"Eradicating child marriage is a keystone of our commitment to safeguarding the rights of children in Bangladesh," said the state minister.

"We commend the collaborative efforts of UNFPA and Unicef and affirm our commitment to working closely and effectively to implement the National Plan of Action to End Child Marriage and roll out the Child Marriage Restraint Act."

Keya Khan, director general of the Department of Women Affairs, said the early marriage rate rose to a new level during the Covid-19 period; however, the government is not sitting idle.

"We have been working on identifying the reasons behind it and working on impactful solutions to reduce the rate," she added.

Include women's unpaid care work in GDP calculation

Speakers tell MJF seminar

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

It is high time to give economic recognition to women's unpaid care and domestic work, said speakers at an event yesterday.

Along with policymakers, women themselves must come forward to implement this, they said.

They made the remarks at the national women's conference titled "Role of Women's Rights-Based Organisations in Bringing Gender Equality," organised by Manusher Jonno Foundation at the capital's Gulshan.

Speaking as chief guest, Sagufta Yasmin, lawmaker and chairperson of parliamentary standing committee on Ministry of Women and Child Affairs, emphasised the need to include unpaid care work in GDP calculation.

"The path of women's progress may never be easy; women themselves have to make their own safe roads," she said.

MJF Executive Director Shaheen Anam chaired the conference. She highlighted the collective responsibility to protect women's rights.

"Underprivileged women, local organisations, government, and citizens must come forward to protect women's rights," she said in her welcome speech.

Govt must take action against Benazir

Chunnu tells parliament, Tarana demands names of money launderers to be published

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Opposition Chief Whip Mujibul Haque Chunnu yesterday in parliament demanded that the government take serious action against former IGP Benazir Ahmed.

Taking part in an unscheduled discussion, Chunnu, a Jatiyo Party lawmaker, said many like Benazir will get "inspired" if the government does not take action against him.

Chunnu said when leaders of the opposition went abroad for treatment, they were detained for hours at the airport.

"So, it's not possible that someone like Benazir will go abroad without the knowledge of the government. There are so many forces and so many agencies; what information do they gather?" questioned Chunnu.

"The home minister said he did not know whether Benazir had gone abroad or not. Why would he not know? Benazir went through immigration. If the government is not informed by the immigration authorities that Benazir has crossed the immigration, then all the immigration officials should be fired," he also said.

Pointing to Prothom Alo's editorial published yesterday on Benazir's widespread corruption and irregularities, he said committing such levels of corruption is only possible in Bangladesh.

Chunnu said Benazir has been promoted during the tenure of this government. "During the tenure of this government, he amassed so much through corruption," he added.

TARANA DEMANDS LIST OF MONEY LAUNDERERS

Awami League MP Tarana Halim, speaking on a point of order, said there are syndicates everywhere -- for vehicles, roads, rice depots, and cloth distribution. Who are these syndicates? We want to know and their names should be published.

"We want to know whose name is in the Panama Papers, the Paradise Papers... We want to know."

She also said names of those who have homes in Canada's Begum Para and have smuggled money should be disclosed in parliament.

She also said the parliamentarians, who are allegedly involved in such a syndicate, should adhere to self-criticism.

Include women's unpaid care

MJF has been implementing the "Women's Voice and Leadership-Bangladesh" project to enhance the capacity and activities of local and regional women's rights organisations, support the empowerment of women and girls, protect their rights, and achieve gender equality.

Rita Houkayem, second secretary of development (gender equality) at High Commission of Canada to Bangladesh, said Bangladeshi women are born with the indomitable ability to win all kinds of wars.

"However, social discrimination and negative perceptions of women make their way difficult. Women must take the rights movement as a lifelong commitment," she added.

Mahila Parishad President Dr Fawzia Moslem said, "There has been a change in the areas of women's needs. Targets should be set according to that."

A day-long plenary session was conducted by activist Jashodhara Dasgupta. MJF senior coordinator Mohuya Leya Falia presented the project activities at the conference.

Malaysia for failing to obtain air tickets despite possessing all valid documentation, expressed their helplessness by saying they had mortgaged land, sold livestock, and borrowed money from banks and relatives to pay the recruiting agencies.

"I had aspirations of securing a decent job in Malaysia to guarantee my family's financial security," said Anisul Islam of Manikganj.

"I paid Tk 5.30 lakh to the recruiting agencies and brokers, and now if the government provides only Tk 79,900 as the government fee, I will be destroyed," he said.

Shariful Hasan, associate director of BRAC's Migration and Youth Initiatives Programme, said if the ongoing discussion about sending them to Malaysia is successful, there will be a positive outcome.

"If it is not done and they are given only the government fee, they will surely be penniless due to the pressure of loans and other burdens," he added.

In March, Malaysia announced May 31 as the deadline to bring in foreign workers.

The country resumed hiring Bangladeshi workers in 2022 after a four-year suspension over allegations of irregularities in recruitment process.

Between August 2022 and April 2024, nearly 4.50 lakh Bangladeshis migrated to Malaysia.

Last year, Malaysia was Bangladesh's second-largest overseas job market after Saudi Arabia.

Kristine Blokhus, UNFPA country representative to Bangladesh, said, "Currently, the rate of reduction of child marriage in Bangladesh is only 2.1 percent per year, which means it will take Bangladesh over two centuries -- 215 years -- to eliminate child marriage."

"Keeping girls in school is a game changer," she added.

Stanley Gwavuya, OIC representative of Unicef in Bangladesh, and Nazma Mobarek, secretary of the Ministry of Women and Children Affairs, also spoke.

Bhola dam at risk of further damage

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Barishal

The Tajumuddin embankment in Bhola collapsed in some places after sustaining damage during the cyclone Remal.

Even though the contractor firm tasked with the renovation began repairing the collapsed parts, visiting the site recently, this correspondent, noticed that the firm has been carrying out repairs on a two-kilometre stretch of the dam using soil from beside it.

Due to that, ditches are being formed. Locals feared the embankment will remain susceptible to further damage as the repair is unlikely to sustain.

Abdur Razzak, the contractor, said, "The repair work is being done on an emergency basis."

Jahirul Islam, deputy assistant engineer of BWDB, said, "This dam is a part of the 34-km under-construction embankment project from Tajumuddin to Mirza Kalu areas. Since a part of it collapsed, the firm is using the soil from beside the embankment to repair the breach on an emergency basis."

"Later, the embankment will be properly renovated and strengthened as per the tender," he added.

Masum Rabbani, the project manager, echoed him.

Before Tarana ended her speech, Chief Whip Noor-e-Alam Chowdhury Liton took the floor and wanted to know what the discussion was about.

Pointing to the Deputy Speaker, Liton said, "If you give someone half an hour on a point of order, then none of the rules and regulations of the parliament are being followed. Many MPs are sitting here; their time is valuable. But you have started a general discussion in name of point of order."

Fate of 17,000 still uncertain

KL determined not to extend deadline despite Dhaka's requests

MD ABBAS

While Bangladesh wants to send the remaining aspirant migrant workers to Malaysia, Kuala Lumpur has said it will not extend the deadline for the entry of foreign workers.

Despite receiving clearance, around 17,000 aspiring migrants who failed to fly to Malaysia within the deadline are uncertain whether they will be able to go there.

"We stand by the deadline because we have 15 source countries, and we want to ensure uniformity in the application of this deadline," said Malaysian High Commissioner to Bangladesh Haznah Md Hashim.

She said this applies to all 15 source countries and is not specific to Bangladesh.

"The state minister requested us to reconsider the deadline, and I will convey the message to Kuala Lumpur," she informed.

Regarding allegations from Bangladesh Association for International Recruiting Agencies (Baira) that the Malaysian government issued e-visas on June 2 even after the deadline, Hashim said, "We cannot entertain any allegations without proof. So far, the entire Malaysian government, including those who issue visas, has adhered strictly to the deadline."

In response to a question about workers not getting jobs in Malaysia, she said, "This is something our government is looking into. I will not make any comments regarding it."

Shofiqur Rahman Choudhury, state minister for expatriates' welfare and overseas employment, said they requested Malaysia to reconsider the deadline and are actively working on it.

"The investigation committee will determine why the workers could not go to Malaysia. For those who have BMET cards or e-visas, arrangements will be made to ensure they receive compensation," he said.

Three killed in Khulna road accident

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Khulna

Three people were killed in a collision between a motorcycle and an engine-driven rickshaw-van in Paikgachha upazila of Khulna yesterday morning.

One of the deceased was identified as Ismail, 60, the van driver.

The identities of two other deceased who were the motorcycle riders are yet to be known.

Obaidur Rahman, officer-in-charge of Paikgachha Police Station, said the accident happened around 10:00am near a bridge.

Police seized both the vehicles. The bodies were sent to Khulna Medical College Hospital for autopsy.

Drive to clear parking lots after Eid

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka North City Corporation, in collaboration with Rajuk, will conduct a drive against illegal shops occupying parking spaces in buildings after Eid-ul-Azha, said DNCC Mayor Atiqul Islam yesterday.

He made this announcement while inaugurating a tree plantation programme on the Gulshan-Badda Link Road to mark World Environment Day.

"As many buildings have their parking lots occupied by shops, cars are forced to park on the roads. The drive against this will start after Eid," he added.

Illegal sand extraction plagues Bangshi

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Tangail

An influential syndicate has been illegally lifting sand from the Bangshi river in the Rahimpur area of Tangail's Mirzapur upazila using dredgers over the past few weeks.

The indiscriminate sand lifting is turning the river turbulent as monsoon looms, posing a threat to exacerbate its already severe erosion on the riverbanks.

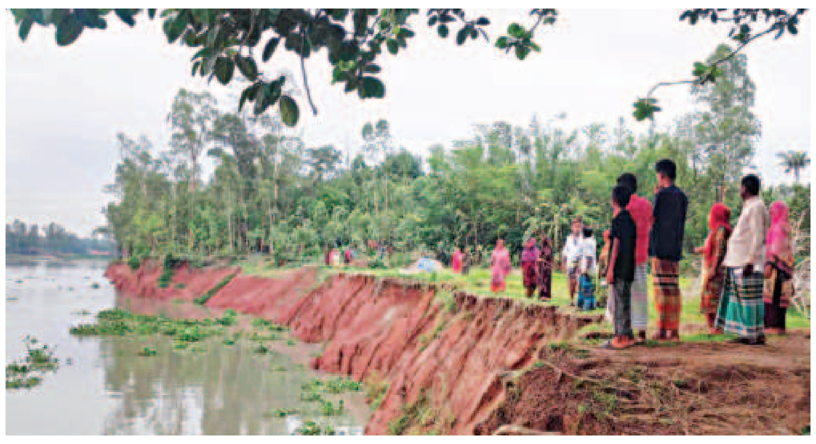
As such, villagers are living in fear of losing their croplands and homesteads, which are only a few kilometres from the dredging site, to the river.

The illegal sand lifting has continued despite protests from the villagers and no action has been taken by the local authorities to stop the menace, they said.

Over the years, the Bangshi has been devouring hundreds of houses, other structures, and vast areas of croplands every year during the monsoon.

Locals alleged that the sand lifting has been continuing over the last one and a half months, day and night, in the Rahimpur area, supervised by one Shafiq from Gorai union.

The extracted sand is then filled in bulkheads and transported to be sold elsewhere, they added.



"Whenever the villagers protested, goons of the sand lifters threatened and assaulted the people. The syndicate also lodged false cases against many villagers. So, the residents are now afraid while the local authorities are largely silent," said Ramjan Ali of Rahimpur village.

Mosharaf Hossain, another resident of Rahimpur, alleged that the culprits are a part of a strong political clout, with the support of the local public representatives belonging to the ruling party.

This correspondent tried to contact Shafiq, who supervises the sand lifting activities, but he was neither found in the area nor he could be reached over the phone.

Contacted, Masudur Rahman, assistant commissioner (land) in Mirzapur upazila, said they are aware of the matter. "We conducted a couple of drives against illegal sand lifting. Fresh drives will be launched soon," he added.

Sheikh Nurul Alam, upazila nirbahi officer in Mirzapur, said he joined the office recently and will take steps after investigating the matter.

"Stern action will be taken against anyone found involved in illegal sand lifting, no matter how powerful they are," he added.

Death anniv of Mahbubul Alam today

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Today is the 10th death anniversary of Mahbubul Alam, former editor of The Independent.

He died on this day in 2014 at the age of 78.

Mahbubul, also a former caretaker government adviser, started his journalism career in the mid-1950s and was associated with the profession till his death.

He also worked as minister (press) at the Bangladesh mission in Washington DC and London and as Bangladeshi ambassador to Bhutan.

He was also managing director and chief editor of Bangladesh Sangbad Sangstha (BSS).

In 2006, he became an adviser to the caretaker government.

Mahbubul Alam led the Newspaper Owners Association of Bangladesh (Noab) as its president for quite some time.

Excited but nervous as well:

APURBA ON 'GOLAM MAMUN'

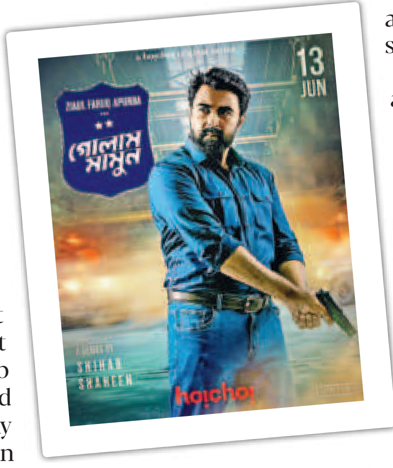
SHAH ALAM SHAZU

Popular actor Ziaul Faruq Apurba is returning to Hoichoi with a significant bang by starring in Shihab Shaheen's directorial Golam Mamun on June 13.

The project, which is the spin-off of the much-acclaimed series Buker Moddhye Agun, directed by Taneem Rahman Angshu, will see the actor playing the titular role.

Earlier in Buker Moddhye Agun, Apurba portrayed the role of a fierce police officer and earned many accolades for his role.

Prior to the upcoming release of the series, Apurba spoke to The Daily Star about his expectations and experience of working in the spin-off.



"Although I am hopeful about the series, I am also undeniably nervous. I feel like the results for my exams are going to be out on June 13, which is the release date of the series," said the actor.

Apurba mentioned that the team had put much effort into this production. "Shihab Shaheen and I collaborated many times, and most of my remarkable projects have been directed by him. He is a great director, and working on this project was a really great experience as well," he shared.

The actor assured that this action thriller would feature a more diverse plot than the typical ones in the genre. "I must thank the director for this. The character Golam Mamun has definitely been a challenging role, for which I had to take a lot of preparation," he added.

In this project, actress Sabila Nur took on the helm of a daring police officer named Rahi, opposite Apurba. The actor appreciated her work, stating, "As a co-actor, Sabila is very comfortable to work with, and she portrayed the role very well."

Apurba mentioned being happy with people appreciating him in Buker Moddhye Agun and he hopes that they will love him in the upcoming season too.

Reportedly, Apurba has recently suffered serious injuries to his hand and back while filming an action scene outdoor for the series. The incident exacerbated his existing back pain and the combination of muscle and back pain rendered him nearly unconscious.

A physiotherapist promptly delivered first aid, and despite the doctor's advice for complete rest, Apurba returned to the set after receiving temporary treatment.

The actor remained reticent about his decision, remarking, "While many people are involved in a production, focusing solely on me isn't feasible. I've been dealing with my back pain for quite some time now, and the injury that day worsened things. However, after taking painkillers, I felt somewhat better."

The Boro Chhele famed actor is increasingly getting recognised as and for the character Golam Mamun and he feels great about people appreciating his recent projects. To his fans, he conveyed, "I want you all to pray for me, and I would like to say to everyone that I am grateful for all your love and support."

Golam Mamun also features an ensemble cast, including Fakhrul Basher Masum, Sharlin Farzana, Sharif Siraj, Syed Nazmus Sakib, Nafiz, Rashed Mamun, Sushoma Sarker, and Deepak Kumar Goswami.

In regard to his silver screen venture, Apurba is poised to make his Tollywood debut with the film Chalchitro, directed by Pratim D Gupta. The thriller film is set to be released soon.

Kangana Ranaut wins in Mandi in Lok Sabha Election 2024

Prominent Bollywood actress Kangana Ranaut's leap into politics has proved to be a remarkable success. The acclaimed Queen actress clinched a Lok Sabha seat from the Mandi constituency in Himachal Pradesh, winning by a substantial margin of 74,755 votes.

This victory saw her defeat Congress candidate Vikramaditya Singh, who had previously contested in two assembly elections but was vying for a parliamentary seat for the first time.

On the professional front, Ranaut is set to star in Emergency, a biopic on former Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, which delves into a pivotal period in Indian history.

'Peaky Blinders' returns as film with Cillian Murphy

Netflix has officially announced a Peaky Blinders film with Oscar winner Cillian Murphy reprising his iconic role as the fearsome gangster, Thomas Shelby.

Directed by Tom Harper, who helmed episodes of the series' first season in 2013, the film promises to be a thrilling continuation of the beloved saga, reported Deadline.

Additionally, Murphy will also serve as a producer on the project.

"It seems like Tommy Shelby wasn't finished with me...It is very gratifying to be re-collaborating with Steven Knight and Tom Harper on the film version of Peaky Blinders. This is one for the fans," shared Murphy.

NEWS

Amanullah

FROM PAGE 12

After the killing at a flat in New Town, Kolkata, Amanullah returned home on May 15, according to sources at the court and the Detective Branch (DB) of Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

After recording his statement, the court sent him to jail.

Amanullah, who goes by the alias Shimul Bhuiyan, was in charge of controlling the activities of Purbo Banglar Communist Party (PBCP) in Khulna, Jhenidah, and Jashore.

Azim was also involved with the PBCP, and as Amanullah and Azim had a dispute over PBCP factions, the former readily agreed to kill the lawmaker.

As per Amanullah's statement, the accused tried to kill Azim on two occasions in January and March this year, but failed.

On April 25, Aktaruzzaman rented the New Town flat where Amanullah and Celesty met the other accused five days later to make a plan. Aktaruzzaman returned to Bangladesh on May 10.

As per the direction of Aktaruzzaman and Amanullah, the other accused took Azim to the flat, saying that they would discuss and settle the business matters.

Amanullah with the help of the other accused then killed the lawmaker there.

The accused dismembered the body and flushed part of it down the toilet. Some remains were put in a trunk which was discarded in the Krisna Mati area of Kolkata.

Accused Faisal, Mustafiz, and Jihad Howlader were directly involved in the killing, Amanullah said in the statement, adding that accused Jihad and Siam, arrested in Nepal, were involved in getting rid of the remains.

Jihad Howlader, who is in custody of West Bengal CID, was placed on a fresh two-day remand after the end of a 12-day one.

Meanwhile, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan yesterday said until the DNA verification was done, law enforcers would not be able to tell for sure that they found Azim's remains.

"We have come to know from the arrestees that he was killed. Investigations and interrogations are underway in the two countries. Both countries will reach a decision," he added.

report submitted to the court, the arrestees admitted their involvement in Ansar Al Islam and the coordinators of Deen Islam Foundation. The outfit remains active on different online platforms, including social media, with the aim to recruit new operatives.

The arrestees said four to five other Ansar Al Islam operatives were also involved in fund raising, reads the report.

Deen Islam Foundation opened its Facebook page on April 19, 2022, and it has already attracted some 9,700 followers. These is a link of its website on the Facebook page, but The Daily Star could not access the website on Tuesday. There are two mobile phone numbers listed on the page, but both of those phones were found switched off.

A high official of the CTTC unit said that the foundation is not a registered platform.

"During interrogation, the arrestees could not provide information about the destination of the money. The statements regarding the transfer of the money were inconsistent," the official told this newspaper requesting anonymity.

In March this year, The SecDev Foundation, a Canadian NGO, in its monthly digital harms report said that AQIS in a digital booklet called upon the Bangladeshi Muslims to fund "the ongoing Palestine war".

"The booklet provided a detailed calculation of how Hamas had to spend Tk 100 crore to launch 12,000 rockets during October-December. They called it a real shame that the war is being funded and supported by Shite Iran and asked Muslims to send donations to the global jihad frontiers," reads the report.

"The group likely has already increased its fundraising inside the country," the report added.

The SecDev Foundation works globally to help at-risk people and organisations use digital technologies more safely and effectively.

Ahamedul Islam, deputy commissioner of the DMP at the CTTC unit, said there is no evidence indicating that Ansar Al Islam has sent funds for the Palestinian people.

"Collecting funds in the name of Jakat, building mosques, and aid for Qurbani is a common practice of the militant outfit. Some funds also came from abroad," he told The Daily Star.

In September 2022, the CTTC had found that Ansar Al Islam received about Tk 1.5 crore from people in the UK and Australia for carrying out its activities.

Ahamedul said the banned militant outfit is trying to make a comeback, and it has adopted the crowdfunding tactic to dodge the law enforcers.

"We have already stepped up vigilance and taking lawful action," he added.

Not much surprise

Najmul Hossain-led side have had a taste of playing at the Nassau County International Cricket Stadium in New York, where their batting against India in a warm-up match left a lot to be desired.

There is also the advantage for the Tigers, having already seen all of their group stage rivals play in the tournament so far. South Africa defeated Sri Lanka heavily, while Nepal and Netherlands played out a tight contest in Grand Prairie International Stadium in Dallas, the venue for Bangladesh's opening World Cup game against Sri Lanka on June 8.

In terms of conditions, there will be little surprise for Bangladesh heading into their upcoming matches in the USA. Sri Lanka have shown chinks in their armour, especially with the bat against the Proteas. But in trying to chase down a small total, South Africa batters did not look comfortable either. If the wickets do turn out to be on the slower side in New York, it might aid Bangladesh bowlers even though the batting unit has looked awkward on all surfaces so far.

Moreover, the game between Netherlands and Nepal showed that they will not be easy fixtures for the Tigers, but those matches will be in the West Indies. Bangladesh vice-captain Taskin Ahmed was expecting Dallas wickets to be a little different.

"The wicket of New York was a little low-scoring. I think the wicket in Dallas will be different. We need to play according to the conditions and situation. Whether it's a low-scoring or high-scoring match, if we can play according to our style, I think we can do well on that day," Taskin told reporters at the Mustang Cricket Academy on Tuesday.

With not much time left to prepare, Bangladesh will now be hoping to be in the right frame of mind as they gear up for their World Cup opener, which could potentially make or break their campaign.

go abroad with the help of brokers get into trouble.

Despite getting clearance from the Bureau of Manpower, Employment and Training (BMET), a total of 16,970 migrant workers could not reach Malaysia before May 31, when the deadline for workers to enter the Southeast Asian country ended.

Responding to another query from ruling Awami League MP Alauddin Ahmed Chowdhury, the premier yesterday said if a project is not completed on time, the project cost increases, which ultimately puts an adverse impact on the socio-economic development of the country.

"As a result, almost all projects are modified once or more after approval without increasing the duration or cost. This hinders the implementation of the Annual Development Plan," she said.

Hasina said many projects are not completed on schedule due to various errors and deviations, she said.

"As a result, the progress of the project is hamperedand the beneficiaries are deprived of receiving the benefits on time."

Replying to a query from AL MP Mahfizur Rahman, Hasina said experts have stated that traffic snarl-ups in Dhaka city and their resulting impactsare leading to annual financial losses of about $3.8 billion.

"This money will be saved if the metro rail lines are opened under the Time-bound Action Plan 2030, and an opportunity will arise to invest the full amount in the economy," she added.

The premier said a study has found that once the entire section of MRT Line-6 (Uttara to Kamalapur) of Dhaka metro rail is made operational, about Tk 8.38 crore will be saved in terms of daily travel time cost and around Tk 1.18 crore in terms of vehicle operations cost.

Responding to another question from AL MP Faridun Nahar Laily, the leader of the House said it is unfortunate that a clique of communal forces and war criminals and the BNP-Jamaat were continuously spreading rumours through social media.

"Many of them are staying in different developed countries. They are mainly spreading false and distorted news against Bangladesh and its government through social media outlets like Facebook, X [formerly Twitter], and YouTube."

She said legal, technical, and diplomatic steps have been taken at home and abroad to stop the spread of misinformation and rumours.

in upazila polls since 2009, said EC sources.

The turnout was 36 percent in the first phase of upazila elections held on May 8, 38 percent in the second phase on May 21, and 36 percent in the third phase held on May 29.

The figure was 70.57 percent in the 2009 upazila polls, which dropped to 61.23 percent in 2014. On average, it stood around 40 percent in the 2019 upazila polls conducted in five phases.

In the January 7 national election, the turnout was 42 percent.

The BNP and many other political parties have stayed off the upazila polls, like they did in the January 7 national election saying that the EC is "not capable of holding the elections in a free and fair manner".

The battle of ballots took place among independents, mostly from the ruling Awami League, as other political parties did not field any candidates.

In Chattogram, a voter was injured when activists of two vice-chairman candidates clashed at East Pingala Government Primary School polling centre in Patiya upazila.

A mobile court fined four people Tk one lakh over attempting to influence voters at Baharchhara Ratnapur High School Polling Centre in Banshkhali upazila.

In Patuakhali, a mobile court sentenced a man to six months' imprisonment for trying to cast fake votes at Gangipara Government Primary School polling centre in Rangabali upazila.

A chairman candidate sought a re-election to Brahmanbaria Sadar upazila, alleging "massive irregularities" committed by supporters of his rival.

In Dinajpur's Phulbari upazila, a thin presence of voters was seen at different polling stations throughout the day.

In flood-hit Zakiganj and Kanaighat upazilas of Sylhet, many voters came to polling stations on boats.

"The road to the polling station has been submerged. So, I have come to cast my vote on a boat," said Saju Uddin, a voter of Konagram Government Primary School polling centre in Kanaighat upazila.

Elections to 22 upazilas, which were suspended due to Cyclone Remal, will be held on June 9.

was tortured by police before her death.

It is a gross violation of human rights, and the activities of Bangladesh police is being questioned at home and abroad because of the irresponsible action of a few.

Those who are involved should face legal action, it added.

Afroza Begum, 40, died on Sunday morning hours after she was picked up by Abhaynagar police from her home in the Nawapara area, according to her children.

Her son Sabbir Mollah, a 9th grader, told reporters that police threatened to frame his mother in a narcotics case unless she paid them Tk 2 lakh.

A team of police led by Assistant Sub-Inspector Silon Ali went to their home near midnight on Saturday and a woman constable frisked his mother.

"Then the ASI started hitting her. At one stage, she fell to the ground. He then tied my mother's hair to a ceiling fan and tortured her," Sabbir said.

As Afroza's condition deteriorated, she was taken to Jashore General Hospital where doctors declared her dead around 11:30am on Sunday.

ASI Silon earlier told The Daily Star that the allegations of torture were baseless.

Akikul Islam, officer-in-charge of Abhaynagar Police Station, said police detained Afroza with 30 yaba pills. She later fell ill and died on the way to a hospital.

On Monday, police formed a three-member committee, led by an additional superintendent of police in Jashore to investigate the matter.

How Modi's party lost its majority

AFP, New Delhi

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi will remain in office but with a substantially reduced mandate, confounding expectations of a resounding victory forecast by analysts and exit polls. AFP takes a look at the reasons why Modi and his party failed to achieve a third successive landslide win:

DIVISIVE CAMPAIGN

Critics and rights groups accused Modi of ramping up rhetoric against Muslims to unprecedented levels during his campaign in a bid to mobilise the Hindu majority.

At his rallies, he referred to Muslims as "infiltrators", and claimed the main opposition Congress party would redistribute the nation's wealth to Muslims if it won.

But the strategy failed to galvanise Hindu voters behind the BJP, while also solidifying minority communities' support for the opposition.

BIGGEST STATE FLIPS

For the first time in 15 years, Modi's party failed to win the most seats in Uttar Pradesh, India's most populous state and a bellwether for national elections.

Uttar Pradesh is the heartland of India's majority faith, with widespread support for Modi's Hindu-nationalist agenda.

But an alliance of opposition parties who had competed against each other in past polls saw BJP candidates face stronger rivals, who ultimately won more than half of the state's seats.

INDIA ELECTION 2024

Ridiculed for half a decade, Rahul slows Modi juggernaut

OUR CORRESPONDENT, New Delhi

As the Indian parliamentary election results neared completion on Tuesday, supporters at the Congress party's national headquarters at 24 Akbar Road in the heart of Delhi broke into celebrations.

The happiest man was Rahul Gandhi as Congress, powered by his campaign, won 99 seats on its own recording its best performance in national elections since 2004.

Often derided as "pappu" and dismissed as a serial 're-inventor' constantly looking for an identity, Rahul perhaps thought he had had the last laugh in this Lok Sabha election. Congress' tally of seats is not only a quantum jump from the worst show of 52 seats five years ago but more importantly prevented BJP from getting a majority on its own. This is the first time that BJP under Modi failed to get to the magic figure of 272 in the 543-Lok Sabha.

Rahul carried out a 'padyatra' from Kanyakumari to Kashmir in 2022-23 and a "Nyay Yatra' this year from Manipur to Mumbai in the run up to the parliamentary elections setting the narrative for Congress and staying the course and refusing to be distracted by setbacks.

Riding a tempo with migrant workers, tractor in the company of farmers, hugging a child, bowing to comfort a woman who lost her husband or attacking BJP, particularly Prime Minister Narendra Modi, in press conferences, short videos and social media platforms--Rahul was the centre-piece almost all over.

The 53-year-old scion of the Gandhi family describes himself as the best chess player among Indian politicians. His latest gambit of making social justice as the central theme of his party's campaign seems to have paid off in the political chess with his party making a surprising comeback in the Hindi belt, making significant gains in Rajasthan, Haryana and Uttar Pradesh.

Even the harshest of detractors of Rahul would concede that his 2024 campaign was by far his best as he focused on bread and butter issues and the party's welfare guarantees which struck a chord with a section of the voters.

A key feature of Rahul's election campaign was that he depended heavily on social media as opposed to conventional interactions and interviews with the mainstream media. His repeated claim at rallies that BJP would change the Constitution if it is voted back to power as he carried a copy of the Constitution succeeded in whipping up a fear perception.

He contested from Kerala's Wayanad and Uttar Pradesh's Rae Bareli constituency his mother Sonia Gandhi gave up. In Rae Bareli, he bettered Sonia's margin of victory in 2019.

The half a decade has been challenging for Rahul's political career. He lost the Lok Sabha poll in Amethi to BJP's Smriti Irani by over 55,000 votes in 2019. His strategy of pitching the 2019 polls campaign of Congress on the alleged scam in Rafale fighter jets purchase issue and bringing Modi in the line of fire boomeranged badly. But he did not budge and continued to attack the Prime Minister—this time on the Adani issue.

'Free me from govt'

Says Fadnavis after BJP's poor show in Maharashtra

TNN, New Delhi

Senior BJP leader Devendra Fadnavis yesterday offered to step down as Maharashtra deputy chief minister taking moral responsibility for the party's poor showing in Lok Sabha elections in the state.

The BJP, which had 23 members in the last Lok Sabha, could manage to in only 9 this time around.

Fadnavis urged the party's top leadership to free him from the state government so that he could work for the party.

"I am requesting the BJP high command to relieve me from the responsibility of the government," Fadnavis said. The Maharashtra deputy chief minister claimed that the BJP-led NDA got more votes in Mumbai but there was consolidation of votes against the party which resulted in loss of seats.

Manipur rejects BJP after year-long ethnic clashes

REUTERS, Guwahati

India's main opposition Congress party bagged both parliamentary seats in strife-torn Manipur in the general election as the north-eastern state voted out Prime Minister Narendra Modi's ruling party and its ally after year-long ethnic clashes.

Since May last year the remote state bordering Myanmar has been roiled by fighting between the majority Meitei and tribal Kuki-Zo people that killed at least 220 people and displaced 60,000 to relief camps.

The state of 3.2 million people continues to be divided into two enclaves - a valley controlled by Meiteis and Kuki-dominated hills.

In the lead-up to the election, victims on both sides of the sectarian divide expressed their displeasure with Modi and his Bharatiya Janata Party for not being able to bring peace to the state.

"This is the voice of those people...," said Congress's A Bimol Akoijam, who beat his BJP rival in the Meiteis-dominated inner Manipur seat by close to 110,000 votes.

Questions may arise over rule comment on Sunday that he was at the worst point of his cursed life.

The journalist asked if the US would consider more actions to show solidarity with the democracy-loving people of Bangladesh or the sanctions already imposed against former army chief Aziz Ahmed and police chief Benazir Ahmed were enough to hold the Bangladesh government accountable.

Miller in response said he does not have any actions to preview.

The journalist also sought Miller's comments on Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's recent statement that a white man offered her that she can stay in power without any pressure if she allows a foreign country to establish an airbase (in the Bay of Bengal).

On May 23, Hasina also mentioned that a conspiracy was afoot to carve out a Christian country taking parts of Chattogram of Bangladesh and Myanmar.

Miller responded, "So I'm not exactly sure who those comments refer to, but if it is in fact the United States, I'll just say that they're not accurate."

Israel launches new incursion move with majority vote on Tuesday evening, dismissing a call for a referendum on the issue by the largest opposition party.

White House national security adviser Jake Sullivan told reporters on Tuesday, "We are waiting for a response from Hamas" through the Qatari mediators, referring to a ceasefire proposal that US President Joe Biden revealed on Friday.

Qatar said on Tuesday that the proposal was now much closer to the positions of both sides.

Hamas has said it views the contents of the plan positively and has criticised Washington for what it described as attempts to blame the Palestinian group for hampering it.

But a spokesman for Hamas, which has ruled Gaza since 2007, reiterated on Tuesday it could not agree to any deal unless Israel makes a "clear" commitment to a permanent truce and complete withdrawal from Gaza. Israel says it cannot do that until Hamas is wiped out.

The United Nations Palestinian refugee agency (UNRWA) issued a new plea for a ceasefire yesterday on X.

"The war in #Gaza has upended millions of Palestinian lives & caused catastrophic damage to the natural environment that they depend upon for water, clean air, food & livelihoods. Restoring environmental services will take decades - & cannot even start until a #ceasefire," it said.

নিয়োগের শর্তাবলিঃ

১. আবেদনকারীর নাম, পিতার নাম, মাতার নাম ও জন্ম তারিখ (এসএসসি সনদ, বা এনআইডি অনুযায়ী) অনলাইন আবেদন ফরমে এবং পরবর্তীতে হুবহু সেভাবে লিখতে হবে।
২. সরকারি/আধা-সরকারি/স্বায়ত্তশাসিত প্রতিষ্ঠানে চাকরিরত প্রার্থীদের যথাযথ কর্তৃপক্ষের অনুমতি গ্রহণপূর্বক নির্দিষ্ট সময়সীমার মধ্যে আবেদন করতে হবে এবং মৌখিক পরীক্ষার সময় অবশ্যই উক্ত অনুমতিপত্র প্রদর্শন করতে হবে।
৩. জেলা কোটাসহ সরকার কর্তৃক প্রচলিত অন্যান্য সকল প্রকার কোটা বিধি অনুযায়ী অনুসরণ করা হবে।
৪. মুদ্রিত/হস্তলিখিত কোন প্রকার আবেদন বা কাগজপত্র ডাকযোগে বা অন্য কোন উপায়ে প্রেরণ করা হলে তা গ্রহণ করা হবে না।
৫. বয়সসীমা (০৮ জুলাই, ২০২৪ তারিখ অনুযায়ী)
ক) আবেদনকারীগণের বয়সসীমা ১৮ থেকে ৩০ বছরের মধ্যে হতে হবে।
খ) মুক্তিযোদ্ধাদের পুত্র-কন্যা/শারীরিক প্রতিবন্ধী আবেদনকারীগণের জন্য বয়সসীমা ১৮ থেকে ৩২ বছর।
গ) বয়স প্রমাণের ক্ষেত্রে এফিডেভিড গ্রহণযোগ্য নয়।
৬. মৌখিক পরীক্ষার সময় সকল সনদপত্রের মূল কপি প্রদর্শন করতে হবে এবং পূরণকৃত Application Form সহ সত্যায়িত একসেট ফটোকপি দাখিল করতে হবে। এছাড়া জেলার স্থায়ী বাসিন্দার প্রমাণক হিসেবে ইউনিয়ন পরিষদ/পৌরসভা/সিটি কর্পোরেশন কর্তৃক প্রদত্ত সনদ, জাতীয় পরিচয়পত্রের ফটোকপি এবং আবেদনকারী মুক্তিযোদ্ধার পুত্র-কন্যা/নাতি-নাতনী হলে তার মুক্তিযোদ্ধা সংক্রান্ত সনদপত্র/গেজেট এবং আবেদনকারী যে মুক্তিযোদ্ধা/ শহীদ মুক্তিযোদ্ধার নাতি-নাতনী এই মর্মে সংশ্লিষ্ট ইউনিয়ন পরিষদের চেয়ারম্যান/সিটি কর্পোরেশন/পৌরসভার মেয়র/প্যানেল মেয়র/ওয়ার্ড কাউন্সিলর কর্তৃক প্রদত্ত সনদের সত্যায়িত ফটোকপি দাখিল করতে হবে। দাখিলকৃত মুক্তিযোদ্ধার সনদের সত্যতা মুক্তিযুদ্ধ বিষয়ক মন্ত্রণালয়ের নির্দেশনা মোতাবেক যাচাই করা হবে।
৭. আবেদনকারীগণের মোবাইল ফোনে Teletalk Bangladesh Limited হতে (শুধুমাত্র যোগ্য প্রার্থীদেরকে) SMS এর মাধ্যমে যথাসময়ে প্রয়োজনীয় নির্দেশনা প্রদান করা হবে।

৮. অনলাইনে আবেদনপত্র পূরণ সংক্রান্ত নিয়মাবলি ও শর্তাবলিঃ
ক) পরীক্ষায় অংশগ্রহণে ইচ্ছুক ব্যক্তি http://bjri.teletalk.com.bd এই ওয়েবসাইটে আবেদনপত্র পূরণ করতে পারবেন। আবেদনের সময়সীমা নিম্নরূপঃ-

- Online-এ আবেদনপত্র পূরণ ও পরীক্ষার ফি জমাদান শুরুর তারিখ ও সময়: ০৯-০৬-২০২৪, সকাল ১০:০০ টা।
- Online-এ আবেদনপত্র জমাদানের শেষ তারিখ ও সময়: ০৮-০৭-২০২৪, বিকাল ০৪:০০ টা।
- উক্ত সময়সীমার মধ্যে User ID প্রাপ্ত প্রার্থীগণ Online-এ আবেদনপত্র Submit-এর সময় থেকে পরবর্তী ৭২ (বাহাত্তর) ঘন্টার মধ্যে SMS এর মাধ্যমে পরীক্ষার ফি জমা দিতে পারবেন।

খ) Online-এ আবেদনপত্রে প্রার্থী তার স্বাক্ষর (দৈর্ঘ্য ৩০০×প্রস্থ ৮০) pixel ও রঙ্গিন ছবি (দৈর্ঘ্য ৩০০×প্রস্থ ৩০০) pixel স্ক্যান করে নির্ধারিত স্থানে Upload করবেন।
গ) Online-এ আবেদনপত্রে পূরণকৃত তথ্যই যেহেতু পরবর্তী সকল কার্যক্রমে ব্যবহৃত হইবে, সেহেতু Online-এ আবেদনপত্র Submit-করার পূর্বেই পূরণকৃত সকল তথ্যের সঠিকতা সম্পর্কে প্রার্থী নিজে শতভাগ নিশ্চিত হবেন।
ঘ) প্রার্থী Online-এ পূরণকৃত আবেদনপত্রের একটি রঙ্গিন প্রিন্টকপি পরীক্ষা সংক্রান্ত যে কোন প্রয়োজনে সহায়ক হিসেবে সংরক্ষণ করবেন।
ঙ) SMS প্রেরণের নিয়মাবলি ও পরীক্ষার ফি প্রদান: Online-এ আবেদনপত্র (Application Form) যথাযথভাবে পূরণ করে নির্দেশনা মত ছবি এবং স্বাক্ষর Upload করে আবেদনপত্র Submit-করা সম্পন্ন হলে কম্পিউটারে ছবিসহ Application Preview দেখা যাবে। নির্ভুলভাবে আবেদনপত্র Submit-করা সম্পন্ন প্রার্থী একটি User ID, ছবি এবং স্বাক্ষরযুক্ত একটি Applicant's Copy পাবেন। উক্ত Applicant's Copy প্রার্থী Download পূর্বক রঙ্গিন প্রিন্ট করে সংরক্ষণ করবেন। Applicant's কপিতে একটি User ID নম্বর দেওয়া থাকবে এবং User ID নম্বর ব্যবহার করে প্রার্থী নিম্নোক্ত পদ্ধতিতে যে কোন Teletalk pre-paid mobile নম্বরের মাধ্যমে ০২ (দুই)টি SMS করে পরীক্ষার ফি বাবদ ১নং ক্রমিকে উল্লিখিত পদের জন্য ৫০০/- (পাঁচশত) টাকা এবং টেলিটকের কমিশন চার্জ বাবদ ৫৮/-(আটান্ন) টাকাসহ অফেরতযোগ্য মোট ৫৫৮/- (পাঁচশত আটান্ন) টাকা, ক্রমিক নং-২-১২ এ উল্লিখিত পদের জন্য ২০০/- (দুইশত) টাকা এবং টেলিটকের কমিশন চার্জ বাবদ ২৩/- (তেইশ) টাকাসহ অফেরতযোগ্য মোট ২২৩/-(দুইশত তেইশ) টাকা এবং ক্রমিক নং-১৩ এ উল্লিখিত পদের জন্য ১০০/- (একশত) টাকা এবং টেলিটকের কমিশন চার্জ বাবদ ১২/- (বারো) টাকাসহ অফেরতযোগ্য মোট ১১২/- (একশত বারো) টাকা অনধিক ৭২ (বাহাত্তর) ঘন্টার মধ্যে জমা দিবেন। এখানে বিশেষভাবে উল্লেখ্য যে, "Online-এ আবেদনপত্রের সকল অংশ পূরণ করে Submit করা হলেও পরীক্ষার ফি জমা না দেওয়া পর্যন্ত Online আবেদনপত্র কোন অবস্থাতেই গৃহীত হবে না"।

প্রথম SMS: BJRI<space>User ID লিখে Send করতে হবে 16222 নম্বরে। Example: BJRI ABCDEF

An election unlike any in recent past

Indian election results have lessons for Bangladesh, too

Over the last decade, few surprises perhaps came as heartwarming to observers of India's democratic journey as the ones from its latest Lok Sabha election. The Indian election authorities rightly deserve kudos for successfully conducting the world's—and history's—largest democratic exercise that, over six weeks, saw 64.2 crore people vote, including a record 31.2 crore women. That in itself is a watershed moment that needs to be celebrated. The staggered election has also thrown up some big surprises, especially the ruling Bharatiya Janata Party's (BJP) failure to secure an outright majority for the first time since sweeping to power in 2014, as well as the rise of a strong parliamentary opposition.

The relative peace and enthusiasm that marked the election serve as a lesson for countries like Bangladesh where violence and poor voter turnout have become synonymous with the electoral exercise. It stands as a testament to people's power, and the fact that a fair election is possible despite sharp ideological divides among the contesting parties. The election results, from that perspective, can be seen as a popular rejection of attempts to sully India's secular legacy. We have seen how the Hindutva and anti-immigrant rhetoric was used, especially by BJP, to rally voters behind its re-election campaign. While PM Modi is set to return to power for a rare third consecutive term, one hopes for the sake of ordinary Indians and the region at large that such divisive rhetoric will come to an end.

Perhaps the biggest surprise of all—one that we can particularly relate to—is the resurgence of the Congress-led opposition alliance, INDIA, which secured 232 seats against BJP-led NDA's 293. It is a defeat that feels more like a victory considering the last decade, as some observers said. We cannot deny the significance of a strong parliamentary opposition in democracy. A strong opposition ensures checks and balances, preventing any single party or leader from holding excessive power. By scrutinising government actions and policies, it holds the government accountable to the public. Without a robust opposition, democracy can become stagnant, unresponsive, and vulnerable to authoritarianism. The Indian experience thus offers a lesson for Bangladesh where the lack of such an opposition has been acutely felt for long. Equally instructive has been the rebalancing of powers among coalition partners—with BJP having to rely on smaller allies—which also provides stability in parliamentary affairs.

The drama over the Indian election may not be over yet, as speculations over the formation of the next coalition government continues. As a neighbour and friend, it is our hope that Indian voters' desire to see a pro-people, pluralistic polity will be honoured regardless of what the next government looks like. We also hope that the two countries can continue on a path of mutual respect and growth in the coming days. As for those involved in Bangladesh's politics and electoral exercise, they can certainly take a leaf or two out of the Indian book.

Another blame game afoot

Authorities must take responsibility for Malaysia migration debacle

Following the debacle that led to 16,970 aspiring migrant workers failing to reach Malaysia before the deadline of May 31 set for migrants' entry, a blame game seems to be afoot. One the one hand, the Bangladesh Association of International Recruiting Agencies (Baira) denied responsibility for the disaster, blaming the Malaysian government and Bangladesh's Ministry of Expatriates' Welfare and Overseas Employment for the mismanagement. On the other hand, the relevant state minister hinted that the Malaysian government was at fault for the issuance of e-visas beyond the deadline, but said it was pointless to blame anyone right now, while denying the existence of any syndicate among recruiting agencies.

We, however, cannot help but disagree. For it is absolutely essential to identify who is at fault for such a catastrophe, and hold them responsible. We have seen such problems arise repeatedly in the past, which suggests that this is not a one-off issue but a systemic one—in which the subject of syndication comes up every time. In fact, the reason given by the Malaysian authorities for repeatedly stopping or restricting access for our migrant workers has been the syndicate problem, along with the mismanagement and corruption that come with it. Even UN experts, in a report, expressed concerns for our migrants and mentioned the hefty sums they have to pay because of criminal networks operating in Malaysia and Bangladesh in which "certain high-level officials" of "both governments are involved." So why is the minister denying their existence?

Baira, meanwhile, refuted the expat ministry's figure and said no more than 5,000-6,000 workers failed to travel abroad. However, data from the Bureau of Manpower Employment and Training (BMET) suggests otherwise. Why is that? Clearly, someone—or perhaps no one in this case—is not doing their job properly. Otherwise, why should there be any confusion at this point about the number of migrants who couldn't go abroad?

It is time for the relevant authorities to be finally held to account. The whole process of how we send migrants abroad, not just in Malaysia but other destination countries as well, needs to be revisited and reformed given how badly it has performed time and again. And most importantly, steps must be taken to reimburse and rehabilitate workers who could not travel abroad, despite paying for it, because of these systemic issues and failures.

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

Normandy invasion begins

Led by US General Dwight D Eisenhower, an Allied armada of ships, planes, and landing craft and some 156,000 troops began the invasion of northern France from England on this day in 1944—the famous D-Day of World War II.

FY2024-25 BUDGET

Whitening black money, raising taxes won't fix our economic ails

A CLOSER LOOK

The possibility that the government may offer financial criminals a special facility to "whiten" their black money with just a flat 15 percent tax and full amnesty has raised concerns not just among the country's economists and civil society but also the common people. And rightfully so, for the honest breadwinners have to pay an income tax at 25 percent at the highest slab. Adding VAT and other indirect taxes that ordinary taxpayers are required to pay, this plan—which, unfortunately, is not a new phenomenon in Bangladesh—is ill-judged and unjust at the very least.

The Income Tax Act, 2023 allows legalising illegally amassed money by paying a mere 25 percent tax and a 10 percent fine on the tax amount. This time around, however, what's raising eyebrows is the nature of the special offer: no questions asked, just a 15 percent tax, and illegally earned money becomes legal.

Some may argue that bringing black money back into circulation would be good for our economy's health. But at what cost? It is a no-brainer that allowing such impunity to black money hoarders will encourage the practice further, and discourage honest taxpayers from paying their taxes compliantly. The maths is simple: it is a 50 percent saving on taxes if one simply turns their legitimately earned income into undisclosed money and then whiten it—no strings attached and no repercussion involved.

It has been suggested that such an unconditional scheme to legalise black money is required, as the last time such a facility was offered in FY2020-21, a record Tk 20,600 crore was legalised—enabling the National Board of Revenue (NBR) to collect Tk 2,064 crore in taxes—by about 12,000 individuals, including government employees, doctors, businesspersons, and bank sponsor directors, among others. But once this scheme was lifted, in the subsequent years, fewer people availed the offered options to legalise illegal money.

Does this mean that the facility anticipated to be offered again would reduce the tax collection pressure on the NBR and inject more money into the economy? Not necessarily. We must remember that due to the travel and communication restrictions during the Covid pandemic, which essentially limited the hundi channels, people had little option but to keep their dirty money home, hence many availed the golden opportunity. The context in 2020-21 was different from that in 2024-25, and expecting to generate the same response from dirty money owners based on a general clemency and a flat tax rate might be a folly.

MONEY WHITENER

VISUAL: SHAIKH SULTANA JAHAN BADHON

Interestingly, in this budget, the government is also planning to raise the highest tax slab back to 30 percent. While some may argue that such an increase is just and the right thing to do, we need to take a closer look at a few data points to understand how this would impact the salaried individuals.

As per the current slab, an individual with an annual income of Tk 3.5-4.5 lakh has to pay income tax at five percent. In the second slab, individuals with an income up to Tk 7.5 lakh need to pay income tax at 10 percent. An annual income up to Tk 11.5 lakh requires payment of 15 percent income tax. Those earning up to Tk 16.5 lakh have to pay 20 percent income tax. Anyone earning more than Tk 16.5 lakh per year has to pay 25 percent of their income as income tax.

At a time when food inflation stands at 10.22 percent (as of April 2024), income growth is falling behind inflation, the taka has depreciated against the US dollar by around 36 percent (since January 2022), utility bills are rising, health spending has surged by over 202 percent, this tax regime is a staggering burden.

Some may argue that in India the tax-free income is up to 300,000 rupees per year, and the highest tax slab is 30 percent for an annual income of 15 lakh rupees and above. If we compare our tax regime with India's, we should also factor in the inflation rates in both countries: in Bangladesh it is 9.74 percent (April 2024), while in India it is 4.83 percent.

While unbridled inflation is feared to have pushed around five lakh people into extreme poverty, the salaried individuals are also bearing its brunt. A recent media report quoted leading economist Dr Ahsan H Mansur as saying that out of every Tk 100 earned by a salaried individual, they can only take about Tk 35 home after considering all tax deductions, including VAT and other advance taxes. Hence, reimposing the 30 percent tax on the population with a minimum income of Tk 16 lakh per year would be a biting blow for them, the simple reason being inflation. In 2014, when the 30 percent tax was slapped on this slab, the inflation rate was 7.35 percent. When the same was reduced to 25 percent in 2020, the inflation rate was 5.65 percent.

Back in 2020, Leave Fare Assistance (LFA) and income from Workers Profit Participation Fund (WPPF) were tax-free as long as they were within Tk 50,000. Both are now taxable, reducing further the disposal income of salaried individuals who fall in the 25 percent bracket. There are about 89,290 taxpayers who fall in this tax category, according to BBS. How is it just to tax someone earning Tk 16.5 lakh and someone earning, say, Tk 1 crore in the same slab?

If one assumes that the government is considering raising the tax slab back to 30 percent to ensure social equity and fair taxation, it should consider two points. First, it should expand the range for each slab and reduce the tax burden on each of these slabs, expanding the tax-free limit to up to Tk 5 lakh, so that the middle-class taxpayers can meet their basic necessities with dignity.

Secondly, the government should further break the current highest tax slab into several brackets and impose a super tax—a tax in addition to a normal tax, upon an annual income above a certain amount—on the rich and wealthy. The concept of super tax is gaining popularity globally as a tool to ensure social justice and could get the NBR the much-needed extra tax that it needs to extract from the right people.

Instead of taking the easy way out and burdening the already struggling segment of the taxpaying population, it is vital that the government look for a way to efficiently utilise the tax money it collects every year. A study by the Policy Research Institute (PRI) of Bangladesh reveals that a whopping 43 percent of taxpayers' money is spent on salaries, pensions and other benefits for government officials.

At the same time, the government must focus on containing the rampant corruption that enables the shameless plundering of taxpayers' money through various projects.

It is understandable that the government needs money to pay off its debts and meet its expenses, but allowing wholesale legalising of dirty money and taxing people further are not the solutions to this problem.

For real growth, invest more into education and health

Over the past one and a half decades, the government has undertaken numerous infrastructural projects, developing and renovating roads, bridges, ports, airports, communication, energy and power, etc in the country. While infrastructure development provides the necessary physical foundation for economic growth and social progress, the most critical sectors requiring investment for a country's overall growth are education and health. Unfortunately, Bangladesh still struggles to adequately invest in these essential areas.

Recent revelations from the draft development budget for FY2024-25 paint a disheartening picture. Both the health and education sectors are set to receive allocations below the targets outlined in the eighth five-year plan. The health sector is allocated just 7.80 percent of the Annual Development Programme (ADP) budget, significantly less than the targeted 11.10 percent. Similarly, the education and technology sector is allocated only 13.70 percent, falling short of the proposed 16.50 percent. Basic economic principles highlight that a well-educated and healthy population is crucial for long-term economic growth and sustainable development. If so, why are these two critical sectors often neglected in this country?

Officials at the Planning Commission say the education and health ministries get lower allocations because they struggle to spend the allocated funds effectively. Additionally, cost overruns and delays in implementing projects are also to blame. Data from the commission reveals that over the past five years, development projects in the health and education sectors experienced cost overruns of 13 percent and 27.5 percent, respectively. Meanwhile, 55 percent of health ministry projects and 34 percent of education ministry projects had to have their deadlines extended. So, why should the public suffer due to management weaknesses?

Bangladesh's current population is around 17 crore, with 7.37 crore people employed in various sectors and 2.74 crore aged between 15-29 years. However, we have not fully capitalised on the demographic dividend of this large number of young people because we lack a skilled and healthy workforce. Unfortunately, our approach to development has neglected education, research, and health, focusing instead on constructing large-scale infrastructure. Infrastructural development, while essential, is not sustainable without enhancing human capacity. Sustainable development requires a healthy, skilled, tech-savvy workforce, which necessitates proper investment in health, education, and research.

We are already struggling on that front, with research indicating that our garment, real estate, telecommunication, information and technology sectors are facing severe shortage of skilled manpower. Consequently, foreign workers are being hired, leading to huge amounts of dollars leaving the country. Additionally, the lack of investment means that people's out-of-pocket expenses for healthcare and education will continue to remain high.

Currently, individuals bear a significant portion of medical expenses, with households covering up to 72 percent of all healthcare costs through out-of-pocket payments. This system imposes a heavy financial burden on impoverished families, often forcing them to either forgo treatment or incur debt. Additionally, to manage healthcare costs, families often cut back on essential daily expenses. According to the World Food Programme's 2023 Food Security Monitoring, 36 percent of Bangladesh's population suffers from food insecurity, with poverty and malnutrition continuing to co-exist. Nutrition is closely linked to labour productivity. The Asian Productivity Organisation's Productivity Data Book 2020 reports that Bangladesh's labour productivity is 10.4 percent, compared to the average of 16.3 percent in South Asia and 27.8 percent in APO countries.

Bangladesh spends 2.3 percent of its GDP on the public health sector, compared to Nepal's 5.6 percent, Sri Lanka's 3.8 percent, and India's 3.8 percent. Developed nations like the UK spend around 10 percent of their GDP on healthcare. In Bangladesh, 65 percent of the health budget goes towards salaries and allowances, with the remainder allocated for development. It is embarrassing that a country aspiring to become an upper-middle-income nation by 2031 and a developed country by 2041 still sees a significant number of its citizens, including politicians, businessmen, and ordinary people, seeking medical treatment abroad every year. This trend indicates a lack of confidence in our own healthcare system. While individuals may argue that seeking overseas medical care is a personal choice, it becomes more alarming when leaders and politicians do the same. Their decisions to seek treatment abroad highlight a serious issue, as they are the ones responsible for developing the healthcare system.

Education, often hailed as the great equaliser, also faces a similar fate. Government expenditure on education is a meagre 1.64 percent of the GDP. This is significantly lower than the averages for LDCs (above three percent), middle-income countries (above four percent), and high-income countries (above five percent). According to UNESCO's Global Education Monitoring Report 2022, Bangladeshi families cover 71 percent of the total education costs. For fixed-income and poor families, this creates a disproportionate burden.

Insufficient funding in health and education can result in substandard healthcare and human resource development, while also increasing people's out-of-pocket expenses. These rising costs perpetuate cycles of poverty and vulnerability. Addressing these inequalities requires proper government financing in education and healthcare. If financial constraints are an issue, the government must find innovative ways to fill the gap. Additionally, it should work on increasing the capacity of the relevant ministries to effectively use the allocated funds.

Unlike the past two Lok Sabha elections, where Narendra Modi's BJP won enough seats to form the government alone, the party has fallen short of a clear majority this time and is dependent on the coalition NDA. PHOTO: REUTERS

India's election opens the door to the past

Defying predictions of pundits proffered for almost a year, opinion polls of the past months and exit polls over the past six weeks, the opposition alliance INDIA has done so well that the Narendra Modi-led Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) has fallen short of a clear majority, although the incumbent alliance NDA is holding on to more than 272 seats to form a government. The results and trend are evident that no single party has been able to secure a majority. As Modi's return to power for a third consecutive term breaks a record set six decades ago, it is also a return to a coalition era after a decade. In the previous two elections in 2014 and 2019, BJP had enough seats to form the government alone.

The conventional wisdom is that alliances are formed to be together to go to and stay in power. The NDA is no exception; the members of the alliance have remained together since 1998 and have been in power on several occasions since. In the past decade, despite BJP's enormous support among voters, its extraordinary mobilisation capacity, and the rise of Narendra Modi, NDA remained a key element in Indian politics. As the poll results started to come in, what has become a matter of speculation is whether some alliance members will ditch the NDA and join the opposition. In India, as elsewhere, that's not without precedence. Alliances, especially when a government's survival is dependent on it, tend to be more fragile. Horse-trading has been part and parcel of Indian politics; besides, as the BJP seems to have done poorly and voters have expressed a dismay regarding its politics, it is not out of the realm of possibility that some parties will try their fortune elsewhere. Two parties are being watched closely at the time of the writing of this commentary: Telugu Desam Party of Andhra Pradesh led by Chandrababu Naidu, and Janata Dal United of Bihar led by Nitish Kumar. While publicly the leaders have reaffirmed their allegiance to the NDA, politics is a game of unpredictability; tomorrow is another day.

If the opposition alliance INDIA can cobble together 272 seats, a coalition of disparate parties will end up in power. Press reports suggest that the alliance leaders are reaching out to parties who can only be described as "strange bedfellows." While it is speculation, or in some ways wishful thinking, such a scenario will be deja vu—a return to the 1990s. India witnessed a tumultuous time between May 1996 and October 1999 when coalition governments came and left in quick succession. The period is referred to as "the era of fragile coalition." In the context of a long history of stable Indian democracy, the instability during the 1990s was seen as deeply concerning. This period ended with the emergence of the BJP as a dominant party. It offered stability but over the past decade, such stability only contributed to serious democratic erosion and deep entrenchment of authoritarianism. It produced a leader who claimed that he had been chosen by God. It is in this context that if India returns to the 1990s' pluralistic political instability, that will be progress. Indeed, it sounds outlandish to suggest that going backwards is progress, but in the battle against authoritarianism, returning to a flawed democracy is a step forward. The election has created an opportunity.

If the opposition alliance INDIA can cobble together 272 seats, a coalition of disparate parties will end up in power. Press reports suggest that the alliance leaders are reaching out to parties who can only be described as 'strange bedfellows.' While it is speculation, or in some ways wishful thinking, such a scenario will be deja vu—a return to the 1990s.

Speculations aside, the unanticipated better results of the alliance INDIA has a message insofar as reversal of autocratisation around the world. In a democratic society, each political party has its own ideology, vision, strategy, and tactics; they compete, but when the democracy itself is at stake, they might have to compromise and build a wall of resistance. Waiting for a perfect solution to the democracy crisis and the emergence of a democratic force free of stains of past deeds will not only help authoritarianism to sustain, but will increasingly make citizens depoliticise. The Congress-led alliance INDIA is not an ideology-driven cohesive alliance. Some of the differences among these parties are significant; the past of some parties is chequered, to say the least. The partners of the alliance INDIA set their eyes on a goal: to stop autocratisation by offering an alternative to Modi's divisive policies.

While the alliance has not succeeded in winning the majority, it has emerged as a roadblock to the politics of divisiveness and hate. Faizabad's result is telling in this regard. The place, which became the symbol of BJP and ilk's rise due to the demolition of the mosque and the pompous inauguration of the Ram Mandir in January, has now delivered a defeat to the BJP. As for the alliance INDIA, bringing the parties together was a difficult task, holding each other together through the election was harder, but keeping the alliance intact in the coming days to fight for democracy will be the hardest.

The numbers of the final election results will be dissected in many ways. A more nuanced picture will emerge, and analysts and political scientists will try to explain the messages from Indian citizens. In the meantime, it is evident that a strong opposition in the parliament has emerged, and voters have expressed their desire to see a pluralistic polity in India, a past that defined the Indian polity and made it worthwhile to call the country "the largest democracy of the world."

Trump, now a felon, presents a huge political challenge

Ashfaque Swapan

ASHFAQUE SWAPAN

Say what you will about former US President Donald Trump, but give him his due.

Just when you thought there were no norms of political etiquette left to destroy, Trump comes up with a sledgehammer, creating history by achieving the dubious distinction of becoming the first US president ever to be convicted as a felon.

This follows a whole slew of firsts: the first president in US history who refused to concede defeat; the first president to incite a mob to attack the US Capitol (the last time the Capitol was attacked was by the British in 1814); and the first president to defend insurrectionists. During his presidency, Trump lied with such abandon that the US media, usually deferential to the office, were forced to explicitly say so—and keeping track of Trump's lies became a real journalistic exercise.

These dubious "firsts" are leavened generously with political misdemeanours of a bewildering variety and number. Just a random sampling: Trump forced his press aide to falsely claim that he had a larger crowd than Obama at the inauguration. He suggested bleach as a cure for Covid. To this day, he claims the 2020 presidential elections were rigged, despite the fact that all his campaign's lawsuits were thrown out of court by judges, including many appointed by him.

The extraordinary thing is not just how outrageous Trump's actions are. It is the fact that he keeps getting away with it. This has turned US politics on its head and has political analysts scratching their heads in despair.

Let's take a quick trip down the memory lane to see what happened to another disgraced US president, and you will get an idea of how the guardrails have completely come off.

On August 7, 1974, Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona, Senator Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, and House Representative John Rhodes of Arizona—the top Congressional Republican leaders—gave erstwhile President Richard Nixon a warning: support within his party had plummeted, they told him, and Nixon was likely to be impeached. The next day, Nixon resigned. In a bit of gallows humour, erstwhile Republican Senator Bob Dole quipped that at least they had the burglar vote, referring to the break-in at Democratic headquarters in Washington, DC that snowballed into the scandal that felled Nixon.

Today, it is impossible to imagine any Republican lawmaker standing up to Trump, and for good reason. Some have tried before and have had to kiss their political careers goodbye. Contrast the Republican leaders of the Nixon era with today's Republican lawmakers, who are falling all over themselves to ingratiate themselves to the former president.

Yet, the fact remains that Trump has been found guilty on 34 felony counts by a jury of his peers. It is noteworthy that Trump's family members were conspicuous by their absence—only his son Eric showed up in court.

Whatever happened to former First Lady Melania? Melania, it must be said, is an oddity. Whether it's Republican first ladies like Pat Nixon, Barbara or Laura Bush, or Democratic first ladies like Rosalynn Carter, Hillary Clinton or Michelle Obama—US first ladies have a reputation for warmth and engagement. Much of it is stage-managed, to be sure, but all nonetheless command some degree of respect and affection. Melania is an exception. It isn't that she is widely loathed. The curious thing about her is that she is a bit of a cypher—one doesn't quite know what to make of her.

That said, one can't be too harsh. It can't be much fun playing the loyal wife in a case where your husband is accused of giving hush money to cover up a liaison with a porn star. Marital loyalty has its limits.

Meanwhile, the Republican Party is quite clearly stuck with Trump, felon or not. Trump's reaction has been his usual bluster: it's all rigged, everybody is out to get him. (Trump being Trump, he didn't miss this occasion to make a quick buck. His campaign reports that it raised over $58 million in 24 hours of the verdict. No surprise there: here is a guy who made money off his mugshot after he was booked in Georgia.)

Thanks to Trump, American politics is in uncharted territory. We have an unprecedented situation where the US Secret Service has to figure out how to provide the former president security if he does become a jailbird.

Meanwhile, the upcoming presidential election in November is still up in the air. Trump is like the proverbial tail wagging the dog—he holds a significant part of the Republican electorate in Svengali-like thrall. So now, it is he who decides what the Republican Party stands for, not vice versa.

The effect of Trump's conviction on his support is hard to gauge, given mixed response to recent polls. While he has lost some support, about half of the respondents say they are more likely to vote for him, Axios reports.

Could Donald Trump be the first felon elected to be US president? FILE PHOTO: REUTERS

It is a strange world indeed, where a felony conviction fails to undo a presidential candidacy, but these are indeed the strange political times we live in. In the recent past, US presidential elections have had nail-biting finishes, with just some tens of thousands of votes in a handful of swing states determining the winner. Add to that the deepening polarisation where most voters are staunchly partisan, and you have a political tinderbox where every little thing matters.

Trump's conviction may cast a shadow on his support, but then incumbent President Joe Biden isn't exciting the electorate all that much. Add to that Biden's stand on Israel's mass slaughter in Gaza, which has deeply antagonised two demographics Democrats desperately need to push Biden over the finish line: Black Americans and young people.

Former British Prime Minister Harold Wilson once observed, "A week is a long time in politics." November is months away. Obviously, a lot can change as the world waits to see if Trump is capable of another first: can he be the first felon elected to be US president?

We won't know the answer to that before November 5. In the meantime, fasten your seatbelts, because this is going to be one crazy political rollercoaster ride.

Sanya Rushdi and Arunava Sinha discuss 'Hospital'

Once the novel was published in text, Rushdi's elder sister and writer, Luna Rushdi, sent a copy to renowned Indian translator, Arunava Sinha, who expressed an interest in translating the novel into English.

NABILAH KHAN

"We are truly prisoners of the mind", says Sanya Rushdi, the author-narrator of Hospital (Giramondo Publishing, 2023), originally published in Bangla (Bohiprokash, 2019) and translated into English by Arunava Sinha.

Shortlisted for the 2024 Stella Prize and longlisted for the 2024 Miles Franklin Literary Award, two of the highest literary honours in Australia, it conveys the emotions swirling around in the story's protagonist, who is diagnosed with schizophrenia after her third episode of psychosis. Based on events that occurred in Rushdi's life, the autofiction takes us deep into the recesses of the narrator's mind and portrays a simple, yet powerful picture of the illness.

A slim volume that packs a powerful punch, Hospital came about by chance. A few months after she left hospital in Melbourne, Bangladeshi-born, Australia-based Rushdi commenced journalling her thoughts. She shared them with a friend, a renowned poet, writer, and artist, Bratya Raisu, who recognised a novel in those notes.

Having only written for academic purposes before (as a student of biological sciences and psychology at Monash University, University of Sydney, and Deakin University), Rushdi was uncertain about her abilities to write a full length novel. So, Raisu suggested writing a few lines of a chapter at a time, which was then published in shahitya.com.

Once the novel was published in text, Rushdi's elder sister and writer, Luna Rushdi, sent a copy to renowned Indian translator, Arunava Sinha, who expressed an interest in translating the novel into English. With over 80 translations (English to Bangla and vice versa) of classic, modern and contemporary fiction, nonfiction, and poetry under his belt, he is no stranger to the literary landscape of the Indian subcontinent.

What was the thought behind the title 'Hospital'? Was it simply a place or the narrator's state of mind? Is there a deeper meaning behind the simple title?
Rushdi: I guess I ended up with a broader name such as "Hospital" because the book can be read at different levels. What this name means really depends on how the reader is reading it. At first, I named it "Hospital and a flock of smoking pigeons." In Bangla, the name was "Hospital o ek jhak dhumpayi kobutor" but the name was changed to "Hospital" later on.

The narrator has a strong awareness of 'the self' when she describes it being allowed to thrive in a community house while 'the self' is "subdued with medication at every opportunity" in the hospital. Why was it important for the narrator to feel this way?
Rushdi: I think, if we take them out of the hospital and community house context for a moment, we find that a person living in today's society, who is not very politically aware or is very innocent and naïve in a lot of ways, is generally treated in two different ways. The first way is to just tell them what to do and what not to do, and in so doing, infantilise him or her or take control of his or her life; and the second way is to just let them be and let them go about their own business, but have an undercurrent agreement that they are really not a member of the larger society, and so, eventually, they have to be eliminated. I think, in Hospital, I compared this second way to the slow death of a frog in a gradually heating water-pot. I feel that both of these ways exist due to a sense of care for these people, but also, a sense of not knowing what to do with them.

The narrator portrays a lot of compassion and empathy for her fellow psychiatric ward patients, whom she refers to as "inmates". What was it like to see yourself through the eyes of a character in a novel? Did you discover something about yourself you weren't aware of while penning your thoughts down?
Rushdi: There is a part in the novel about assertiveness, where the protagonist is in the courtyard with two other patients. There are pigeons on the floor that the narrator is a bit uncomfortable with. The dialogues that took place there about assertiveness between the narrator and another patient, where I, as a writer, was kind of shuffling positions between the narrator and the other patient, seeing the narrator or 'myself' through another person's eyes, led to the realisation of this tendency that I have to react rather than to assert myself. There are lots of other little discoveries like that throughout the book.

What made you choose Hospital? What was the first thing that drove you to want to translate this book?
Sinha: Sanya's sister, Luna Rushdi, whom I have known for several years, asked me if I'd like to read her sister's debut novel (in Bangla). I said of course, and they sent me a copy. The moment I read the first few pages, I felt this was the kind of novel that one would like to translate. So, I made my decision very early on and I'm very happy to say I wasn't disappointed. When a novel really speaks to me within the first few pages, and I talk to the author and they are okay with my going ahead and translating it, I start translating it right away without waiting to finish reading it till the end. So, reading Hospital in this case was simultaneous with translating it. It was a truly extraordinary experience from beginning to end.

There is a part in the novel about assertiveness, where the protagonist is in the courtyard with two other patients. There are pigeons on the floor that the narrator is a bit uncomfortable with.

Do you start translating it in your head or do you prepare in advance? What does the process involve?
Sinha: The curse for the translator sometimes, especially when you're reading from the language in which you're translating, is that a part of your mind is always asking the question of whether this is a book you'd like to translate or not (assuming it hasn't been translated before). So, that part of the brain is always active, and you're right, even if I am not consciously translating in my head, I'm thinking of how it'll sound in English and so on. I'm not saying it happens with every book I work on, but Hospital was one of those books where I knew from the word go that this is a book that would work just as well in any other language.

In certain parts of the book, you left the original terms in Bangla where the characters are referring to family members as "Luna apa" or "Luna'r ma", the narrator's parents affectionately calling her "baba" and "ma", etc. Was that a conscious choice to keep the authenticity?
Sinha: Well, it's verisimilitude. It's important because at the back of your mind, you know that those conversations did not originate in English. When you start using terms like 'dear' or 'darling', you cannot insert a cultural context that does not exist. If you were talking about a family that was entirely integrated into the Anglophone world, and it didn't matter what the origins were, then it'd be fine. But, in this case, the family is not integrated in the sense that they have completely given up their ways of speaking in their own manner, including using endearments, and to gently point out the fact that, at the end of the day, this is a slightly different group of people, therefore those were useful markers.

These are excerpts from two interviews. Read the full conversations on DS Books and The Daily Star's websites.

SHELF LIFE

The Glass Menagerie

Tennessee Williams, 1944

When we see glass, we think two things—how beautiful it is and how easily it can be broken. When we meet Laura in the play, we see the embodiment of this concept. Quietly struggling with mental illness, she spends her days tending to her little glass menagerie. She, her mother, and her brother live in a world of their own, wrapped in a cocoon of nostalgia and tucked away from reality. Yet, their world is what strikes the reader as real because of the way the play brings to life an all-too-familiar internal world rife with loneliness and human desperation. This play tugged at my heartstrings like none other! In the absence of a plot, there is the presence of an emotional tempest.

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"The opposition to Negro education in the South was at first bitter, and showed itself in ashes, insult, and blood; for the South believed an educated Negro to be a dangerous Negro. And the South was not wholly wrong; for education among all kinds of men always has had, and always will have, an element of danger and revolution, of dissatisfaction and discontent."

Babar and Co take on charged-up USA

AGENCIES

Ahead of their T20 World Cup opener against co-hosts USA at the Grand Prairie Stadium in Dallas today, Pakistan captain Babar Azam did not hesitate to state their aim in the mega event.

"We are here to try to win the World Cup," said Babar, who recently became the second batter after Virat Kohli to go past the 4000-run mark in T20Is. Star Indian batter is leading the chart with 4037 runs, and Babar is a close second with 4023 runs.

But for Babar, who has been reinstated as the Pakistan skipper after their tumultuous brief spell under pacer Shaheen Shah Afridi following the 50-over World Cup in 2023, the focus was solely on playing as per the team requirement.

"I am not here thinking about personal records. What matters is that the team does well," Babar added.

Pakistan are dangerous opponents for the best of teams in major tournaments but they could face a rocky road in their quest for a first Twenty20 World Cup title since their sole triumph in 2009 after a radical overhaul in recent months.

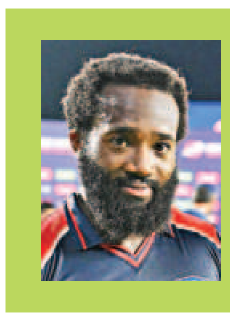
Pakistan are one of the three teams to have not played any warm-up fixtures ahead of the 20-team tournament, but Babar was not fixated on it.

Pakistan come fresh from playing a four-match T20I series against defending champions England, but two of those games in England were washed out while the other two were won by the hosts.

Meanwhile, ICC associates USA, despite being ranked 11 spots lower than sixth-placed Pakistan in T20I rankings, will be fancying their chances of springing a surprise in Dallas today.

Having come into the mega event on the back of a historic series win over Bangladesh, the USA opened the T20 World Cup in majestic fashion. Powered by a 40-ball 94 from Aaron Jones, the USA chased down a 195-run target with seven wickets and 14 balls to spare.

That effort definitely showed that USA not only have the firepower for a big chase -- something they might need against top T20 nations like Pakistan in the tournament.



- USA's Aaron Jones leads the T20 World Cup top-scorers chart, having scored a 40-ball 94 in their first game against Canada.
- Pakistan's Imad Wasim, the only left-arm spinner available in the squad, will be missing the USA game owing to a persistent side strain.

Shakib regains top spot from Hasaranga
Shakib Al Hasan is the beneficiary of an unusually disappointing outing for Sri Lanka's Wanindu Hasaranga against South Africa on Monday, with the Bangladesh all-rounder leapfrogging Hasaranga into the top spot in the latest ICC all-rounder rankings. Shakib had held the top sport for quite a few years before losing the throne to Hasaranga last week. However, despite Hasaranga taking two wickets against South Africa, the Lankan captain slipped to second position behind Shakib.

'Pakistan-India contest is like Super Bowl'

AGENCIES

Pakistan legend Shahid Afridi is excited that the American public will witness cricket's equivalent of the Super Bowl in New York on Sunday when archrivals Pakistan and India face off in a blockbuster T20 World Cup clash.

Comparing it to the famous Super Bowl, Afridi, the ICC Men's T20 World Cup 2024 ambassador, said that America's cricket-loving crowd will witness the 'greatest cricketing rivalry'.

"For those Americans discovering the tournament, they should know that Pakistan's game against India is like our Super Bowl," Afridi wrote in his column for the ICC. "I used to absolutely love playing India and I really believe it is the biggest rivalry in sport.

"Against India, it is about handling the pressure of the occasion. There is so much talent in both teams, they just need to put it together on the day.

"People are going to love the support in the States. There is a great expat community over there which absolutely loves cricket.

"And the Americans absolutely love their sport, whether it is American football, basketball or baseball. I really believe that cricket will hit the mainstream over there in the next few years."

While he refused to pick any favourites from the India-Pakistan contest, he backed the Men in Green to overcome their recent indifferent form and bring their A-game out during the tournament.

Australia begin treble bid against self-assured Oman

AGENCIES

With the ICC Test Championship and the ODI World Cup already in the bag, Australia begin their T20 World Cup campaign against Oman at the Kensington Oval in Barbados today in their quest to become champions in all three formats.

The 2021-winners have brought an uber-experienced squad for their title charge and one will not be surprised if it's Mitchell Marsh's men dancing in ticker-tape after the final in Barbados, with history made as the first nation to hold all three of cricket's top global trophies.

Australia boast world-class players from top-to-tail and a champion outfit's conviction that no matter how bad things get, someone among them will carry the day.

Plenty of old hands remain, though, with 37-year-old opener David Warner to soak up his final farewell from international cricket and the usual pace trio of Mitchell Starc, Pat Cummins and Josh Hazlewood reporting for duty.

Most of the players in the squad are over 30 and some will be managed carefully by staff, especially against a relatively feeble Oman who began their campaign with a Super Over defeat.

A few of Australia's key players whose teams progressed into the playoff of the IPL arrived late as they were allowed to return home for a few days.

Either Mitchell Starc or Pat Cummins is expected to be rested and the Aussies might look to go with the spin option of Ashton Agar instead. Marcus Stoinis and Cameroon Green will fight it out for place in the eleven because of their ability to bowl compounded with Marsh's fitness restrictions which will not allow him to contribute with the ball.

Despite the significant mismatch, Oman skipper Aqib Ilyas, buoyed by their opening game, assured that his side will not to be overwhelmed by stars in Australia's ranks and even pointed out a key weakness against spin he thought his opponent had.

"With the Australian team, they used to have a few players with good techniques in the past like Steve Smith and Marnus Labuschagne. But I don't think they have many now. They look to hit big. They only try to go for sixes," Ilyas told reporters.

"But every day is not the same day, and if we get the same wicket (as the one against Namibia) maybe it could be a problem for them.

"Just like the way you saw how difficult it was for the West Indies against PNG. They struggled to chase 130-odd despite them having some of the biggest hitters in the side.

Spin is indeed expected to play a part at the venue as spinners have an economy rate of 7.75 in contrast to the 8.12 runs an over pacers have conceded there.

- This is set to be Australia's first-ever T20I encounter against Oman.
- Oman skipper Aqib Ilyas is set to play his 50th T20I.
- Australia leg-spinner Adam Zampa is eight wickets away from becoming the first from his country to pick up 100 T20I scalps.
- Opener David Warner, currently with 3099 runs, is 21 away from surpassing Aaron Finch to become Australia's top run-scorer in T20Is.

Paolini stuns Rybakina to reach French Open semis

REUTERS, Paris

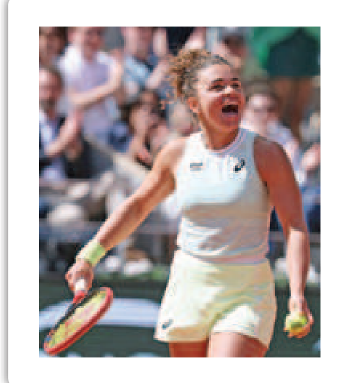
Italian surprise package Jasmine Paolini staved off a fightback from fourth seed Elena Rybakina to seal a stunning 6-2, 4-6, 6-4 win on Wednesday and advance to the French Open semifinals for the first time.

The 12th-seeded Paolini set up a last-four showdown with either Belarusian world number two Aryna Sabalenka or Russian 17-year-old Mirra Andreeva, who meet in the quarter-finals later on Court Philippe Chatrier.



Playing in her first Grand Slam quarter-final, the 28-year-old Paolini got off to a confident start by winning the opening two games and forced her opponent to work hard to hold serve, before breaking again en route to taking the first set.

A sublime backhand winner gave Paolini another break in the third game of the next set but 2022 Wimbledon champion Rybakina responded with one of her own and slowly came to grips with the Italian's power and precision.

Russian-born Kazakh Rybakina exchanged breaks with Paolini again but the 24-year-old held firm to level the contest at one set apiece and recovered after surrendering her serve at the start of the decider.

Paolini secured a hold to love to make it 4-4, playing at the level she showed early in the match and she took advantage of Rybakina's errors to close out a famous victory.

Bangladesh aim to 'make things difficult' for Australia

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh are eager to give visiting Australia a tough time when they square off in a Group I fixture of the FIFA World Cup Qualifiers in Dhaka today.

The match at the Bashundhara Kings Arena is set to kick off at 4:45pm.

Having confirmed a third-round berth in the World Cup Qualifiers with a maximum 12 points from four matches, Australia, who are ranked 160 places higher than Bangladesh, appear upbeat ahead of the encounter against the group's bottom dwellers.

The men in red and green, on the other hand, remain confident in their ability to use their home advantage this time against the Socceroos, who thrashed Bangladesh 7-0 at Aami Park in Melbourne in November last year and had handed 5-0 and 4-0 defeats at home and away matches, respectively, during the Russia World Cup Qualifiers in 2015.

"If you compare it to Melbourne [match], of course, we have the responsibility of improving what we did there. We had some good moments there, but definitely struggled for different reasons – one of those was that we conceded quite early, which we want to avoid tomorrow," Bangladesh head coach Javier Cabrera said at a pre-match press conference yesterday.

"We want to show our people at home that here we can compete with everyone, though we know how challenging it's going to be against tomorrow's [today's] rivals.

"We want to compete and make things difficult for Australia. That is our objective," the Spaniard added.

Captain Jamal Bhuiyan also wants to display their best in front of a familiar environment.

"Although we got short time to get prepared, the positive side was that all players had been in action in the league, and they had been at the top of fitness. We will be trying our level best to perform better against strong Australia," said Jamal, who also believes the day in Melbourne was a bad one for them.

"Wearing hand gloves, we had to play amid chilly weather in Melbourne, but this time we have some advantages – home ground, familiar conditions and home crowd. So, we want to utilise these small things to prove that the 7-0 drubbing in Melbourne was a bad day for us," said Jamal.

Australia, who enjoyed a rest day on Tuesday after arriving here, underwent their only training session yesterday in Dhaka following a four-day training in Bangkok, Thailand.

The Socceroos brought a comparatively younger side, dropping 12 players from the squad that played their last match against Lebanon in March. Also, around 10 players, who were part of the Australia squad during their recent Bangladesh encounter, will also miss today's affair.

According to Australia coach Graham Arnold, his troops would be wary of the home team.

"We do know that Bangladesh, when they play at home, they are a different team than away from home. Of course, we beat them seven-nil in November last year but that's all in the past. It's all about tomorrow and making sure our boys are mentally ready and strong for this game; and hopefully in front of a good crowd," said Arnold at yesterday's presser.

"Look, we have our standards and, when I say that, all our players understand that 'I don't care who we play against, whenever you wear the national team shirt of Australia on your heart, you play to the best of your ability with the right mindset to win the game'," remarked the Australia coach when asked about the slim chances of losing against Bangladesh.

Bangladesh and Australia players sweated it out at the practice venue of the Bashundhara Kings Arena yesterday ahead of their World Cup Qualifier today. The Men in Red and Green had lost the reverse fixture 7-0 in Melbourne in November last year.

WORKERS FAILING TO GO TO KL

People responsible will face the music

PM tells parliament

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has said her government will investigate why workers could not go to Malaysia before a deadline expired and will take action against those responsible.

The premier was responding to a supplementary question from Opposition Chief Whip Mujibul Haque Chunnu in parliament yesterday.

Earlier, the House went into budget session around 5:00pm, with Speaker Shirin Sharmin Chaudhury in the chair.

In the supplementary question, Chunnu enquired whether any action would be taken for the failure to send workers to Malaysia by the June 30 deadline.

In reply, the leader of the House said the government operated special flights to send workers to Malaysia.

"Workers were sent [to Malaysia] on special and regular flights. But many were left out. An investigation will be conducted to identify the reason [for not being able to send all workers to Malaysia].

"Whenever we discuss and decide how many people will go abroad, we see a group of people in our country, who deals with manpower export, try to send workers abroad in a hurry," she said.

Highlighting various steps taken by her government to send workers abroad, Hasina said that those who want to Bangladesh travelled to the United States for a bilateral series with the hosts in the early hours of May 16 before beginning preparations for the T20 World Cup. Consequently, Bangladesh have had enough time to acclimatise to the conditions offered in Dallas and New York, the venues for their first two matches in the marquee event.

The Tigers have played four matches since then, with their game against USA in Dallas abandoned due to extreme weather conditions, which may have hindered a few subsequent training sessions. By and large, Bangladesh will not have an excuse in terms of adjustment to the conditions.

Ansar Al Islam raised Tk 18 lakh through crowdfunding

Say CTTC officials; three operatives arrested

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN and
EMRUL HASAN BAPPI

Ansar Al Islam, a militant group inspired by al-Qaeda, has raised Tk 18 lakh through crowdfunding within a few months.

In the name of sending aid to the victims in Palestine, the outfit made Facebook posts mentioning mobile financial service accounts.

In the last two months, Ansar Al Islam raised the money after launching a platform called "Deen Islam Foundation" on Facebook.

This move was made after al-Qaeda in the Indian Subcontinent (AQIS) late last year called upon the Bangladeshi citizens to provide assistance to Palestinian people.

Officials of Dhaka Metropolitan Police's Counter Terrorism and Transnational Crime (CTTC) unit disclosed this to The Daily Star recently.

The government banned Ansar Al Islam in March 2017.

On Saturday, the CTTC unit claimed to have arrested three operatives of Ansar Al Islam for collecting money under the banner of Deen Islam Foundation.

A team of the CTTC's counterterrorism investigation wing picked up Shakil Ahmed, 21, Fardin Ahmed Mirdul, 22, and Rayhan Hosain, 26, from the capital's Wari.

On the same day, the CTTC unit filed a case with Wari Police Station against the three under the Anti-Terrorism Act.

Speaking to this newspaper, Jahidul Hoque Talukder, deputy commissioner of the DMP at the CTTC unit, said the arrestees had been involved in raising funds for the outfit. They gave false information like sending aid to Palestine, or Rohingya community, he added.

The CTTC unit later produced the arrestees before a Dhaka court seeking 10-day remand for each. The court, however, granted three-day demand.

Yesterday, a Dhaka court sent the three arrestees to jail.

Amanullah, a key accused in the Anwarul Azim Anar abduction case, had confessed before a Dhaka court that he was in charge of the men who took part in killing the Jheniadah lawmaker.

Aktaruzzaman, a Bangladesh-born US citizen, gave him the contract to kill Azim, Amanullah said in his confessional statement yesterday.

Aktaruzzaman, known in his hometown Jheniadah as Shaheen Mia, and Azim used to syphon money out of the country through hundi and were involved in gold smuggling, said Amanullah.

After the two had a disagreement over the illegal racket, Aktaruzzaman met Amanullah and told him to kill Azim.

Israel launches new incursion into central Gaza

Mediators to resume talks on truce deal

REUTERS, Cairo

Israel yesterday announced a new military campaign against Hamas in central Gaza where Palestinian medics said dozens of people had been killed in airstrikes, complicating expected talks between mediators to try to finalise a ceasefire deal.

At least 44 Palestinians have been killed in Israeli military strikes in central Gaza Strip areas since Tuesday, health officials in the enclave said. "The sounds of bombardment didn't stop all night," said Aya, 30, a displaced woman in Deir Al-Balah.

The Israeli military said jets were hitting Hamas targets in central Gaza while ground forces were operating "in a focused manner with guidance from intelligence" in the area of Al-Bureij - one of Gaza's long established refugee settlements.

Residents said Israeli forces had sent tanks into Bureij and planes and tanks pounded the nearby settlements of Al-Maghazi and Al-Nuseirat as well as Deir Al-Balah city, where tanks have not invaded.

4TH PHASE UZ POLLS

Trend of low voter turnout continues

STAR REPORT

The fourth and last phase of upazila parishad elections was held by and large peacefully yesterday and the turnout was low like the previous phases.

In this phase, 60 upazilas went to polls.

Talking to reporters at the Election Commission after voting ended, Chief Election Commissioner Kazi Habibul Awal said the turnout in the fourth phase would be 34.33 percent.

He said the EC made the estimation based on information provided by the election officials of 5,144 polling centres.

The CEC did not respond to a query about the reason for the low turnout.

He said the polls were held peacefully and without any major violence.

He said 28 people were arrested over election-related offences, adding that voting at a polling station in Kishoreganj's Bhariab upazila was suspended as a ballot box was taken away.

The CEC said a presiding officer was arrested as he was found stamping ballot papers in Netrakona's Kendua upazila.

Boeing Starliner launches first crew on third try

AFP, Cape Canaveral

Boeing yesterday launched its very first astronauts bound for the International Space Station aboard a Starliner capsule, which joins a select club of spacecraft to carry humans beyond Earth.

The third time turned out to be the charm for the aerospace giant, after two previous bids to fly with crew were aborted late into the countdown, for technical reasons.

Astronauts Butch Wilmore and Suni Williams, both of whom have two previous spaceflights under their belts, blasted off at 10:52 am (1452 GMT) from the Cape Canaveral Space Force Station in Florida, for a roughly one-week stay at the station.

"Suni and I are honored to share this dream of spaceflight with each and every one of you," Wilmore, who is commander of the test flight, said just before liftoff. "Let's put some fire in this rocket, and let's push it to the heavens."

Starliner becomes just the sixth type of US-built spaceship to fly Nasa astronauts, following the Mercury, Gemini and Apollo programs in the 1960s and 1970s, the Space Shuttle from 1981 to 2011, and SpaceX's Crew Dragon from 2020.

Tax burden to get heavier, life even harder

SOHEL PARVEZ

The tax measures unveiled yesterday for 2024-25 are not going to provide any relief to taxpayers.

It became apparent after the finance minister placed his proposals in parliament on income tax, value-added tax (VAT), and customs tariffs for the fiscal year beginning on July 1.

Let's consider the example of a young couple who have just started their conjugal life with a monthly income of Tk 43,800.

As the tax-free income threshold remains unchanged for FY25, the breadwinner of the two-member family will need to pay personal income tax, which will reduce their disposable income.

Now if the couple want to buy a refrigerator, they are likely to count more to get the home appliance, a necessity nowadays.

> The wealthy will need to pay higher taxes on their incomes since the NBR seeks to reinstate a 30 percent tax rate on high-income earners after a gap of four years.

The National Board of Revenue (NBR) will also collect higher taxes from each Tk 100 recharge on mobile phones, making phone calls and data usage costlier. The ultimate result will be reduced use of phones and internet, not only for the couple but also for all in Bangladesh, regardless of their incomes.

The higher tax burden comes at a time when people are desperately looking for a cushion from persistently higher consumer prices and preventing the erosion of living standards.

In May, inflation, a measure of the increase in the prices of a basket of commodities and services, edged up to 9.89 percent from 9.74 percent a month ago, according to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics.

SEE PAGE 7 COL 5

Budget unlikely to make dent in soaring inflation

AHSAN HABIB

The new budget for the upcoming fiscal year is unlikely to provide respite from one of the longest spells of sustained inflation in Bangladesh as the government's measures appear to be missing the impetus required to contain the price spiral.

Although the government acknowledged that people are facing real suffering due to high inflationary pressure, the steps it took to fight the rise in prices remain inadequate.

For example, the government has kept the tax-free income threshold unchanged for the next fiscal year, starting on July 1.

At the same time, it plans to raise value-added tax (VAT) by 12 percent over the current year's target.

This may mainly be achieved by increasing value-added tax, which will ultimately compound the burden on the masses, irrespective of their income levels.

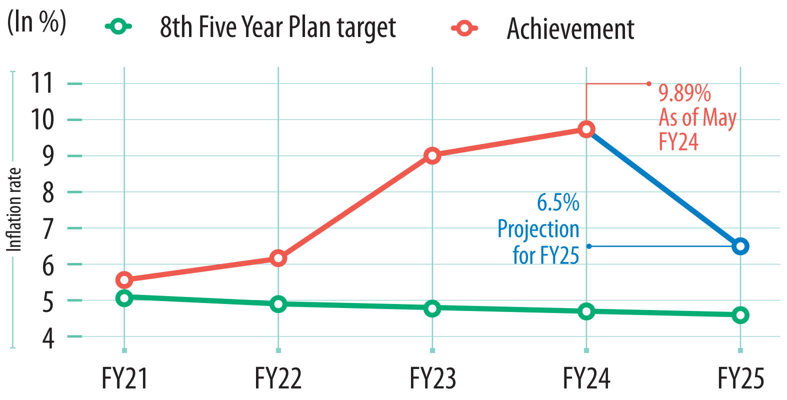
The budget has also brought no major good news when it comes to allocations for social safety net programmes although the need for state-sponsored assistance for the poor and low-income groups has never been higher.

MA Razzaque, research director of the Policy Research Institute, said the government reduced the growth of the budget size this year to squeeze deficit financing and reduce inflation.

The targeted budget deficit is 4.6 percent in FY25, which is slightly lower than the revised budget deficit for the current year, which stands at 4.7 percent.

This indicates that the budget deficit is not controlled much. As a result, the effectiveness of the budget deficit in lowering GDP growth will not translate to taming inflation, he said.

INFLATION: Projection vs reality



Although the government targeted to reduce the inflation rate to 6.5 percent, it maintained the higher GDP growth rate target of 7.5 percent. If the government targets higher GDP growth, it will stoke inflationary pressure.

"But this is normal," Razzaque said.

As inflation has remained at elevated levels for nearly two years, the government should have increased the tax-free income level.

Instead, the tax-free income level remained the same at Tk 3.5 lakh while some comfort was given to slightly upper-income people. The tax rate was 10 percent for people whose income was between Tk 4.5 lakh to TK 7.5 lakh but that slab has been changed to Tk 4.5 lakh to Tk 8.5 lakh.

Another demand from economists was increasing the allocation for social safety net programmes as poor and low-income groups have seen the rapid erosion of their purchasing power while incomes have either stagnated or declined.

But that was hardly reflected in

Mobile internet, talktime to be costlier

MAHMUDUL HASAN

The government has hiked the supplementary duty on mobile top-ups alongside VAT on SIM cards, pushing up costs that will be incurred by mobile and internet users, which will inevitably put a financial strain on access to essential services.

The supplementary duty has been raised from 15 percent to 20 percent in the proposed budget for fiscal year 2024-25.

This means that out of every Tk 100 top up of a user, the government will directly take Tk 28, which includes a 15 percent VAT and a 1 percent surcharge, whereas the government previously took Tk 25.

Meanwhile, the VAT was increased by Tk 100 to Tk 300 for every SIM.

The new duty rate on the telecommunication sector will exacerbate the woes of an already heavily taxed industry to unprecedented fiscal heights, potentially exerting adverse effects on digital services.

BUDGET SNIPPETS

PER CAPITA INCOME TO TOP $3K

Bangladesh's per capita income will be $3,000 at the end of FY25 as the government expects economic growth to recover. Per capita GDP is projected at $2,780 at the end of FY24. It has been growing steadily over the last two decades. It was $700 in 2000 and about $300 in 1990.

REVENUE-GDP RATIO TO RISE TO 9.7PC

The revenue-to-GDP ratio will accelerate to 9.7 percent in FY25 as the government looks to generate higher taxes by cutting exemptions, speeding up digitalisation, and implementing reforms. The ratio stands at about 8 percent in FY24, one of the lowest in the world. India's ratio is 16.98 percent, Indonesia's 11.59 percent, Vietnam's14.03 percent, and Thailand's 15.57 percent.

MPS' DUTY-FREE CAR IMPORTS GO

The government has scrapped the duty-free privilege for lawmakers in importing cars. They have been enjoying the facility since 1988. Now, they will have to pay a 25 percent duty on car imports. People pay a 25 percent import duty, a 15 percent VAT, 5 percent advance tax, and 400 to 500 percent supplementary duty on imported cars.

BANGLADESH 33RD ECONOMY

Bangladesh has become the 33rd largest economy in the world, according to the size of the gross domestic product estimated in 2023, two notches higher than in FY24. The country aspires to achieve the upper-middle-income status in 2031 and become a developed nation by 2041.

OFFSHORE BANK DEPOSITS EXEMPTED FROM EXCISE DUTY

Depositors, who park funds in offshore banking units (OBUs), will enjoy exemption from the excise duty on their foreign currency deposits in FY25. The government has offered the benefit as banks in the country are working to attract foreign currency holders, particularly non-resident Bangladeshis, to make deposits in their OBUs.

Budget shows fault lines, not a path out of the crisis

ARUN DEVNATH

Finance ministers don't possess crystal balls to captivate the audience with mystical allure. They don't have magical foresight. They are real-world agents of economic policy. In times of crisis, which often repeats itself in modern capitalism, they chart a path out of the dark abyss. Sometimes they prove to be successful, sometimes not.

How does Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali measure up to these norms as the new finance minister of Bangladesh? He did try to leave an imprint on our minds, at least by showing the fault lines in the economy and eventually admitting weaknesses, but he blamed almost everything on the global crisis. It was akin to a PR exercise designed to mask the government's own wrongdoing. Economists suggest the new budget is a bland continuation of the past and has failed to carve a way out of the crisis.

Mahmood Ali acknowledged that the government unsuccessfully tried to tame inflation. Efforts to bridle budget spending alongside a contractionary monetary policy were futile. He attributed stubborn inflation primarily to import-induced price increases and disruptions to the domestic supply chain. But his goal to bring inflation down to 6.5 percent in the fiscal year starting in July from more than 9 percent raised eyebrows.

Bangladesh looks to fiscal consolidation by reducing the budget gap to 4.6 percent of GDP, the narrowest in a decade. The administration vowed to continue belt-tightening, a term hardly used in government circles, in a country perpetually obsessed with growth. This is not to say the government will follow an austere path for too long, as it fears this approach may slow the growth rate.

"Therefore, our goal will be to increase government spending gradually in the second half of the upcoming fiscal year. This will be possible if the revenue realisation increases. To this end, we will lay emphasis on removing tax exemptions gradually," the finance minister said.

The GDP growth target, 6.75 percent, appears to be a decent goal as rating agencies and multilateral lenders have kept the forecast closer to this number. The medium-term growth outlook is favourable, supported by garment exports and stable remittance inflows. In the near term, however, growth may be affected by a lingering dollar shortage.

Amid persistent worry over the economy, the government raised the national budget by 4.6 percent year-on-year to Tk 7,97,000 crore, the slowest pace since Sheikh Hasina's party returned to power in 2009.

Can the budget win back the confidence of local and foreign investors? Very unlikely. That is evidenced by a 14 percent drop in foreign direct investments in 2023 from a year earlier. The trust deficit has also been exposed by the massive sell-off by foreign and local investors. The market lost 1,000 points in just three months, just before the budget, once it allowed investors to sell their shares at will.

Solutions not offered

Say economists; some businesses term it time-befitting

JAGARAN CHAKMA and A M JAHID

The proposed budget for 2024-25 lacks creativity and offers no solutions to the many complex challenges facing the country's economy, economists have said.

In their instant reaction yesterday, they also termed the outlay "traditional".

Rizwanul Islam, former special adviser for the employment sector of the International Labour Organization, Geneva, said the budget has been presented at a time when the country's economy is experiencing major challenges like low foreign reserves, high inflation, fluctuating exports, and stagnant remittance inflow through formal channels.

"But one does not see any new thinking and recalibration of the policy approach that was needed to reduce inflation, boost employment and to protect the vulnerable," he said.

According to him, the targets for GDP growth and inflation rate appear to be unrealistic due to the internal inconsistency between GDP growth and restrictive monetary policy, the precarious state of foreign reserve and import compression.

"The goal of reining in inflation through reduction in import duties of some items hinges critically on the transmission of such reduction to the domestic market. Previous record on this does not generate much hope," he added.

Rizwanul said a more realistic approach should have been taken for macroeconomic stabilisation with a lower rate of GDP growth, gradual reduction of the inflation rate, adoption of job creation programmes, and greater support to the poor and vulnerable.

Zahid Hussain, former lead economist of the World Bank's Dhaka office, said the proposed budget has a few positive features, but overall it falls well short of being consistent with the immediate needs and the medium-

Old malaise flaring up

DEBAPRIYA BHATTACHARYA

The budget for the upcoming fiscal year, presented in the context of inordinately complex economic circumstances, reflects both the government's restraint and limitations.

The broad macroeconomic framework for the next fiscal year provides a moderate GDP growth rate of 6.75 percent, a public investment rate of 6.0 percent of GDP (less than that of the earlier year), and an inflation rate of 6.5 percent (down from 10 percent). The tax-GDP ratio is expected to remain static at less than 10 percent.

The trade-off between growth and inflation is pretty apparent. It implies loss of employment and income. The critical factor in this respect is the availability and effective

WHITENING BLACK MONEY

'Unethical, unjust and unacceptable'

Economists blast the provision

MD ASADUZ ZAMAN

Backtracking on its promise to eliminate black money, the government has once again made room to allow both individuals and companies to whiten money without facing scrutiny and by paying a 15 percent tax, a move that drew sharp criticism from economists and civil society.

The government hopes the initiative will increase the flow of money into the economy despite such measures failing to yield any fruitful benefits in the past.

According to the new provision, no authority can raise any question if a taxpayer pays tax at fixed rates for immovable properties such as flats and land and 15 percent tax on other assets, including cash, irrespective of the existing laws of the country.

The scope to whiten black money will remain in place till June 2025.

Before the last national election, the Awami League's election manifesto promised strong measures against those hoarding undisclosed money as well as those engaged in corruption.

But economists and corruption watchdogs said that successive governments allowing the whitening of black money was akin to "licencing corruption".

"This scope shouldn't be allowed at all," said Prof Mustafizur Rahman, a distinguished fellow at the Centre for Policy Dialogue, a think tank. "It's unacceptable, ethically and financially."

When countries such as India and Indonesia provided the scope to whiten black money, they only did so for a certain period and with the warning attached that they would penalise anyone who failed to whiten money within the deadline.

"Bangladesh, however, continues to provide amnesty year after year. As a result, the objective remains unachieved," said Mustafizur.

Since independence, schemes to legalise undeclared money have been introduced at least 22 times. But the response has been lukewarm.

According to data from the National Board of Revenue (NBR), nearly Tk 45,522 crore was whitened between 1972 and 2022, with the collector getting Tk 4,641 crore in taxes in total.

A record Tk 20,600 crore was legalised in 2020-21, when the government offered a full amnesty similar to yesterday's provision. This helped the NBR collect Tk 2,064 crore in taxes in FY21.

In 2006-07, the caretaker government offered the scope to legalise black money after paying a penalty, which is not normally levied. In that year, Tk 9,682 crore was whitened.

AL MANIFESTO

Budget passes over some key promises

PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE

In its first proposed budget after assuming power for a fourth consecutive term, the Awami League government skirted round some of the promises the party made in its election manifesto for the January 7 parliamentary polls.

The proposed budget for 2024-25 fiscal year outlined a vision for marching towards a smart and prosperous Bangladesh by 2041.

To achieve the goal, it listed 14 key areas, which closely align with the party's manifesto.

Keeping the prices of essentials within people's reach was stated as a top priority in the manifesto, but it did not make it to the finance minister's list of priorities.

When the AL unveiled its manifesto in December last year, it had vowed to cut inflation and ensure a smooth supply chain to bring down commodity prices.

The food inflation, which was 9.58 percent at that time, went up to 10.76 percent last month, a seven-month high.

However, the finance minister in his budget speech yesterday expressed optimism that the inflation will come

Under the FY24-25 social safety net programme of Bangladesh, the allocations for pension for retired government employees and savings scheme interest payments are nearly equivalent to the amount allocated for social assistance for the poor, the old and the disaster-struck.

The budget shows that social protection for senior citizens disproportionately benefits the rich and retired government employees over the poor.

The social assistance programme, which covers myriad cash transfers for 54 types of vulnerable target populations, including senior citizens, was allocated Tk 49,871.65 crore.

Specifically, cash assistance in the form of old age allowance was allocated only Tk 4,350.97 crore, with widows getting a further Tk 1,844.32 crore.

The food ministry spent less in fiscal 2022-2023 compared to fiscal 2009-2010, according to data on expenditure over the last 13 years.

In FY23, as the general public battled rising food prices, the government's spending was Tk 5,014 crore, which is Tk 500 crore less than it spent in FY10.

The finance ministry saw the highest increase in terms of money spent – Tk 71,994 crore more in FY23 than in FY10, when it spent only Tk 4,034 crore.

The second highest rise was in the expenditure for interest paid domestically by the government. This includes interest paid on the government's loans from the commercial sectors, as well interest on its many savings instruments.

Interest payments by the government reigned supreme out of all sectors in FY23, in terms of expenditure as a portion of the Gross Domestic Product.

The GDP in FY22-23 was Tk 44,39,273 crore, and interest payments, crossing Tk 92,107 crore, made up 2.07 percent of the GDP.

In FY23, the Anti-Corruption Commission was in the bottom 10 when it came to increase in expenditure. However, in FY21, it saw the lowest increase in budgetary allocation, among all the sectors.

Bad loans hit historic high

No reform initiative to fight the menace

MD MEHEDI HASAN

Default loans in the banking sector of Bangladesh hit an all-time high of Tk 182,295 crore, but no reform programme to reduce it has been announced in the budget for the upcoming fiscal year.

The default loans amounted to Tk 145,633 crore by the end of December. This means it surged by Tk 36,662 crore, or 25 percent, in January-March compared to the preceding quarter, according to the latest data of the Bangladesh Bank.

Besides, non-performing loans (NPLs), also known as toxic assets, climbed by Tk 50,675 crore in the quarter compared to same period of 2023.

The central bank released the figure on a day when Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali unveiled the new government's first budget.

Industry insiders said the rise in NPLs is a result of irregularities, scams, weak corporate governance and a lack of proper monitoring by the central bank.

They also said the actual volume of default loans is higher than the official figure.

At the end of March this year, the total disbursed loans stood at Tk 1,640,855 crore, of which Tk 182,295 crore was defaulted, the highest in the history of Bangladesh. This means 11.10 percent of the disbursed loans have turned sour.

Bad loans in the banking sector stood at only Tk 22,481 crore when the Awami League formed the government in 2009.

When asked for the reason for the spike in bad loans, Bangladesh Bank Executive Director and Spokesperson Md Mezbaul Haque could not give a suitable answer.

He told The Daily Star that bad loans at the state-run banks rose sharply, leading to higher NPLs overall.

Default loans at state-run commercial banks stood at Tk 84,221 crore in March, accounting for 27 percent of their total Tk 312,266 crore disbursed loans, as per BB data.

Scam-hit Janata Bank registered the highest volume of bad loans, contributing Tk 30,495 crore. This represented 31 percent of the loans it had disbursed.

Agrani Bank's bad loans amounted to Tk 20,864 crore, or 28 percent of its disbursed loans.

Moinul Islam, a former professor of economics at Chittagong University, said the actual volume of bad loans is more than Tk 500,000 crore if written-off loans, rescheduled loans and loans with court injunctions are considered.

Ahsan H Mansur, executive director of the Policy Research Institute of Bangladesh, said the default loan figure is not new and it has now been uncovered due to the condition of the International Monetary Fund.

He thinks around 25 percent loans turn defaulted. This will bring the bad loan volume to around Tk 4 lakh crore. "There are bad loans that are yet to be made official. They will be disclosed in the future."

He said the banking sector has weakened due to the higher level of bad loans and it has a negative impact on good borrowers.

Bankers say there is tendency among borrowers to refrain from repaying loans citing excuses of the present economic condition.

On the other hand, most of the loans of the state-run banks were availed through irregularities and scams, and that is why it is difficult to recover those loans.

Bad loans at private commercial banks stood at Tk 88,900 crore, or 7.28 percent

A fresh blow to stock investors

They'll face 15pc tax if income crosses Tk 50 lakh

AHSAN HABIB

In yet another blow to stock market investors, the government plans to impose a capital gains tax on them from next fiscal year.

Although this has disheartened stock market analysts, they welcomed another move allowing black money into the stock market and increasing corporate tax for listed companies that have not offloaded at least 10 percent of their shares.

The government plans to impose at least 15 percent capital gains tax on general investors if their income from share trading crosses Tk 50 lakh.

Since 2015, individual investors had been exempted from paying tax on capital gains from stocks, mutual funds, bonds and debentures.

However, sponsors and directors of listed companies currently face a 5 percent tax deduction at source on capital gains from share transfers.

The government has increased this rate to 10 percent in the proposed budget.

However, the tax will not be applicable in case of shares transferred as a gift between parents and children and between spouses.

Market analysts fear that the market is losing

TAX ON PROVIDENT FUND RISES TO 27.5PC

The NBR is going to bring back the 27.5 percent tax rate on the incomes generated by provident, gratuity, superannuation, and pension funds. In December, the rate was cut to 15 percent from 27.5 percent. The Income Tax Act 2023 lifted the tax exemption and amnesty on the compulsion to file returns for the funds maintained by the private sector.

SURCHARGE STRUCTURE UNCHANGED

The government has kept the existing structure of surcharge, which is imposed on the wealthy. Currently, the rate of surcharge payable up to the net asset value of Tk 4 crore is nil. If the net asset value exceeds Tk 4 crore, a 10 percent surcharge is slapped. When the value crosses the maximum limit of Tk 50 crore, the rate rises to 35 percent.

CIGARETTES TO BECOME PRICIER

The supplementary duty on cigarettes has gone up by 1 percentage point to 66 percent in the upcoming fiscal year of 2024-25 as the government plans to make them costlier and cut their consumption. The value-added tax on the local production of cigarettes and bidi paper has been raised to 15 percent from the existing 7.5 percent.

ACs, REFRIGERATORS TO BE DEARER

The finance minister has proposed imposing 7.5 percent VAT on air conditioners, refrigerators, and freezers. At present, there is no VAT on ACs while it is 5 percent for refrigerators and freezers. Manufacturers and retailers estimate that 5.3 lakh ACs were sold in 2023, up from 3.3 lakh in 2022, as the country is increasingly witnessing higher temperatures.

15PC VAT ON AMUSEMENT PARK VISITS

The government has imposed a 15 percent VAT on amusement parks and theme park services. At present, they pay 7.5 percent VAT. In addition, the existing VAT exemption for tour operator services has been withdrawn. Over the last two decades, about Tk 12,000 crore has been invested in amusement parks, where about 6 lakh people are directly employed.

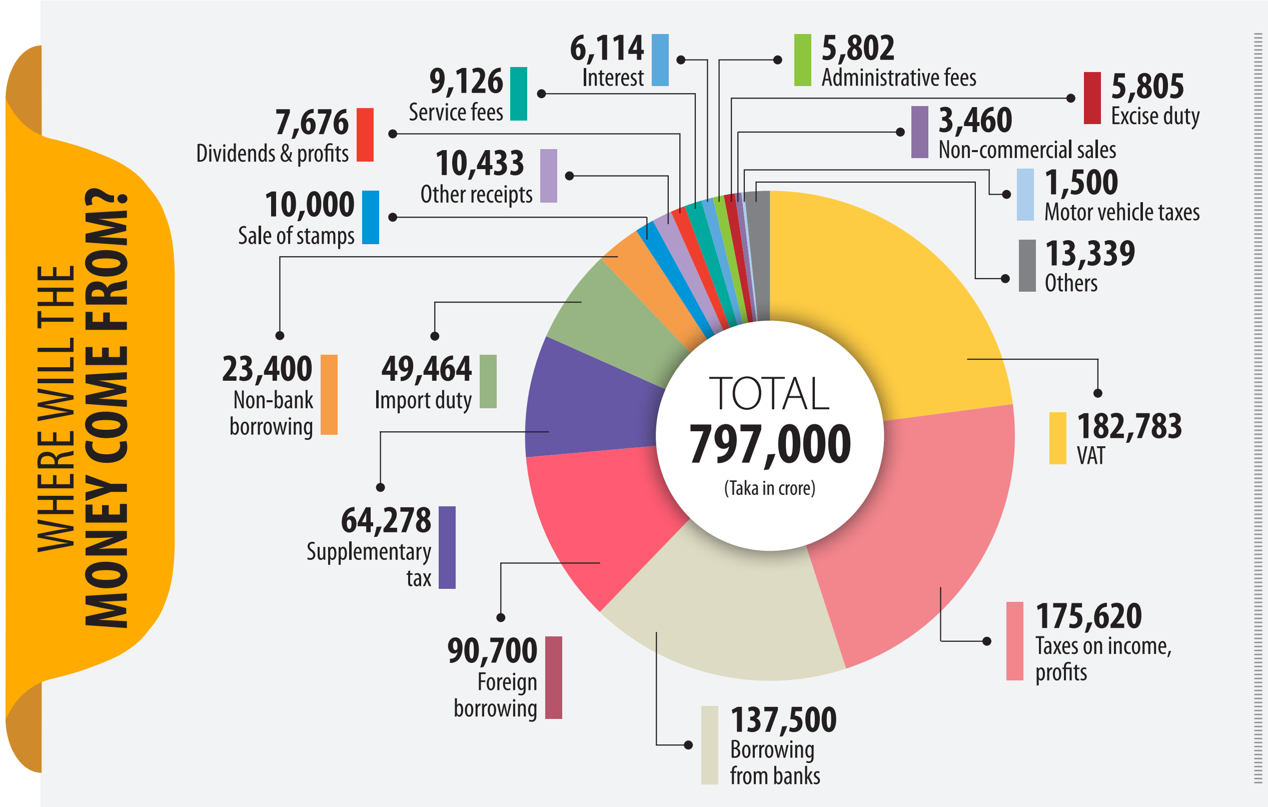
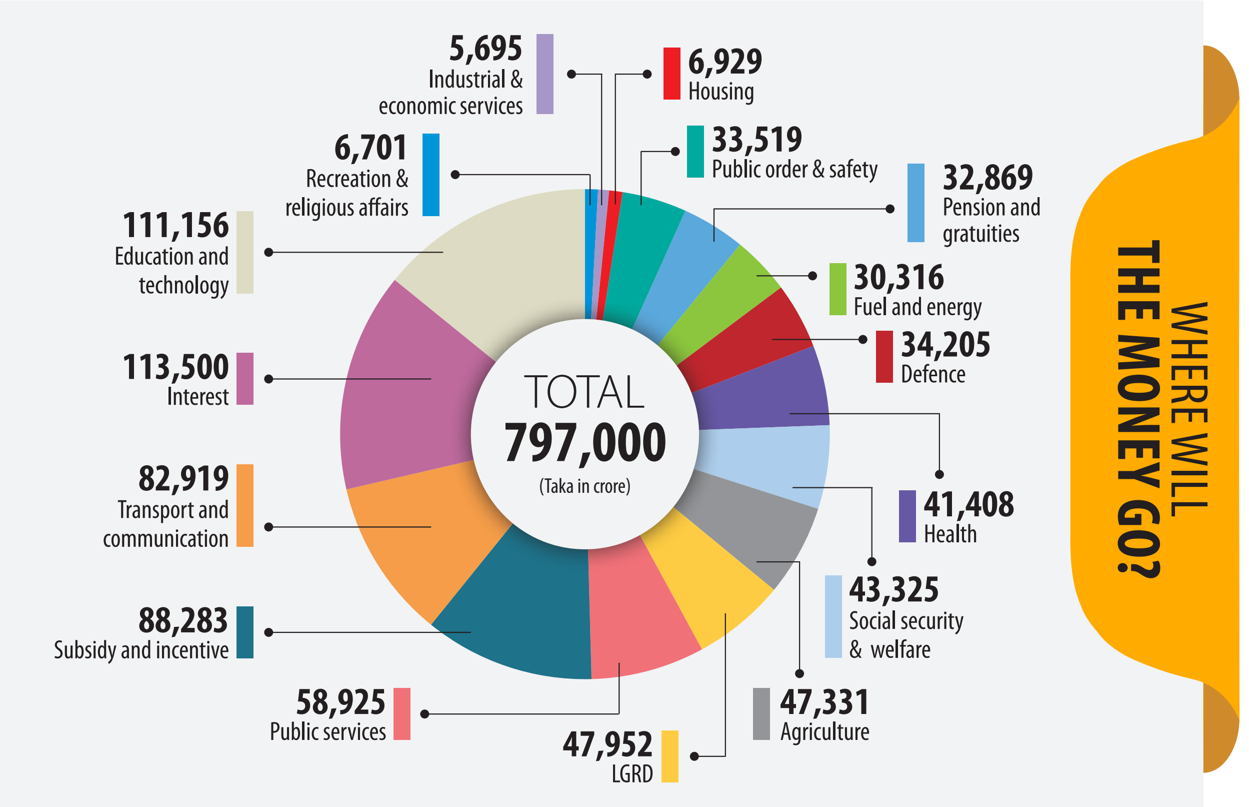
2024-25 BUDGET IN FOCUS





Budget embraces correct strategic direction

ASHIKUR RAHMAN

The proposed national budget for FY25 has remained a widely speculated topic for the people of this country. Bangladesh has been navigating a precarious global economy over the last 24 months, and the economic aftereffects of Covid-19 and the Ukraine-Russia have not only complicated macroeconomic management but created widespread concerns across both domestic and international actors.

This has manifested in international agencies downgrading Bangladesh's credit ratings. For instance, Fitch Ratings recently downgraded Bangladesh's long-term foreign-currency issuer default rating to "B+" from "BB-" owing to the lingering weakening of the country's foreign reserve buffers.

Budget deficit may stoke inflation

MD DEEN ISLAM

The budget for fiscal 2024-25 proposes a total expenditure of Tk 797,000 crore with a total tax revenue of Tk 541,000 crore, resulting in a deficit of Tk 256,000 crore.

While several initiatives in the proposed budget are commendable, there are areas where further improvements could align better with the identified priorities.

The most important challenge highlighted in the budget is inflation, and several policies have been proposed to address it in the coming year. Notably, the size of the proposed budget is realistic rather than ambitious.

The budget deficit is approximately 4.6 percent of the country's gross domestic product (GDP) while it was 4.7 percent, or Tk

No ray of hope for taxpayers

JASIM UDDIN RASEL

While the cost of living remains high, with the inflation rate hovering at over 9 percent throughout the year, no ray of hope came for the common people in the budget declared yesterday. This is upsetting for the low and middle-income groups of society.

Individual taxpayers expected the budget to reduce their tax burden, but the minimum tax-free limit remains the same as that of last year. Moreover, one must pay a minimum tax of Tk 5,000. What can the government do to ease the high inflationary pressure?

On May 14, Treasurer Jim Chalmers in Australia also presented the budget for fiscal year 2024-25. The cost of living is also high there and the first priority was to reduce living

Allocation for transport, energy drops slightly

REJAUL KARIM BYRON and DWAIPAYAN BARUA

Unlike in the previous budgets, the government yesterday proposed reducing the allocations for communications and energy sectors and increasing, albeit slightly, the money for education, healthcare, and social security.

The communications and energy sectors had received high priorities in budgets since the Awami League-led alliance assumed power in 2009.

The expenditure on communications and power and energy had been growing for more than a decade. The government in FY09 spent 7.67 percent of its budget on communications and energy. The spending swelled to 16 percent in the FY22.

At least 16 percent of the outgoing fiscal year's budget went to the communications and energy sectors, but next year it will be 14 percent.

The sectors got Tk 1,22,448 crore in the original budget for FY24. The finance minister yesterday proposed Tk 1,13,235 for the sectors in FY25.

The cuts in allocation actually started in the revised budget for the current fiscal year -- Tk 1,03,558 crore.

However, several mega projects in the communications sector, including Padma Bridge, Bangabandhu Tunnel, Padma Bridge Rail Link, and the elevated expressway in Chattogram were either complete or close to completion. And this could have contributed to the government reducing the allocation.

Amid shrinking foreign currency reserves and an economic downtrend, the policymakers are preferring to go slow on the spending on transport and power and energy.

Economists have also been urging public spending cuts, especially on mega projects, and spending more on widening the social safety net programmes to help people cope in these tough times.

The actual spending on education, healthcare, and social security had been declining over the years.

Energy sector overlooked: experts

ASIFUR RAHMAN

The proposed increase of Tk 93 crore for the energy and mineral resources division in the budget is not enough for the explorations needed to discover domestic gas and other mineral resources, said experts.

In their instant reactions, they, citing the volatile fuel market, said the budget allocation predominantly focused on importing fuel to cover needs when sourcing primary energy like gas and coal from the domestic front was needed.

They also said the huge difference in allocation between the energy and the power division would further add to the price burden on consumers.

The allocation for the Ministry of Power, Energy and Mineral Resources declined 13 percent to Tk 30,317 crore. It was Tk 34,819 crore in the outgoing fiscal year.

The power division is expected to get Tk 29,230 crore, a reduction of Tk 4,595 crore. The energy and mineral resources division is set to receive Tk 1,087 crore, which is Tk 93 crore more than in FY24.

In the budget speech, Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali said BAPEX plans to drill and overhaul 48 wells between January 2023 and December 2025 to explore and extract gas or oil onshore. The budget has a target to drill at least 12 wells this fiscal.

Prof Mohammad Tamim, a former adviser to a caretaker government, said the finance minister's speech doesn't reflect the allocation.

"In the current context, it is clear that local gas exploration and extraction is more important than the import of high-cost LNG and other fuels. But the allocation is miniscule for the energy division."

Prof M Shamsul Alam, energy adviser of the Consumers Association of Bangladesh, echoed Prof Tamim.

He, however, said more allocation to the power sector will ultimately result in increasing the production cost.

"Those who prepare the budget, I guess, don't realise that."

He said the discrimination between the two divisions reflects that they are increasing power generation capacity only without having secured the energy supply chain.

The finance minister said the government has plans to expand the power transmission lines to 24,000 circuit kilometres from 15,246 circuit kilometres now by modernising the grid.

The minister also proposed a special allocation of Tk 100 crore to encourage the development and use of renewable energy. Besides, another Tk 100 crore was proposed to allocate against the blue economy research.

Shafiqul Alam, lead analyst of Bangladesh at the Institute for Energy Economics and Financial Analysis, appreciated the move.

"It's just a start, but it reflects the government's focus on renewables. We hope they will increase it further," he said, adding that there were demands from many groups involved with this sector to reduce the VAT from solar products but there is no mention of this in the budget.

Mobile internet, talktime to be costlier

This measure threatens to escalate the cost burden on consumers and service providers alike, hindering accessibility to mobile services and impeding digital inclusion efforts, according to experts.

"The National Board of Revenue's [NBR's] decision to extend tax exemption by another 3 years for 19 digital services, including the software sector, was commendable," said Fahim Mashroor, a former president of the Bangladesh Association of Software and Information Services (BASIS).

"However, I think imposing 5 percent extra supplementary duty on mobile internet is contradictory with the Smart Bangladesh vision," he said.

"It will further widen the digital divide. Use of smartphones and data by low-income people will be affected. So, the government should reconsider. Supplementary duty can only be imposed on talk time, but not data purchase," he added.

The mobile telecommunication sector is already burdened with high taxes, said Shahed Alam, chief corporate and regulatory officer at Robi Axiata.

An additional increase in the supplementary duty of various services in the mobile telecommunication sector will have an adverse impact on customers as well as the overall consumption of mobile internet services, he said.

Especially when the number of mobile internet users has been declining for the past few quarters, the increased tax burden will further accelerate the negative trend.

"We think that the overall objective of increasing the tax rate will not be attained as it will reduce the amount of total mobile consumer spending," Alam said.

"We must remember that in the journey towards building a Smart Bangladesh, 41 percent of the country's population still remains unconnected to telecommunications services," he added.

Besides, compared to neighbouring countries, data usage in Bangladesh at the consumer level is significantly low. So, there is a huge opportunity to increase revenue from this sector by increasing the number of users, Alam said.

Bangladesh had 19.37 crore active mobile phone connections as of April this year, according to data of the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission.

The Association of Mobile Telecom Operators of Bangladesh, said in a statement that additional supplementary duty on mobile services would further burden the telecom industry and mobile subscribers.

This increase will raise the cost of voice and internet services, putting financial pressure on users, particularly those from marginalised communities, and potentially lead to decreased mobile service usage.

"This reduction in usage will negatively impact businesses and reduce government revenue," it said.

Amtob also said the higher VAT on SIM cards will discourage new users, slowing the growth of mobile connections in the country.

"These moves will result in slowing down the overall digitalisation of the country, which will not only have an impact on GDP growth, but also contradict the Smart Bangladesh vision," it said.

"So, we urge the government to reconsider these duties and take into account budget recommendations the telecom sector provided earlier," the association added.

Govt officials to come under new pension

Soon, we will introduce this system from July 1, 2025, for new recruits of other government institutions," said the finance minister.

He claimed it would be one of the most attractive pension schemes in the world as the government bears the fund management costs and the investment profits are among the depositors.

"If we can bring all citizens above 18 years of age under the Universal Pension Scheme, all will be covered by a well-organised social security structure, which would ensure their security in the future," said Mahmood Ali.

The Universal Pension has 4 schemes. The government has already launched "Prabash" for Bangladeshis working abroad, "Pragati" for private sector employees, "Suraksha" for self-employed citizens and "Samata" for citizens living below the poverty line.

Besides, employees of autonomous, state-owned, and other statutory organisations, along with their subordinates recruited after July 1 this year will be included in the Prottoy scheme, the minister added.

As per the prevailing system, government employees deposit money in the general provident fund (GPF) and those of autonomous and state-run corporations in a contributory provident fund (CPF), with interest rates ranging from 11 to 13 percent.

Speculation is rife that Benazir and his family members had left the country.

Bad loans hit historic high of their Tk 1,221,166 crore in disbursed loans.

Default loans at foreign commercial banks stood at 5.20 percent of their disbursed loans and it was at 13.88 percent at specialised banks, central bank data showed.

Moinul Islam said the default loans issue has become a major problem now.

"The government is not taking adequate action against loan defaulters, and that is why their numbers are continuously rising."

Stressed assets, including written-off and rescheduled loans, stood at Tk 377,922 crore till December 2022, central bank data showed.

NPLs have risen at a time when the government has fixed a target to reduce the volume of bad loans as prescribed by the IMF with its $4.7 billion credit programme.

As per the government's direction, the BB has fixed a target to reduce bad loans at the state-run banks to 10 percent by 2026. The target for private commercial banks is 5 percent.

NO REFORM PROGRAMME

The finance minister yesterday did not mention any specific reform agenda for the banking sector, which is struggling with a high NPL ratio, stressed assets, weak financial health, liquidity challenges and weak regulations of the central bank.

In his budget speech for FY20, former finance minister AHM Mustafa Kamal hinted that the government was taking a number of reforms to bring about discipline in the banking sector.

He would go on to refer to such reforms while announcing the next four budgets, but only a few were ever implemented, leading to the sector becoming even more undisciplined.

On January 10, 2019, Kamal said: "NPL becomes a matter of grave concern, but it is still in a manageable position. From today, NPL will not increase."

His predecessor Abul Maal Abdul Muhith also hinted at forming the country's first banking commission in his budget speech for FY16. However, there was no further discussion regarding that topic after FY20.

Fahmida Khatun, executive director of the Centre for Policy Dialogue, recently said an independent banking commission is needed to ensure good governance in the banking sector.

She added that a goal-specific, time-bound, inclusive, transparent, unbiased and independent citizen's commission on banking should be set up to bring transparency.

A fresh blow to stock

investors for having been on a bear run for a long time.

The DSEX, the benchmark index of the DSE, dropped by around 1,000 points, or 16 percent, in the last three months.

Against this backdrop, this new tax will not only prompt more investors to leave the market but also discourage large investors from coming to invest.

Although the chief of the Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission (BSEC) had earlier assured investors that he had spoken to the National Board of Revenue to keep the tax from coming into effect, this has not happened yet.

Saiful Islam, president of the DSE Brokers Association of Bangladesh, called for reviewing the plan on the capital gains tax as the market was now passing through tough times.

"We are not against the capital gains tax, but the time is not appropriate," he said.

Moreover, he welcomed the move to attract listed companies to offload more shares in the stock market in exchange of getting a corporate tax rate cut.

The finance minister yesterday proposed that listed companies which will offload at least 10 percent of their shares in the stock market and abide by a condition on bank transfers will be able to avail an income tax reduction from 22.5 percent to 20 percent.

The condition is that all types of income, receipts, single transactions of over Tk 5 lakh and all annual expenses and investments exceeding Tk 36 lakh must come about through bank transfers.

If the share offloading is less than 10 percent, the company has to pay income tax at a rate of 25 percent.

However, if this company abides by the bank transfer condition, the income tax rate will be 22.5 percent. Other analysts pointed out that these conditions result in the difference in tax payable by listed and non-listed companies to 2.5 percentage points, but it should have been higher to make it more lucrative to get listed.

Islam also lauded the finance bill allowing black money into the stock market and barring the questioning of investors in this regard, saying it would have a positive impact on the stock market.

Budget shows fault lines

Mahmood Ali underlined the need for raising the tax-to-GDP ratio to 10 percent from 8 percent now and upskilling workers going abroad for jobs at the beginning of his speech. But he was conspicuously silent on the runaway banking sector that counted Tk 182,000 crore in non-performing loans, the highest ever.

His path is laden with moral hazard. The government has once again allowed both individuals and companies to whiten black money by paying a 15 percent tax without facing scrutiny. It undermines the government's fight against deep-rooted corruption at a time when excesses by former government officials are in full view.

"The measures such as 'anti-corruption committees' in every metropolis, district, and upazila and 'public hearing' sessions on corruption in government and semi-government offices seem trivial, if not laughable," said Zahid Hussain, former lead economist of the World Bank's Dhaka office.

One of the key concerns is that the government plans to borrow about Tk 137,000 crore from domestic banks to finance its development spending. This is likely to increase the risk of a crowding-out effect as deposits in the banking sector are likely to grow only by Tk 160,000 crore over the next fiscal year.

"In other words, such borrowing targets will raise fiscal dominance in the overall macroeconomic management and will create pressure for the government to resort to central bank financing if such goals are aggressively pursued," said Ashikur Rahman, principal economist at the Policy Research Institute. "It is advisable to rationalise its borrowing target from the banking sector."

TAX PAIN DEEPENS

While the cost of living is high, lower-income families see no light at the end of the tunnel. The minimum tax-free limit remains unchanged in the most difficult times. The burden complicated by increased VAT rates feels heavier when people desperately seek a cushion from unrelenting inflation.

The minister increased the maximum tax rate to 30 percent from 25 percent now for individual payers, "distributing the burden equitably so that higher income individuals pay a larger share of their income or wealth as income tax than lower-income individuals." The corporate tax rate was lowered by 2.5 percentage points, but analysts questioned the benefits given to companies.

The government introduced a prospective tax system in Bangladesh to help expand trade and boost local and foreign investment. The demand for the new system was long-standing, though. It will create some tax predictability. For that, the proposed tax rate for fiscal 2024-25 will be retained for the 2025-26 assessment year. Currently, the country follows a retrospective tax regime.

"I believe that through a prospective tax system, taxpayers can do proper tax planning and help increase tax compliance," the minister said.

The government finally seems to be waking up to the burden of foreign debt. Bangladesh is facing pressure from two sides simultaneously: capital outflows outstrip inflows of funds. That increases the deficit in financial accounts on the one hand and creates the burden of repayment of foreign loans on the other. The interest payment for foreign loans exceeded $1 billion for the first time. The government now fears if the forecast that the interest rate will decline in the United States and other developed nations goes wrong, the trend of higher payment will continue in the future as well. Bangladesh now estimates that the interest payment for foreign loans will swell to $1.86 billion in FY25.

The new budget provides clarity on what's going on in the economy. But the minister shied away from explaining if the crisis reached gale-force intensity and the worst would be over soon.

Are we survivors of the crisis struggling to pick up the pieces? A period of uncertainty creates panic. We expected more than the sense of how we got into this mess. We wanted a roadmap of how to get out of this.

His silence is deafening.

Tax burden to get heavier, life even harder

There is some good news for individuals, however.

For example, there will be no spike in the amount of minimum tax for FY25. The minimum tax applicable to individual taxpayers in Dhaka North, Dhaka South and Chittagong city corporations will be Tk 5,000. For other cities, it will be Tk 4,000.

For areas outside city corporations, a taxpayer will have to pay Tk 3,000 in tax if their total tax liability stands below the amount.

There will be some breathing space for taxpayers who earn between Tk 11 lakh and Tk 21 lakh.

The wealthy will need to pay higher taxes on their incomes since the NBR seeks to reinstate a 30 percent tax rate on high-income earners after a gap of four years.

Those taking home more than Tk 43 lakh annually will face a 30 percent tax.

However, the rich will also receive some relief since they will not have to pay any additional surcharge on their wealth. The rate of the surcharge tax remains unchanged.

There is also good news for the holders of undeclared wealth, both individuals and corporates. They are again going to enjoy full amnesty and no government agencies will raise any questions about the sources of their wealth.

However, they will have to pay a 15 percent tax on cash, bank deposits, financial securities, or any other forms of wealth. Furthermore, they will have to count a specific tax on properties -- land, buildings, flats, or commercial spaces -- to whiten their wealth.

The amnesty will undoubtedly discourage compliant taxpayers.

Except for the firms that have already taken the initiative to carry out transactions through banks, there is no good news for listed corporate taxpayers.

A firm will qualify for a reduced tax rate if it uses the banking system while receiving funds and making expenses and investments above Tk 5 lakh in each transaction. Bank transfers are mandatory if annual transactions go past Tk 36 lakh.

The rule stays despite calls from firms to relax it. The NBR did not entertain the proposal because it wants to promote cashless transactions, formalise the economy, and collect more taxes. Roughly, half of the economy of Bangladesh is still informal.

As such, the tax authority wants to make it mandatory for hotels, restaurants, motels, hospitals, clinics, and diagnostic centres to furnish it with the proof of submission of returns, known as PSR, in order to obtain and renew licences.

They will face a penalty, which will be no less than Tk 20,000, if they fail to display the PSR in a prominent place within public view.

The good news for individual and corporate taxpayers is that the new tax rates will remain effective for two years, giving some predictability they have long demanded.

The NBR says it wants to retain the proposed tax rates for the years to facilitate the expansion of trade, improve investor confidence in the country's tax system, and encourage local and foreign investments.

The tax administration has termed it as a prospective tax system, saying it will enable taxpayers to do proper tax planning and ensure higher compliance, crucial to raising revenue collections and cutting the government's reliance on loans.

The NBR is going to bring back the 27.5 percent tax rate for the incomes generated by provident, gratuity, superannuation, and pension funds. It is 15 percent presently.

Cooperatives will bear a 20 percent tax rate on their incomes.

For FY25, the NBR has been given the task of collecting Tk 4.80 lakh crore through direct and indirect taxes. This is 11 percent higher than the original target set for FY24 and 17 percent more than the revised target for the outgoing financial year.

As usual, it will rely on indirect taxes such as VAT and supplementary duty, to reach the goal. Of course, the bid to increase SD on cigarettes and tobacco products is a laudable initiative in view of the health risks they pose.

In order to pull off the collection target, the administration has trimmed the list of exemptions.

For instance, visitors to amusement parks will face a 15 percent VAT in FY25, double the amount they are subjected to in FY24.

And if the new couple plan to buy a holiday package from a tour operator, they will have to accept higher costs because the VAT exemption for the tour operators' service is coming to an end. This means holidaymakers will have to count a 15 percent VAT.

If the couple shelve the plan of holidaymaking and choose instead to take a short ride on the metro rail, a new attraction, they will face higher ticket fares as the NBR is set to lift the VAT exemption on ticket prices, making commuting less cheerful from July 1.

"The domestic borrowing target of Tk 160,900 crore will exacerbate pressure on the taka and dollar liquidity in the banking system and hinder the possibility of achieving the ambitious 6.75 percent GDP growth target. Nor will it help soften inflation," he said.

Fahmida Khatun, executive director at the Centre for Policy Dialogue, said changes in the tax rates seem positive.

"But 2.5 percent of the budget shortfall will come from bank loans. In that case, it will be more difficult for businessmen to get bank loans."

In her opinion, the medium-term macroeconomic indicators given in the budget are not realistic. The targets for GDP, investment, inflation, and foreign exchange do not reflect the reality. These are attempts to meet IMF targets.

"Overall, given the challenges against which the budget was announced, we expected this budget to be quite innovative, creative and bold, but it did not happen. A traditional budget cannot provide any solutions in challenging times," she said.

M Masrur Reaz, chairman of Policy Exchange of Bangladesh, said the highest priority of the budget should be stabilisation of the macroeconomic challenges. From that perspective, the size of the budget is okay. But at a time when inflationary pressure is already biting both citizens and businesses hard, increase in tax rates is not the right step.

"Increasing tax rate does not allow or does not often lead to increase in revenue. Rather, increasing tax base, addressing leakage, reducing tax expenditure, finding new sources of tax are required to increase tax revenue. But we don't see that effort," he added.

Salehuddin Ahmed, former governor of Bangladesh Bank, said there are three major challenges right now -- higher inflation, shrinking foreign reserves, and energy crisis.

"These three challenges are affecting our overall economy. As a result, the macroeconomy is very unstable. In this scenario, I think the size of the budget is realistic. But whatever the size, I have some questions about government spending."

The budget deficit is huge, which means the cost should have been reduced, he said.

"For example, what is the need for 1,258 projects under the Annual Development Programme? If the Annual Development Programme is cut down, the deficit will come down."

He said 40 percent of the budget will be spent for the administration. Besides, after spending on other less important sectors, it will be seen that there is no money for development.

BUSINESSES' REACTION

According to a number of businesspersons, considering the various global and domestic economic challenges, the proposed budget is time-befitting.

"In particular, the size of the budget is limited to Tk 7.97 lakh crore. The rate at which the budget has seen an increasing trend in the past few years has not been observed this time. This may give some relief to the taxpayers," said Asif Ibrahim, chairman of Chittagong Stock Exchange PLC.

He also said the revenue collection target (Tk 5.41 lakh crore) may be somewhat challenging due to the current macroeconomic crisis.

"The inflation control target has been fixed at 6.5 percent. But considering the current global economic situation, how inflation will be brought down from 9.30 percent is still not clear in the budget framework," he said.

FBCCI President Mahbubul Alam said the budget is realistic and implementable.

However, he called on the government to fix the personal tax limit at Tk 4.5 lakh instead of Tk 3.5 lakh.

Ashraf Ahmed, president, Dhaka Chamber of Commerce and Industry, said the government has tried to increase the revenue collection. "Import duty on almost 30 essential products has been reduced, which is a good move."

He hailed the government's bank borrowing target which, although still high, is almost 11.82 percent lower than the outgoing fiscal year.

Abdul Matlub Ahmad, former president of FBCCI, said there is no clear message in the budget to reduce the price of essentials to give relief to the common people from the inflationary pressure.

He stressed the need for subsidy on essential products, which is absent in the proposed budget.

Humayun Rashid, president of the International Business Forum of Bangladesh (IBFB), said the proposed budget does not address the high cost of doing business amid shortage of dollar due to shrinking forex reserves.

Syed Ershad Ahmed, president, American Chamber of Commerce in Bangladesh, stressed the need for revising individuals' tax-free income limit to provide a cushion against the rising inflation.

'Unethical, unjust and unacceptable'

"As the country has been allowing the scope for years, many people are evading taxes and waiting for such opportunities. This is a huge loss for the economy," said Mustafizur.

Dr Iftekharuzzaman, executive director of the Transparency International Bangladesh, said the provision was unjustifiable.

"It is distinctly contradictory to the Constitution, which criminalises illegitimate income."

It further violates the constitution as it is discriminatory against honest income earners, who are subjected to up to 30 percent tax, he added.

As such, black money holders are practically being rewarded for corruption as they are being offered the rate of only 15 percent.

Echoing those sentiments, Muhammad Abdul Mazid, a former NBR chairman, said the provision is totally illogical.

"Honest taxpayers will be discouraged and will not want to come under the tax net. Such a provision will instigate corruption and deepen tax injustice."

This initiative will also not be politically helpful as the masses will believe that the ruling party is allowing the wrongdoers to continue with their misdeeds. "It's totally in contrast with the government's agenda," Mustafizur Rahman said.

Iftekharuzzaman added: "The provision is against the ruling party's lofty commitments contained in their manifesto in support of so-called zero tolerance against corruption often repeated by those in power, including the head of the government.

"In other words, the government is in reality advising people to be corrupt with a guarantee of impunity. The government should stop licencing corruption now and forever."

Additionally, the government wants to provide the opportunity for companies to correct any "errors" made while submitting their income tax returns.

Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali said the introduction of a data verification system created legal complications over the disclosure of undisclosed income and assets of various companies.

"In this situation, I propose to add a clause on tax incentives in the Income Tax Act with a view to providing taxpayers with an opportunity to correct this error in their income tax returns and to increase the flow of money into the mainstream economy," Ali said in his budget speech.

A leader of the Dhaka Chamber of Commerce and Industry opined that no illegal income should be legalised. However, if any reasonable issues remain, it should be taken into account.

There is no accurate data on how much black money there is in Bangladesh.

The Bangladesh Economic Association estimated that the accumulated amount would be Tk 13,253,500 crore, said Prof Aynul Islam, general secretary of the platform.

In a report published in April, the World Bank also criticised the existing government scope to legalise undisclosed wealth through investments, saying such policies demotivate honest and regular taxpayers and encourage tax evaders to continue their misdeeds.

"Also, these policies have failed to earn a significant amount of revenue."

Old malaise flaring up

use of the government's fiscal space.

Unfortunately, the fiscal space is getting increasingly squeezed. As a result, the government is resorting to huge borrowing from both domestic and foreign sources. Thus, debt management will be a major issue in FY25.

THE FAULT LINES

The national budget for the FY25 once again brings to the fore the fault lines of the country's recent development experiences.

First, over the last decade and a half, the growth trajectory was deprived of incremental private investment. The private investment-GDP ratio has remained stagnant at around 22-23 percent.

The medium-term budgetary framework (MTBF) puts the targets concerned for FY25 at a very ambitious level, i.e. more than 27 percent of the GDP.

The second fault line has been the stagnating revenue-GDP ratio, which remains less than 10 percent. Indeed, this indicator, including its tax component, has experienced a decline in recent years. However, due to the low level of implementation of public expenditure programmes, the budget deficit has remained manageable.

Although the budget deficit has been projected at 4.6 percent of the GDP, the net foreign financing of that would be around 40 percent. On the other hand, hardly any revenue surplus will be available to underwrite the Annual Development Plan (ADP).

The budget for FY25 has not been very ambitious in this regard as the revenue-GDP target has been set at a modest 9.7 percent.

The third fault line of the mid-term development trajectory emerged due to the marginal public investment in the health sector (less than 1 percent of the GDP), education sector (less than 2 per cent of the GDP), and social protection (less than 1 percent of the GDP).

Sadly, the budget for FY25 also fails to find additional resources for these sectors. This has happened due to overly physical infrastructure-driven public investment. This has been done in the pursuit of visible indicators of progress.

Unfortunately, the ADP allocations for FY25 does not indicate any rethink in this regard.

The fourth and final fault line in the ongoing national development efforts relates to growing inequality in the country. Increasing inequality is manifested in asset accumulation, income flow, and consumption of food and non-food goods and services.

The budget for FY25 does make a number of promises to ease the situation in the face of soaring inflation. These include tariff rationalisation for a set of consumables, increasing the number of social protection beneficiaries, and distributing food items under government management. But the revenue efforts are focused on indirect taxes affecting across income groups.

It seems all these fault lines are creating structural challenges for macro-economic management as well as implementation of public expenditure programmes.

Regrettably, the budget for FY25 does not make headway in this regard.

The author is a distinguished fellow at the Centre for Policy Dialogue.

Budget unlikely to make dent in soaring inflation

stagnated or declined.

But that was hardly reflected in the budget.

Funds equivalent to about 2.43 percent of the GDP were allocated for social safety net schemes for FY25 compared to 2.52 percent in the current year.

Still, the allocated amount increased to Tk 136,026 crore from Tk 126,272 crore.

The government also increased the number of beneficiaries by around 4.5 lakh.

However, the allowance per person remained almost the same, with the sole exception being the programme for widows, which has been boosted from Tk 500 to Tk 550 per month.

And although the allotment rose by around Tk 10,000 crore, more than Tk 9,600 crore of that will have to be spent on pension management.

So, poor and marginalised people will not really benefit from this incremental increase, Razzaque said.

Furthermore, the government has targeted to raise Tk 137,500 crore from the banking sector to meet the budget deficit.

In the budget for the current year, the government had targeted to raise Tk 132,395 crore from the banking sector. However, it revised this to Tk 155,935 crore to meet its budget deficit amid lower revenue.

If the government similarly revises up the amount it borrows from the banking sector in FY25 and the central bank prints money to narrow the deficit, inflationary pressure may be fuelled.

The Consumer Price Index grew by an average of 9.73 percent in the first 11 months of the current fiscal while it was 8.64 percent during the same period a year prior, showed data of the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics.

In fiscal 2022-23, the average inflation rate was 9.02 percent, far higher than the average of 6 percent in recent years.

Such elevated levels of inflation have forced many people to cut down on consumption.

The World Bank has projected that the decline in purchasing power has led to the inclusion of many among the new poor.

This means the country may witness challenges in reducing the poverty rate despite its previously stellar performance in this regard.

So, economists urged the government to cut spending and make effective the contractionary monetary policy, which was announced recently.

Some good news is that the government cut the source tax for rice, wheat, potato, onion, garlic, lentils, ginger, turmeric, dry chilli, pulses, flour and some other food items from 2 percent to 1 percent.

That should create the opportunity to reduce the prices of these products. However, whether the benefit will reach the consumers will depend on suppliers and producers that control the prices of these products.

Three killed, 25 hurt in road accidents

STAR REPORT

Three people were killed and 25 injured in road accidents in two districts yesterday, according to reports from our correspondents.

In Tangail, a pickup driver and his helper were killed as the vehicle hit a truck from behind on Bangabandhu Bridge East Link Road in the Analiabari area.

Driver Shipon Ali, 40, from Kushtia; and his helper Muhammad Aslam, 55, from Bagerhat died on the spot.

Police handed over the bodies to the families.

Meanwhile, at least 25 passengers were injured as a bus fell into a ditch beside Tangail-Mymensingh road at Shahpur in Ghatail upazila. The accident happened as the driver lost his control over the steering.

In Thakurgaon, a woman was killed when a truck ran her over while she was walking along Ranishankoil-Pirganj road at Patgaon village in Ranishankoil upazila.

HC questions legality of iron cage at courtrooms

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday questioned the legality of a rule that allows the authorities concerned to install metal cages where accused persons stand during case proceedings in courtrooms across the country.

Rule 82 of the Criminal Rules and Orders (Practice and Procedure of Subordinate Courts), 2009 has laid out the provision for establishing metal cages for the accused in every court so that no prisoner can escape from there.

Yesterday, the HC issued a rule asking the government to explain why the provisions of rule 82 of the Criminal Rules and Orders should not be declared contradictory to article 35(5) of the constitution as "inhuman and degrading treatment".

The HC bench of Justice Mustafa Zaman Islam and Justice SM Masud Hossain Dolon issued the rule following a supplementary writ petition filed by 10 Supreme Court lawyers. The petitioners' lawyer Mohammad Shishir Manir told the court that the provision of Rule 82 of the Criminal Rules and Orders is being used as a vehicle to inhuman and degrading treatment to the accused.

And this goes against the spirit of the constitution.

UPAZILA POLLS

4th phase sees lowest turnout

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The overall turnout in the fourth phase of the upazila polls on Wednesday was 34.77 percent -- the lowest since the 2009 elections.

This was also the lowest turnout among the four phases of polls so far this year.

The Election Commission data shows that turnout in the third phase of the polls, held on May 29, was 36.24 percent; in the second phase of polls, held on May 21, it was 37.61 percent. And in the first phase, held on May 8, it was 36.10 percent.

During the 2009 upazila polls, 70.57 percent of voters had cast their ballots. This figure then dropped to 61.23 percent in 2014.

In the first phase of elections across 78 upazilas in 2019, the turnout was 43.31 percent. In the subsequent four phases, the turnouts were 41.25 percent, 41.41 percent, 36.54 percent, and 38.62 percent, respectively. The average turnout was 40 percent.

In the fourth phase of this year's upazila polls, the average turnout where voters used electronic voting machines to cast votes was lower than in places where ballot paper was used.

In Wednesday's polls, 29.70 percent of voters cast their votes in six upazilas where EVMs were used. Whereas, turnout was 35.60 percent in 53 upazilas where ballot paper was used.

EC Additional Secretary Ashok Kumar Debnath said a thorough analysis will be needed to know the reason behind the difference in turnouts.

In the fourth phase, Bhola's Manpura witnessed the highest turnout of 60.68 percent, while Naogaon Sadar recorded the lowest at 20.87 percent. Voting in both the upazilas was conducted using paper ballots. Similar to the three previous phases, Awami League men won the lion's share of chairman positions during the fourth phase as well.

Turnout in the fourth phase of the polls held on June 5 was 34.77 percent; third phase of the polls, held on May 29, was 36.24 percent; in the second phase of polls, held on May 21, it was 37.61 percent. And in the first phase, held on May 8, it was 36.10 percent.

Though the ruling party did not field candidates this year, grassroot AL leaders ran for chairman posts as independents.

BNP boycotted the elections, saying polls cannot be held in a free and fair manner under the incumbent Election Commission. The party also expelled many grassroots leaders for running in the elections.

The sixth upazila parishad elections were held in four phases this year.

However, 22 upazilas where elections were postponed due to Cyclone Remal, will see elections be held on June 9.

'It's an anti-Bangladesh budget'

Says Fakhrul

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday termed the proposed national budget "anti-Bangladesh", saying it contains new schemes to facilitate the embezzlement of public money by the ruling party-backed looters.

"The government has become looters. The budget crafted by these looters seems to be aimed at further indulging in plundering. I believe that fresh plans have been devised in the budget for embezzlement (of public money)," he said.

Talking to reporters on the budget in front of the BNP Chairperson's Gulshan office, Fakhrul also said the worst aspect of the proposed budget is the lack of any direction towards new job creation.

"The entire budget seems to be formulated for mega projects, mega theft, and corruption. So, I not only call this so-called budget anti-people but also anti-Bangladesh," he observed.

Earlier in the day, Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali placed a Tk 7,97,000 crore proposed national budget for 2024-25 in parliament.

A bridge without approach road

SAHIDUL ISLAM NIRAB, Jamalpur

A 96-meter-long bridge over the Fatika canal in Jamalpur's Islampur remains unused over a year since its inauguration due to the absence of an approach road.

The bridge, inaugurated on January 3 last year by Minister for Religious Affairs Md Faridul Haque Khan, has seen no further development, locals alleged.

Local Government Engineering Department (LGED) spent over Tk 5.68 crore on the bridge, constructed by Chowdhury Enterprises.

However, without a connecting road on the west side, the bridge remains inaccessible and local farmers have been using the bridge as a threshing floor.

A visit to the area revealed that a 500 to 600-meter stretch of connecting road is missing, forcing people to use a muddy path beside the bridge to cross the canal.

Locals claim that around 50,000 people would benefit if the roads were constructed.

Anshar Ali, a farmer, said, "With no approach road on one side, cars can't access the bridge, so we use it for threshing paddy since it's left idle."

Upazila Assistant Engineer Aminul Haque cited landowner's objections as a challenge in constructing the road.

"We hope construction works of the approach road will start soon," he said.

"The department concerned is processing everything. The road work will begin soon if funds are allocated," Haque added.

FEUD OVER WINDOW SEAT

Train passenger punched to death

STAR REPORT

A passenger was killed after he was punched by another following an altercation over taking window seat in a Dhaka-bound train at Narsingdi Railway Station yesterday morning.

The deceased is 42-year-old Jhumor Kanti Baul, a garment worker in Dhaka.

The incident occurred around 7:00am on the Dhaka Mail Express train, said Sub-inspector Shahidullah. Police detained Monjur Mia, 55, from the train at Kamalapur Railway Station in Dhaka.

As the train reached Narsingdi Railway Station, and the passenger from the window seat disembarked, Monjur attempted to move to that seat. Jhumor, who was waiting at the station, placed his bag on the seat through the window, the SI said.

An altercation started when Jhumor boarded the train. During the argument, Monjur punched and kicked Jhumor, leaving him critically injured.

Vacancy Announcement

Palli Karma-Sahayak Foundation (PKSF), an apex development organization, was established by the Government of Bangladesh in 1990 for sustainable poverty reduction through employment generation. Since its inception, PKSF has been implementing various poverty-alleviating and employment-generating programs and projects through its Partner Organizations (POs) all over the country.

PKSF has been implementing a 5-year-long project titled 'Sustainable Microenterprise and Resilient Transformation (SMART)' jointly financed by the World Bank and PKSF since August 2023. The objective of the project is to increase resource-efficient and resilient green growth of the microenterprises (MEs).

PKSF hereby invites online applications from the eligible candidates for the following posts under the SMART project:

SN	Name of the Posts	No. of the Post	Consolidated Monthly Salary (BDT)
1	Environment and Natural Resource Management Specialist	01	2,20,000/-
2	Resource-Efficient and Cleaner Production (RECP) Specialist	01	2,20,000/-
3	Assistant Program Manager (Information and Communication Technology)	01	1,20,000/-

The employees will be recruited initially for one year with the opportunity for annual performance-based renewal during the project period. Interested candidates who fulfill the requirements may submit online applications by 23 June 2024. Please visit the PKSF Website (www.pksf.org.bd) for detailed job descriptions and instructions to apply.

Only shortlisted candidates will be contacted. PKSF is an equal-opportunity employer. Any kind of persuasion will be treated as disqualification of the candidate. PKSF reserves the right to cancel this recruitment process without assigning any reason whatsoever.

*Women are highly encouraged to apply.

BUDGET REACTION

It's practical and pro-people. Issues like controlling price, employment opportunities and social safety nets have been prioritised.

OBAIDUL QUADER
AL General Secretary

This budget is designed for looting. I would not call this budget anti-people; it is an anti-Bangladesh budget.

MIRZA FAKHRUL
BNP Secretary General

Indirect taxation will increase the tax burden on people. Bangladesh will face a major economic crisis after this budget.

GM QUADER
Leader of Opposition

Taxes and prices have been increased in various ways. The low-income people will bear the brunt of corruption and looting of the rich because of the budget.

PROPOSED BUDGET FOR EDUCATION

Lowest in 16 years in terms of GDP

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR

Despite repeated calls from educationists to increase the budget for education sector, the proposed allocation this fiscal year is still far behind the expected level.

The allocation of Tk 94,710 crore for education is only 1.69 percent of GDP (gross domestic product), which is the lowest in the last 16 years.

It is way less than Unesco's recommendation of four to six percent allocation of the GDP for the sector.

Countries like Nepal and Myanmar are ahead of Bangladesh in terms of spending on education. Nepal spent 3.6 percent and Myanmar 2.1 percent of their GDP on education in 2022, according to World Bank data.

"It's nothing but a usual budget. I'm frustrated," Manzoor Ahmed, emeritus professor at BRAC University, told The Daily Star.

While placing the budget yesterday, Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali set aside Tk 44,108 crore for Secondary and Higher Education Division, Tk 10,602 crore for Technical and Madrasa Education Division, and Tk 38,819 crore for Primary and Mass Education Ministry.

FISCAL YEAR	EDUCATION BUDGET IN CRORE TK	ALLOCATION IN % OF GDP	ALLOCATION IN % OF BUDGET
2020-21	66,401	2.09	11.69
2021-22	69,953	2.01	11.58
2022-23	81,449	1.83	12.01
2023-24	88,162	1.76	11.57
2024-25	94,710	1.69	11.88

The allocation is 11.88 percent of the total outlay. However, in terms of amount, the allocation rose by 7.42 percent from the outgoing year.

But when it comes to the share of GDP, which is Tk 55,97,414 crore, the allocation stands at 1.69 percent.

In the fiscal year of 2009-10, the maiden year for the Awami League's four consecutive terms, the education sector's allocation was 2.04 percent of GDP.

The allocation went up to 2.49 percent of the GDP in the 2016-17 fiscal year and then started decreasing over the past eight years.

Manzoor Ahmed, also the founding director of BRAC Institute of Educational Development, said, "The gap between projection and actual allocation shows that there is an inconsistency between planning and implementation -- such a gap upsets the total planning."

Educationists expected that the government would emphasise downsizing the large classroom size, reducing the student-teacher ratio and enhancing teachers' capacity.

"But we don't see any significant moves regarding the matter," he added.

The Centre for Policy Dialogue, in an analysis of the national budget for FY2023-24, said on average, at least 35 LDCs (least-developed countries) spent two percent or more of their GDP on education from 2016 to 2022.

In the same period, Bangladesh's average education expenditure was 1.8 percent of GDP, it said.

Share of the poor dwarfed by others

The poor signed up with the National Pension Authority were allocated another Tk 150 crore.

In comparison, government retiree pensions were allocated Tk 36,580 crore and savings scheme interest payments were allocated a further Tk 8,828.32 crore.

This year, the allocation for the social safety net programme rose to Tk 1,36,026 crore from Tk 1,26,272 crore in FY 2023-24.

The Tk 9,754 crore increase makes the social safety net account for 17.06 percent of the national budget, as per the finance minister's speech.

However, if pensions and savings scheme interests are excluded from the programme's budget, its share in the national budget gets yanked down to roughly 11 percent.

"This increment reflects a substantial commitment to enhancing social protection programmes across various vulnerable groups," said Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali in his inaugural budget speech in parliament yesterday.

Another 2 lakh more senior citizens will be given Tk 600 per month this year, raising the number of beneficiaries from 58.01 lakh to 60.01 lakh. In addition, the number of widows and abandoned women beneficiaries will rise from 25.75 lakh to 27.75 lakh.

However, the Centre for Policy Dialogue in a research last year found that an estimated 33 lakh old people and 25 lakh widows eligible for assistance were not covered by the programme, showing just how many more beneficiaries require coverage not afforded by the paltry rise this year.

According to the FY24-25 budget, the number of disability allowance recipients will increase from 29 lakh to 32.34 lakh, while the stipend for students with disabilities will rise from Tk 950 to Tk 1,050 at the higher secondary level.

Meanwhile, the number of beneficiaries under the mother and child support programme increased by over a lakh this year to 16.55 lakh.

Currently, 6,880 individuals from the Hijra community receive allowances and this will increase to 12,629 beneficiaries.

However, in spite of these rises, the proportion of the social safety net programme as a percentage of the gross domestic product dipped from last year's 2.55 percent to 2.43 percent in FY24-25.

If government employee pensions and savings scheme interest payments are discounted from the programme, the share further dips down to being 1.62 percent of the GDP.

This falls short of the National Social Security strategy's aim to have the programme's budget be three percent of the GDP.

Breakdown of money spent over 13 years

FROM PAGE 4

In fiscal year 2009-2010, its actual expenditure was Tk 23 crore, and in FY21 this went up to Tk 32 crore, leaving it only Tk 9 crore richer. It got a significant bump in FY23, spending Tk 121 crore.

The civil aviation and tourism ministry's expenditure saw a 15,527.27 percent rise between 2009 and 2022.

This 150-fold increase made it the government body whose spending rose the fastest in 13 years.

In 2009, it spent only Tk 33 crore, while in 2022 its expenditure saw a sharp rise to Tk 5,157 crore.

Over the past 13 years, the ministry has expanded airport services, built runways and invested in the third terminal of Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport.

The second fastest growth was in the science and technology ministry's spending, courtesy of the Rooppur Nuclear Power Plant.

Between 2009 and 2022, its expenditure grew nearly 5,000 percent.

The Liberation War ministry's share of the national budgetary expenditure increased 10 times in 13 years, making it the ministry whose slice of the pie fattened the highest number of times.

Between 2009 and 2022, the ministry's expenditure grew by 4,713 percent, from Tk 163 crore to Tk 7,845 crore.

This is followed by the religious affairs ministry, whose share of the nation's pie increased nine times in 13 years.

The health ministry, the food division and the Election Commission saw their share of total national expenditures rise only four times in this period.

The sector with the lowest expenditure in FY23 as a proportion of the GDP was the industry and economic services, which includes the labour and expatriate welfare ministries.

The sector had the lowest spending compared to the GDP in FY10 as well -- being only 0.11 percent, and in FY23 it went further down to 0.08 percent.

The expenditure for the sector of social security and welfare as a proportion of the GDP also went down in 13 years, from one percent in 2009-2010 to 0.84 percent in FY23.

As a share of the GDP, expenditure in the public services saw the highest growth -- from 0.87 percent in 2009-2010 to more than double of that in FY23 (2.02 percent).

This sector includes departments like the prime minister and president's offices; the parliament; Election Commission secretariat; the public administration and foreign ministries; the divisions of finance, economic relations, planning, internal resources, statistics, implementation, monitoring and evaluation; and the cabinet.

Historic Six-point Day today

BSS, Dhaka

The historic Six-point Day, marking the demand for autonomy for the then East Pakistan, will be observed today across the country.

On June 7 in 1966, Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman launched a massive movement against the misrule of the Pakistanis on the basis of the 6-point demand, the Magna Carta of the Bangalees, demanding autonomy for the then East Pakistan.

Eleven people, including Manu Mian, Shafique and Shamsul Haque, were gunned down by the police and paramilitary EPR on June 7, 1966 in Dhaka and Narayanganj during a hartal called for the release of Bangabandhu and other leaders detained for launching the six-point movement against the then barbaric ruling clique.

President Mohammed Shahabuddin and Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina paid rich tributes to the memories of Bangabandhu and all who embraced martyrdom for implementing the demand.

Different socio-political organisations have taken elaborate programmes to mark the day.

102, the new hotline of fire service

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Fire Service and Civil Defence has introduced a new hotline number, 102, for any fire related emergency service.

The hotline has been launched as it is easy to memorise than the existing land phone number and current hotline number 16163, says a press release.

Users of all operators except T&T landline will be able to call at 102 to get services.

HEALTH BUDGET

Utilising full allocation main challenge for govt

AHMED DEEPTO

Although allocation for the health sector has increased in the proposed budget for the 2024-25 fiscal year, the major challenge for the government will be to ensure its proper utilisation.

Notably, a significant portion of health funds remains unspent every year.

The government needs to develop the capacity to spend money efficiently so that people get the benefit of the allocation, said experts.

- Allocation for this year Tk 41,407cr
- It's 5.19pc of total budget
- Last year's allocation was Tk 38,051cr

Finance Minister AH Mahmood Ali yesterday proposed an allocation of Tk 41,407 crore for the health sector for FY25, which is 5.19 percent of the total budget.

"We have seen in past years that the health ministry fails to spend the entire allocation. They should spend the entire budget efficiently. This will be their main challenge," said Prof Abdul Hamid of Institute of Health Economics at Dhaka University.

As of April of the outgoing fiscal year, Health Services Division of the ministry could spend only 37.33 percent, while the ministry's Medical Education and Family Welfare Division spent 39.82 percent of their respective allocations.

The total allocation for health sector in the outgoing fiscal year was Tk 38,051 crore.

The government raised special duty on over 200 medical devices from one percent to 10 percent in the proposed budget. This could increase medical service costs for patients.

However, there will be some comfort too, as the finance minister proposed reducing tax on dengue test kits and cancer treatment equipment.

In addition, the duty on filters and circuits used for kidney dialysis, alongside the duty on raw materials for cancer medicines, has been reduced.

Like previous years, the minister also proposed a special allocation of Tk 2,000 crore to tackle health risks.

He also proposed an allocation of Tk 100 crore for the "Integrated Health Science Research and Development Fund," considering the importance of basic and applied research in medical sciences.

Prof Hamid termed these special allocations positive initiatives.

"The size of this year's budget has increased, which is good. But the problem is that the health budget shrinks following revision after six to nine months. In the last fiscal year, the revised budget decreased by about 16 percent.

"We hope it will not happen this time," he said, saying, the health ministry has to spend the allocated money efficiently.

Another mostly disappointing budget

Budget admits we are in a crisis, but offers no direction out of it

The finance minister on Thursday unveiled the country's 54th budget amounting to Tk 7,97,000 crore for FY2024-25, which is 4.6 percent bigger than the current one. The increase in budget size, however, is much lower than the year-on-year average spike of 11 percent seen in the last five years, illustrating the monetary constraints the government is facing as well as some of the realities of the crisis which requires a certain degree of belt-tightening. The main aim of this budget had to be the restoration of macroeconomic stability, reduction of inflation, and containment of ongoing pressure on our foreign currency reserves, which the finance minister himself admitted. On top of that, the finance minister emphasised the need to address corruption but then offered a facility to whiten black money, which is a contradiction in itself.

It means that firms and individuals with black money will again have the opportunity to legalise their undeclared wealth without having to face any questions about the source of their income, paying a 15 percent tax, whereas people belonging to the highest tax slab will have to pay a 30 percent tax, compared to 25 percent last year. This once again raises the question: why is the budget favouring corrupt people and companies over honest and hardworking individuals? And why are our laws continually being formulated in a way that makes honest individuals lose out to corrupt ones? It would not be far-fetched for honest taxpayers to ask, what is the point of them paying taxes every year when those who are evading taxes can get away with paying a much lesser amount on their undeclared income to bring it into the mainstream.

As far as allocations are concerned, while on the one hand the government has had to reign in its expenditure, it is disappointing to see, on the other hand, where the government's priorities truly lie. They certainly do not lie in the education or healthcare sectors, which is worrying. The allocation for education actually went down from 1.76 percent of GDP in the last budget to 1.69 percent in the proposed one—the lowest in the last 16 years. If the government is really looking to create a "Smart Bangladesh," how can such a low allocation be justified? And the same applies for the healthcare sector, whose budgetary allocation went slightly up from 5 percent of GDP in the last budget to 5.19 percent of GDP in the upcoming one—a negligible increase. In a country having one of the highest out-of-pocket healthcare expenditures in the world and experiencing soaring inflation simultaneously, healthcare costs have become a massive burden for the people. Therefore, the sector deserved a much greater allocation (and attention) from the government than what it received.

However, on a more positive note, it is good to see the government allocate Tk 2,000 crore for health emergencies, which we hope would be used properly to provide some relief to struggling families. Additionally, we are encouraged to see the government allocate Tk 1,000 crore on health research, similar to the current budget's allocation. However, questions remain over the ministry's ability to utilise its budget as, according to a review, there was a significant decrease in budgetary use compared to the allocation in the last fiscal year. Experts have urged that there should not be a repeat of that going forward. So, it is vital that the government increases the capacity of the health sector—as well as the education sector—to actually absorb and properly utilise their respective budgetary allocations.

The budget deficit this time is historically lower than other budgets in the last decade. This gives the impression that the authorities are concerned about financing the budgetary deficit, as well as servicing the debt. It shows that the authorities have taken a very practical decision. But again, the way the allocations have been made shows that the authorities have failed to take into account what common people are most concerned about. And while the government's growth estimates seem to be more practical compared to previous, overly optimistic approximations, the setting of a 6.5 percent inflation target seems completely oblivious to the current reality, with the average inflation remaining at 9 percent for the past two years.

These contradictions and inadequacies, as well as the lack of specific strategies to address what has been the worst economic crisis facing the country since the Covid-19 pandemic, show that even though the budget admits to the existence of this crisis, it does not provide any real way out of it. And here is where it falls woefully short of what the country needed at this moment. We hope that before giving its final seal of approval on the budget, the government will genuinely take these and other concerns raised by experts into account.

What's in the NEW BUDGET?

Yesterday, the new finance minister presented the proposal for the national budget for FY2024-25 at a time when Bangladesh's economy is under tremendous pressure. The finance ministry deserves credit for undertaking the humongous task of preparing a budget during an economically challenging time. However, the proposed budget falls short of fully assessing the depth of the problem and making realistic targets, andthus suggesting practical measures to solve some of the problems.

How prudent is the fiscal framework?

With a size of Tk 7,97,000 crore, the FY2024-25 budget is equivalent to 14.2 percent of the GDP, which is the same as the revised budget of the outgoing fiscal year.

The gap between expenditure and revenue is large, which is common in Bangladesh. Since the revenue target is set at Tk 5,41,000 crore, or 9.7 percent of GDP, the government has to rely on both domestic and foreign sources. However, given the high inflationary pressure over the last two years and the resource constraints the country faces, it would have been prudent to keep the budget deficit low, somewhere between three or four percent of GDP, even though traditionally it has been set around five percent in the annual budget. In FY2023-24, the budget deficit was set at 5.2 percent of GDP, which has now been revised to 4.7 percent. In the upcoming fiscal year, it has been set at 4.6 percent. Of this deficit, 2.9 percent will be financed from domestic sources, and 1.9 percent from foreign sources.

A large amount of domestic funding will come from bank loans by the government, which is set to be Tk 1,37,500 crore—2.5 percent of the budget deficit. In the revised budget of FY2023-24, the amount of bank loans has been increased to Tk 1,55,935 crore. In the outgoing fiscal year, there was low demand for bank loans by the private sector. But the government's consistent dependence on the banking sector will create the crowding out effect for the private sector at some point. Besides, the government's interest payment against the bank loans continues to increase.

So, the proposed budget falls short of taking a pragmatic fiscal consolidation through restrained spending and meeting the expenses through higher domestic revenue collection. Of course, the target for revenue generation has been increased slightly, from 9.5 percent of GDP in the revised budget in the outgoing fiscal year to 9.7 percent for in the upcoming fiscal year.

How realistic are the key targets?

According to the finance ministry, the total revenue collection recorded a 13.3 percent growth during the July-January period of FY2023-24. This is a considerable improvement from the corresponding figure of FY2022-23. Despite this improvement, the revenue growth still has to be as high as 63.2 percent during the remainder of FY2023-24 to meet the annual target, which seems unplausible. Therefore, a practical and achievable target is essential for planning expenditures. There is an attempt by the government to enhance revenue collection through various tax measures.

The projections on some key economic indicators are also far from reality. For example, the proposed budget has set GDP growth at 6.75 percent for FY2024-25. Amid the current economic pressure, this projection is high. In FY2023-24, the GDP growth was estimated to be 7.5 percent. However, provisional estimates by Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS) revealed that in FY2023-24, the GDP growth rate could be 5.82 percent.

Similarly, gross investment as a share of GDP has been projected to be 33.41 percent in FY2024-25. This is in contrast to the fact that gross investment as a share of GDP has been declining over the past few years. Between FY2019-20 and FY2023-24, the decline in the gross investment-GDP ratio has been 0.33 percentage points. Most importantly, the private investment-GDP ratio also declined from 24.18 percent in FY2022-23 to 23.51 percent in FY2023-24. So, how the projection of higher private investment at 27.34 percent of GDP will be achieved in FY2024-25 remains a mystery.

What is there to curb inflation?

Amid the existing economic pressure, the government will have to settle for a low-level equilibrium, i.e. low inflation and low growth. Spending cuts are needed in unnecessary operational costs, unproductive projects, and special support to certain privileged groups. Higher allocations should be made for the poor, low- and middle-income groups through social protection.

Another way to provide some respite to ordinary citizens is through employment. In the absence of private investment, job creation has become limited. Despite a reasonable GDP growth, the capacity of the economy to generate employment is reducing. The employment elasticity is a measure to see how employment is changed due to economic growth. The quarterly GDP estimates and the Labour Force Survey (LFS) data from the BBS reveal that the employment elasticity of GDP is on a downward trend. More worryingly, the opportunity for decent employment is limited. The LFS 2022 data indicate that 90.5 percent of the industrial employment and 67.8 percent of the service sector employment are in the informal category.

For the poor, an important source of support is the government's social safety net (SSN) programmes. The overall SSN budget as a percentage of the total budget increased marginally—from 17.0 percent in the revised budget for FY2023-24 to 17.1 percent in FY2024-25. The SSN budget as a percentage of GDP saw an increase—from 2.40 percent in the revised budget to 2.43 percent in the proposed budget.

However, as before, pension for the retired government employees and their families, interests from savings certificates, agriculture subsidy, and programmes for freedom fighters are included in the SSN, inflating the allocation for the sector. If these allocations, which don't directly help the poor, are taken out, the actual allocation for SSN is much smaller. For example, if we exclude pension for the retired government employees and their families, interests from savings certificates, and agricultural subsidy, the SSN allocation drops to 9.2 percent of the total budget and only 1.32 percent of GDP.

There hasn't been any support in terms of tax measures for the low-income groups. In the budget for the outgoing fiscal year, the government increased the threshold level of tax-free annual income from Tk 3 lakh to Tk 3.5 lakh. However, the inflation continued to be close to 10 percent through the fiscal year. Food inflation is even higher. Indeed, food expenditure in Bangladesh is much higher than many countries with more per capita income (CPD 2024).

In such circumstances, the threshold of tax-free income should have been increased to Tk 5 lakh as expenditure for essential items eat up most of the earnings of low-income households. This rebate will not cost the government much. Instead, it should collect taxes from the tax evaders and new sources. The hard-earned money of the taxpayers should be used prudently. This will increase public confidence in the tax system. This will create fiscal space for the government to spend on priority areas, including support to the poor and low-income families. The announcement by the government to reduce taxes on many commodities is a positive step.

However, the authorities have to make sure that the reduced tax is reflected through reduced prices in the market. This initiative should be continued till the prices are down at a tolerable level. Allocation for programmes such as open market sales (OMS) should have been higher because the supply is inadequate compared to the demand. This is not a requirement for the low-income families only—the middle class also has a demand for such support.

Finally, the government has set the target for inflation at 6.5 percent in FY2024-25. Unfortunately, this is an unrealistic target. The policymakers have to take several pragmatic, bold and unpopular measures to reach the target within the next 12 months.

The only budget I care about is one that reduces my bills

BADIUZZAMAN BAY

Every year, as budget day approaches, I feel a strange sense of déjà vu. It's like preparing for election day: the air is thick with anticipation, promises fly around like confetti, and hope flutters tentatively in our hearts. These two days are to newsmen what the two Eid days are to devotees—the culmination of journalistic pursuits that leaves us simultaneously animated and exhausted. On both days, journalists remain caught up in frantic activities, speeches and interviews, press conferences, and tireless decoding of every proposed plan or promise. The newsroom buzzes with excitement from midday to midnight. There are special meals, special pick-and-drop services.

As a journalist, I am encouraged to look at the bigger picture on budget day, and think less of my own wallet and more of the wallets of my compatriots. But this façade, if I may call it so, is getting harder to keep up. For every time, as the finance minister concludes his speech and the numbers roll out, reality hits with a greater force. You worry where you fit into this maze of numbers.

But seen from a wider perspective, both days also seem to be following the same script—lots of build-up and rituals but a disappointing anti-climax in the end.

As a journalist, I am encouraged to look at the bigger picture on budget day, and think less of my own wallet and more of the wallets of my compatriots. But this façade, if I may call it so, is getting harder to keep up. For every time, as the finance minister concludes his speech and the numbers roll out, reality hits with a greater force. You worry where you fit into this maze of numbers. You rummage through them for a solution to your problem: stagnant income but inflated bills. And you feel as helpless as the next working person looking at the widening gulf between your budget plan and that of the government.

Budget day is thus turning into our very own Groundhog Day. Each time, we hope for change, yet the same reality comes back to haunt us. And the reality is, even after the proposed budget for FY2024-25 comes into effect, that cycle of stagnation and inflation will likely remain in motion. This may be my years of accumulated distrust talking. But think about it. When did we last have a budget, big or small, that sufficiently addressed job crisis or brought down essential prices? Even the FY2023-24 budget, which was 12.35 percent bigger than the previous year's, failed on both fronts. As Jaime Lerner once put it, "If you want creativity, take a zero off your budget. If you want sustainability, take off two zeros." I don't know about the government's motivation for going for a "tight" budget this time. But our main problem, in my view, is not that we don't have enough zeros for the more important sectors but that we don't know how to spend it even when we do.

I don't want to go into details about our budget implementation problem which we talk about, like clockwork, after every budget, and then throughout the year. But suffice it to say, this, along with corruption, irregularities and various entrenched systemic issues, have had deeply destabilising effects. The prices of almost everything from groceries and utilities to housing and education have gone through the roof. People are paying through their noses for essential healthcare. A budget has to make sense on a practical level for citizens, right? It has to deliver results beyond shiny economic indicators or infrastructure development. Right now, this is not happening. I see scrolls and infographics detailing the proposed increase or reduction in import duties, and I find myself asking: what does it all mean? Will it help reduce my monthly bills, or inflate them?

Perhaps I'm simplifying it a bit. You could say that rising prices are a global trend. In India, where I found the prices of food or groceries or commuter fares to be much cheaper compared to Bangladesh, one of the factors apparently leading to the humbling election result for the ruling BJP is high prices—or as they are calling it, people's "bread-and-butter issues". I guess, in the end, it all comes down to your lived experience. Your income versus living cost. You spend what you earn. What if you don't earn enough? Or you do, but just barely? You still try to set aside some savings for a rainy day, but what if every day becomes a rainy day? What's the strategy then?

VISUAL: STAR

Not long ago, I remember willing myself to survive on two meals a day, especially towards the end of the month. It doesn't help, though. You have a family to take care of. And you need more than a full stomach to pass through life. I can only imagine how people lower in the food chain are getting by amid the never-ending struggle between low or stagnant incomes and inflated bills.

If you ask me what kind of a budget I need, the answer is pretty simple. I need a budget that relieves me of having to pay so much for the most basic of services and amenities. I need it to treat the cost-of-living crisis as a national emergency, not just a by-product of some economic influences that can't be helped.

I need it to treat the cost-of-living crisis as a national emergency, not just a by-product of some economic influences that can't be helped. Above all, I want a solution to the unique development enigma that Bangladesh has become as at once one of the poorest and yet costliest countries in the world.

The majesty of 'public will'

Rebirth of the Indian opposition

On Sunday, Narendra Modi will commence his third consecutive term as India's prime minister, a first after Jawaharlal Nehru, India's founding prime minister. The Indian people have chosen their leaders and representatives in parliament, and we congratulate them for it. This election marks the return of coalition government that had been the norm before BJP's single-party domination ended it in 2014. This will be the first time that BJP, having failed to obtain enough seats on its own—getting 240 while needing 272—will have to depend on its alliance partners to form a coalition government with Nitish Kumar of Bihar and Chandrababu Naidu of Andhra Pradesh. As reported in Indian media—and not unexpected in the tradition of coalition politics in the subcontinent—the two are already trying to extract the maximum price possible for their crucial backing, without which Modi cannot form his new government. The bargain is, of course, focused on crucial ministries and the position of the speaker for the Telugu Desam Party, according to The Telegraph.

This election marks the return of coalition government that had been the norm before BJP's single-party domination ended it in 2014. This will be the first time that BJP, having failed to obtain enough seats on its own—getting 240 while needing 272—will have to depend on its alliance partners to form a coalition government with Nitish Kumar of Bihar and Chandrababu Naidu of Andhra Pradesh. As reported in Indian media—and not unexpected in the tradition of coalition politics in the subcontinent—the two are already trying to extract the maximum price possible for their crucial backing.

The election verdict greatly tempered Modi's shine and energised the opposition. A message doing the rounds on WhatsApp, as quoted by journalist Swapan Dasgupta in the aforementioned paper, goes, "The Indian voter has given a verdict that will be remembered for a long time. They have given the BJP and allies a victory that feels like a defeat. They have given the INDI [sic] alliance a defeat that feels like a victory."

By all accounts, Modi's victory is very impressive. BJP won 240 seats on its own, which is more than the combined seats won by the opposition and more than double that of Congress's tally of 99. Why, then, should a tinge of defeat be associated with it? Because it overplayed its success, and the slogan that BJP would win more than 400 seats in the House of 543 itself exhibited an arrogance and overconfidence that has made its success look like a defeat—a case of shooting oneself in the foot.

When democracy is on the slide in many countries, and election as an event is suffering from many distortions, especially instigated by the ruling party (don't we know it?), for the Indian national election to have come through with credibility and overall acceptance is an achievement that must be praised and celebrated by democracy-loving people everywhere. Around 969 million people, 70 percent of a population of 1.4 billion, were eligible to vote. According to figures from the Election Commission of India, 642 million voters voted, of whom 312 million were women, making for the highest participation by women voters in the country's history.

Though victorious, the ruling coalition NDA has been dealt a body blow that has surprised most election watchers both inside and outside India. Though Narendra Modi as the tallest leader in India and the BJP as the largest single party have retained their strong positions, the resurgence of the opposition and, within it, that of Congress—the grand old party that many pundits had written off—are signs of the emergence of functioning democracy that can only bode well for India and its neighbours.

What we consider to be the most noteworthy aspect of the Indian election is the rebirth of the opposition. In fact, it can be termed a "rebirth" of a parliament long overwhelmed by a single-party dominance, and without a viable opposition, the House really loses its functionality. In a parliamentary form of government, the House acts as the centre of all national politics. It is where national issues are debated, the government made answerable, polices judged, and resource allocation scrutinised in depth. It is the parliament where a government, however powerful, is made aware that people are its "master."

The gradual erosion of the central role of parliament, which we have witnessed in Bangladesh, was also evident in India with the dominance of BJP. With 232 seats in the House—the central institution that holds sway over the functioning of India's governance structure—the role of the opposition is likely to see an effective revival. The importance of this particular fact cannot be overestimated. The most important outcome will be to ensure greater accountability of the government in running its affairs. Each bill will be far more scrutinised, and all megaprojects and expensive initiatives will be delved deeper into. In a House with a strong opposition, each individual MP will feel far more empowered to question the government and the administration as a whole—especially the bureaucrats, whose mindset is far from serving the people.

Reviving the effective role of the opposition in monitoring and holding the government accountable is of great significance for us in Bangladesh, as we have almost forgotten that the parliament is really where public representatives are supreme. In our case, the overwhelming presence and almost monopoly control of the House by one party has literally obliterated the powerful role of the House, the role of the speaker, and of individual MPs.

Along with the all-India elections, the one in West Bengal also has special significance for us in Bangladesh. The popular expectation that BJP would fare better than the last time and might even get more seats than before was proven wrong. Mamata Banerjee, due to her political acumen, election strategy, and campaigning energy, must be congratulated for the way she single-handedly held back the Hindutva tide to return her own candidates in the election.

A significant takeaway from the results of the Indian election is that religion-based election campaigning has its serious limits. Voters in a country where democracy has been practised since 1947 have the wisdom to see the damaging impact of such campaigns and the courage to set a corrective course in motion.

For us, a nation constantly badgered by endless controversies surrounding every poll of any sort, the Indian election is a matter of envy as no one as yet has raised any objection about the election process or the outcome. The results of each phase—and there were seven in total—were stored by the Election Commission of India and made public after 44 days when the whole process was completed. The whole election was conducted through EVMs that provided a paper trail to reinforce voters' confidence in the machines. For us, EVMs remain a far cry as public confidence, instead of rising, has dwindled further during the last election.

As we congratulate India's new leadership, we celebrate the victory of democracy in our giant neighbour, with whom we have forged partnership for our mutual benefits. It was the might of the verdict of the Indian voters that resonated throughout the world, the region and also, hopefully, within Bangladesh where our own voters aspire for the same power. It proved that a mature voter can see through the superficiality of populism, the danger of divisive politics, the pitfalls of using religion to gain votes, and the price that people end up paying when hate and othering becomes instruments of gaining support. In some fundamental ways, the Indian voters saw the tragedy of opting for creating deep wounds that has the possibility of festering into long-term, if not permanent, fault lines. The Indian election proved once again that, if allowed free expression, public will always strengthens democracy. Conversely, if not allowed, it destroys democracy from within.

1 in 4 under age 5 face 'severe' food poverty: UN

AFP, United Nations

More than one in four children under the age of five globally live in "severe" food poverty, Unicef has warned -- meaning more than 180 million are at risk of experiencing adverse impacts on their growth and development.

"Severe child food poverty describes children who are surviving on severely deprived diets so they're only consuming two or less food groups," Harriet Torlesse, a lead writer of a new Unicef report published late Wednesday, told AFP.

"It is shocking in this day and age where we know what needs to be done."

Unicef recommends that young children eat foods daily from five of eight main groups -- breast milk; grains, roots, tubers and plantains; pulses, nuts and seeds; dairy; meat, poultry and fish; eggs; vitamin A-rich fruits and vegetables; and other fruits and vegetables.

Yemen's Iran-allied Houthis said they had launched attacks on three ships in the Red Sea and the Arabian Sea - though shipping giant Maersk MAERSKb.CO dismissed the militants' report that the targets included one of its vessels.

The movement used missiles and drones against two ships - Roza and Vantage Dream - in the Red Sea, military spokesperson Yahya Saree said in a televised address on Wednesday, adding that this group also used drones against the US vessel Maersk Seletar in the Arabian Sea, without giving further details.

Gaza refugees stuck in limbo in Egypt

AFP, Cairo

Every time a plane flies overhead, Mohanad al-Sindawy shudders. It takes him a moment to remember he isn't in Gaza anymore and that no one is bombing the Egyptian capital.

"But the sound terrifies us every time, even passing cars remind us of missiles," the 23-year-old Palestinian told AFP in Cairo.

The Israeli offensive raging since October 7 has sent tens of thousands of Palestinians fleeing Gaza to neighbouring Egypt where they are granted temporary stays.

Although Egypt insists it won't do Israel's bidding by allowing permanent refugee camps on its territory, it has allowed in medical evacuees, dual passport holders and others who somehow managed to escape.

Sindawy, who worked in digital marketing back in Gaza, could find work online but said he "can't concentrate" on anything except "following the news and making sure our families are safe".

As the bloodiest ever Gaza offensive grinds on just a five-hour-drive away, he said, "we can't even think about what comes next for us until there's a ceasefire".

Like him, many Palestinians are traumatised, disoriented in exile and struggling to find help.

"We lost everything," said another recent arrival, Raghda Shbeir, 22. "We've contacted organisations for help, but nothing has worked. Some never responded, some told us to wait our turn."

Shbeir's family is lucky to have relatives in Cairo but faces another huge obstacle, she said -- "our legal status in Egypt: our residence permit is only valid for 45 days." In the longer term, she said, "staying in Egypt is not an option".

Amid an Israeli siege of the coastal territory of 2.4 million people, the Rafah border crossing with Egypt was a lifeline until it was shut last month, letting aid trucks in and allowing the lucky few to escape.

POST-POLLS SURVEY

Modi factor seems to have stagnated over a decade

THE HINDU ONLINE

Ever since the rise of Narendra Modi on the national scene in 2014, his leadership has attracted voters to the BJP on a considerable scale.

The electoral strategy of the BJP (and the NDA) in the 2024 polls was to make Modi's leadership the face of their campaign.

However, the opposition alliance consciously did not declare a Prime Ministerial face. The CSDS-Lokniti data indicate the possible impact of the leadership factor in shaping the electoral outcome.

FADING POPULARITY

Modi remained in the lead as voters' choice to become Prime Minister. A little over four in 10 respondents (41 percent) stated that their preferred Prime Ministerial choice was Narendra Modi.

Rahul Gandhi was mentioned by a little over one-fourth (27 percent) of the respondents as their preferred choice.

It may be important to record that the question on preferred Prime Ministerial choice has been asked during earlier elections also. This time, there was a six-percentage point decline in the mention of Narendra Modi as the Prime Ministerial choice compared with 2019.

The gap between Narendra Modi and Rahul Gandhi as the preferred Prime Ministerial choice has fallen by eight percentage points.

IMPACT OF PM PREFERENCE

Six in 10 respondents (60 percent) reported that it had an impact on the voting decision. Three-fourths of the respondents who reported voting for the BJP mentioned that it had an impact with as high as four in 10 saying that it had a great impact.

The impact of the leadership factor in determining voter preference was much less among those who voted for the Congress and its allies.

The post-polls surveys have been tapping the response to whether there would have been any change in voting preference if Narendra Modi was not the Prime Ministerial candidate.

When this question was asked in 2014, a little over onefourth (27 percent) of those who voted for the BJP said that they would have changed the way they voted. In 2019, two-thirds (32 percent) took this stand. This time, one fourth (25 percent) said that they would have changed the way they voted if Modi was not the Prime Ministerial candidate. Clearly, the initial ability of the Modi factor to make voters move to the BJP seems to have stagnated over the decade.

Budget embraces correct strategic direction

More precisely, if we take a 40,000-foot view of the overall economy – we notice four growing fault-lines within our economic space, which is increasingly undermining our macroeconomic stability. These are: (i) a very stubborn inflation rate which has almost remained close to double digits over the last twenty-four months; (ii) foreign reserves continue to deplete as we have lost approximately $24 billion over the last 24 months – creating significant pressure on our exchange rate; (iii) the fiscal space is almost nil as the entire development budget is now financed through domestic and international borrowing – which is an unsustainable strategy due to the rising domestic and international interest rates – while the entire government revenue (i.e., tax and non-tax revenue) is exhausted on the wage bill, growing subsidies and interest payments; (iv) the hazardous situation in the banking sector which utterly limits government's ability to borrow from the domestic banking system.

Against this backdrop, the economic stabilisation framework demands contractionary economic management manifested in both contractionary monetary and fiscal policies. Earlier, we noted that the Bangladesh Bank committed (albeit quite late) to a contractionary monetary policy by the: (i) unification of the exchange rate in the interbank market and adoption of a market-based crawling peg system; (ii) abandoning the 6 percent to 9 percent caps and the successor SMART system for interest rate determination and restoring the market determination of the interest rates by banks and financial institutions; (iii) and a 50-basis points increase in the policy rate of Bangladesh Bank.

Consequently, to ensure that the overall macroeconomic management is guided by a consistent framework – the broader expectation from the National Budget FY25 is that it too supports the contractionary monetary stance through contractionary fiscal policies and increased revenue mobilisation.

Moreover, as one can broadly observe – the recently proposed national budget for FY25 articulates a fiscal framework that recognises the ongoing macroeconomic problems and commits to support contractionary demand management through increased revenue mobilisation and limiting public expenditure.

For instance, in prior years (at least over the past one-and-a-half decades) the proposed annual development programme (ADP) maintained an annual growth rate of around 20 percent, culminating in a budget deficit of around 5 percent of the GDP.

Yet, in the recently placed national budget for FY25, it is satisfying to observe that the government has avoided that trend and settled for an annual development programme that is almost similar to that proposed for FY24.

The proposed budget is also only 4.7 percent higher than that of the current fiscal. This means that the Treasury has committed to a budget deficit of only 4.6 percent, which is the lowest in the last 10 years.

Moreover, if we factor in the average trend that only around 85 percent of the proposed ADP gets executed, the effective budget deficit will be around 4 percent of the GDP.

This contractionary fiscal stand embodies a correct strategic direction that will help support economic stabilisation over the coming years.

However, there is one area where some concerns remain. In the proposed outlay, the Treasury underscores that the government plans to borrow more than Tk 1.35 lakh crore from domestic banks to finance its development spending in FY25.

This is likely to substantially enhance the overall crowding out effect as deposits in the banking sector are likely to grow by only 1.6 lakh crore over the next fiscal year. In other words, such borrowing targets will raise fiscal dominance in the overall macroeconomic management and will create pressure for the government to resort to central bank financing if such targets are aggressively pursued.

Thus, it is advisable for the government to rationalise its borrowing target from the banking sector so that no structural obligation is created to borrow at such length from the banking sector.

Of course, policymakers must also internalise and adjust to a difficult political economy reality that is commonly associated with the undertaken stabilisation policies in the current budget, which is: the costs associated with contractionary demand management for achieving economic stabilisation are generally incurred in the short run while the benefits appear in the medium term.

This underscores that policymakers and the economic team within the government must be ready to show patience and stubbornness -- and must be willing to not surrender to any pressure from vested quarters that could lobby to dislodge the economic trajectory from this stabilisation path due to their narrowly defined economic objective.

In other words, for the government to reap the wider benefits from the undertaken strategic direction in the national budget, they must have patience, clarity and commitment to the broader objectives that have shaped their recent decision-making.

In short, the challenge facing policymakers now is to walk the talk and do what is necessary for supporting broader economic stabilisation.

Budget deficit may stoke inflation

2023-24.

But despite being a lower percentage of the GDP this time around, the Tk 256,000 crore deficit will still exert significant inflationary pressure.

Additionally, the plan to finance the Tk 137,500 crore deficit through already fragile banking sources could increase borrowing costs for businesses, leading to cost-push inflation. It would be more prudent to reduce the deficit magnitude and finance it through external sources with lower borrowing costs and longer repayment schedules.

One positive feature of the proposed budget is the increased allocation for major social protection programmes, including support for mothers and children, the elderly, widows, people with disabilities, abandoned women, and other less privileged groups.

Both the allocated amount and the number of beneficiaries is proposed to increase, which is crucial for protecting these vulnerable groups during periods of high inflation and reducing inequality.

The budget proposes an increase in allocation for primary, secondary, and higher education, but it lacks specific programmes for research in higher education. Moreover, technical education has not received enough attention.

While one of the priorities identified in the proposed budget is transformative technology and human resource development, it requires more investment in modern technical education and cutting-edge research at higher educational institutions, which is absent.

No ray of hope for taxpayers

expenses. In every interview, Jim repeatedly said only one word, "responsible".

He said it is the responsibility of his government to reduce living costs. Australia reduced tax rates, provided subsidies for utility bills to every Australian household, reduced education loans interest etc. But what are the steps in our budget to give comfort to our people?

The corporate tax rate has been reduced by 2.5 percent. For this, publicly traded companies and non-publicly traded companies will pay tax at 22.5 and 27.5 percent respectively. But is there any ultimate benefit that will be enjoyed by the corporate taxpayers?

The income tax act stipulates that a minimum tax be paid on gross receipts or cash revenue irrespective of a profit or loss.

Every year there is a demand to reduce the corporate tax rate like in other countries. But the focus is never on the real point – to set the withholding tax in consideration with reality.

This year the IT sector was scheduled to see an end to their tax exemption, but they got an extension for three years on condition that all their transactions are cashless. Will it be possible for them to avail it?

A majority of transactions can be run through electronic systems. But is it possible to maintain a 100 percent cashless society?

Think about office maintenance, conveyance and day to day expenses, which we call petty cash. This should have been considered.

The last point is that all taxpayers, individuals as well as corporate taxpayers, must submit tax returns under a universal self-assessment method.

This is okay for individual taxpayers but not suitable for organisations at this moment as our tax administration system must become fairer. Due to this proposed change, the cost of companies in tax filing will be increased.

First the company must file a tax return under the universal self-assessment method and then must obtain a tax clearance certificate from the deputy commissioner of taxes and for this service, the company must pay fees to a tax consultant.

And again, when the taxmen will issue a notice to assess the tax, then again the company shall have to appoint a tax consultant to complete the tax assessment. This will cost both time and money.

Budget passes over down to 6.5 percent in the next fiscal year.

Although the AL had pledged a new pay structure based on commodity prices, the finance minister did not say anything about it.

According to the proposed budget, the government will increase its dependence on borrowing from domestic banks (Tk 1,37,500 crore). This will potentially lead to a further rise in inflation.

The AL's election manifesto had listed youth employment as the second most important focus. However, increased bank borrowing by the public sector and higher interest rates may lead to slowing credit flows to the private sector, posing challenges to industrialisation.

It remains to be seen whether this approach towards industrialisation will be consistent with the ruling party's objective of creating 1.5 crore jobs in five years.

The finance minister hoped that the information technology sector will generate at least 10 lakh jobs and the country will receive $1 billion in foreign investment over the next five years.

The AL had promised to set up new industries to create more jobs. But the budget proposes to allocate Tk 2,510 crore for the industries ministry, which is Tk 514 crore less than the amount allocated in the current fiscal year.

The ruling party in its manifesto had also vowed to enforce laws to recover defaulted loans. But in reality, defaulted loans have been rising gradually, putting banks under liquidity strains.

At the end of December last year, the total defaulted loan in the banking sector stood at Tk1.45 lakh crore. The figure went up to Tk 1.82 lakh crore till March this year, the highest in the country's history.

The proposed budget states a "zero tolerance" policy against corruption, which is consistent with the AL's election manifesto. The ruling party pledged to take strict measures against accumulation of illegal wealth.

The proposed budget also seeks to reintroduce the opportunity for people to legalise undisclosed income or "black money" by paying a 15 percent tax. This proposal goes against the commitment made by the ruling party previously.

'BUDGET REALISTIC'

AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader has said the proposed budget is realistic and pro-people.

"A pro-people budget has been proposed at a time when there is global crisis. This budget has been prepared taking into consideration the promises and priority sectors outlined in the party's election manifesto. A special focus will be put on controlling commodity prices," he told journalists at the Jatiya Sangsad Bhaban yesterday.

Allocation

But for fiscal year 2024-25, the government proposed increasing allocation for education, healthcare, and social security.

These sectors will have 24 percent of the government's budget, up from 23.3 percent of the outgoing fiscal year.

In the original budget for FY24, the allocation for education, healthcare, and social security was Tk 1,82,537 crore.

For FY25, the government recommends Tk 1,95,773.

Praising the government for reducing allocation for energy and transport sectors, Muinul Islam, former president of Bangladesh Economic Association, said the proposal for reducing allocation in these sectors was a step in the right direction.

Muinul, a former economics professor at the University of Chittagong, however, said containing inflation to 6.5 percent would be difficult.

He said if inflation is considered, the increase in allocation for health, education, and social safety net was "not that much".

Budget implementation remains a big concern, especially in the health sector.

In the original budget for FY24, health received Tk 38,052 crore, but it was revised to Tk 29,782 crore due to failures to spend the money.

Modi has thanked PM Hasina for her warm wishes following his election victory.

Hasina was among the first foreign leaders to congratulate Modi, reflecting the warmth and personal rapport between the two leaders.

"India and Bangladesh share historic relations, which have seen unprecedented growth in the last decade," Modi said.

In a message shared through X, Modi said he looks forward to working together to further strengthen the people-centric partnership between Bangladesh and India.

Modi received a congratulatory telephone call from Hasina for the victory of NDA, according to the Press Information Bureau of India.

BJP, allies

"This is not the first time we are in NDA, so we are confident that we will get what is due to us," TDP spokesperson Jyothsna Tirunagari said.

"In our earlier terms with NDA, we had ministerial berths and also the Lok Sabha [lower house] Speaker from our party. This time we are a strong partner and share a clear vision for the country," she said.

JD(U)'s Kumar also wants support for new industrial projects in Bihar along with federal cabinet positions, one NDA source said.

Top BJP leaders were set to hold talks on ministerial portfolios with the allies yesterday, one BJP source said.

Modi is expected to meet President Droupadi Murmu today to present his claim to form the next government. Top NDA leaders are also set to meet today to discuss government formation.

Sources said Nitish Kumar plans to negotiate plum portfolios in the cabinet, including the coveted railways ministry.

BJP, sources said, is not ready to give away the Speaker's role and TDP may be offered a Deputy Speaker post. JD(U) holds the Rajya Sabha Deputy Chairman post.

The Modi governments formed after the 2014 and 2019 elections had only symbolic representation of BJP allies because the saffron party had an absolute majority on its own. But this time, BJP may have to accommodate its allies in ministerial berths in proportion to seats won by each ally.

US approves sale of F-16 parts to Taiwan for $80m

REUTERS

The US State Department has approved the sale to Taiwan of F-16 fighter jet spare and repair parts for an estimated $80 million, the Pentagon's Defense Security Cooperation Agency said on Wednesday.

The sale will help "improve the security of the recipient and assist in maintaining political stability, military balance, and economic progress in the region," the Pentagon's Defense Security Cooperation Agency (DSCA) said in a statement.

Taiwan's defense ministry thanked the United States and said the sale would boost the combat and defense needs of its air force. The ministry said the sale would be finalised in July.

"With normalised gray-zone harassments, the Chinese Communist Party attempted to squeeze our naval and air training space and response time, as well as limiting our rights of self-defense," it said in a statement.

China has repeatedly demanded the United States, Taiwan's most important arms supplier, halt the sale of weapons to the island, which Beijing claims as its own territory over Taipei's strong objection.

brilliant partnership that moved the tournament co-hosts into treble figures and seemingly in control of the run chase.

Monank was particularly impressive, hitting a classy half-century to give his side hope, putting on 68 in a crucial stand with Gous.

However, Pakistan's four-pronged pace attack hit back, removing both set batters to set up a nervy finale at the Grand Prairie Stadium.

Haris Rauf cleaned up Gous (35 from 26) to get the crucial breakthrough. And, an over later, Mohammad Amir had the excellent Patel caught behind for 50 from 38 to give Pakistan hope.

A classic display of death bowling seemed to have put Pakistan on the brink of victory despite a fine knock from Aaron Jones.

But USA banged 11 runs off the final three deliveries of the innings, with Nitish Kumar slamming the last ball for four to force a Super Over and send the home crowd delirious in Dallas.

USA posted 18 in the Super Over bowled by Pakistan pacer Mohammad Amir, who gave away eight runs in extras, before restricting Pakistan to unravel one of the biggest upsets in the history of T20 World Cup.

The school, run by the UN Palestinian refugee agency (UNRWA), may have been hit several times, said the agency's communications director, Juliette Touma.

The UNRWA chief Philippe Lazzarini said that Israel had carried out the strike on the school "without prior warning" to thousands of displaced sheltering there.

More than 36,654 Palestinians have been killed and 83,309 have been wounded in Israel's military offensive in Gaza since October 7, the Gaza health ministry said in a statement yesterday. Some 68 Palestinians were killed and 235 wounded in the past 24 hours, the ministry added.

CIA director William Burns met senior officials from mediators Qatar and Egypt on Wednesday in Doha to discuss the ceasefire proposal. Two Egyptian security sources said talks continued yesterday but had shown no sign of breakthrough.

Make or break for Tigers

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh will begin their T20 World Cup campaign against Sri Lanka on Saturday, hoping to recapture form in what is likely the most crucial game for them in the group stage. The match is set to start at 6:30 am (Bangladesh time).

Bangladesh have South Africa, Nepal and Netherlands to tackle after the Sri Lanka fixture. However, failure to win this match will not only leave a dent in mentality going forward but also leave them with a hurdle too big to cross, given that South Africa – the group's strongest contender for the top spot – have already won their game against Sri Lanka.

Although Bangladesh have had sufficient opportunity to acclimatise with weather conditions, the wickets in question remain a wild card. Winning the toss allows teams with the big advantage of putting the opposition into bat in conditions with unknown variables.

On Wednesday, India skipper Rohit Sharma had asked Ireland to bat in New York and reaped the rewards as variable bounce was on offer.

Bangladesh went ahead with their preparations on Wednesday, hoping to tweak whatever areas they could muster before the big match against Sri Lanka. The team had been pegged back by a series defeat against co-hosts USA leading up to the World Cup, and their performance against India in the only warm-up game showed the Najmul Hossain Shanto-led team were still lagging behind in mentality necessary to thrive in a global event.

There have been criticisms back home and especially on social media platforms. A video from covering media in the USA showed ace all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan joking about their chances of making the second round. The pressure, coupled with the pang of not feeling supported, have also impacted Shakib ahead of a joint-record ninth appearance in the competition.

Along with form troubles, Bangladesh are suffering from injury worries. Chief selector Gazi Ashraf Hossain Lipu informed that injured pacer Shoriful Islam is still in recovery, with an assessment due on June 9. The speedster injured his bowling hand and is all but certain to miss Bangladesh's World Cup opener.

The importance of the game was also playing intoShoriful's prospects of participating in the World Cup. "We are carrying a pacer in Hasan Mahmud [reserve]. We are interested in getting back Shoriful, but how far we can make it into the tournament is an issue. Our performance is a matter as well since by then we will have played one game, and we can make a decision [based on result] afterwards."

On a positive note, the Tigers are hopeful of Taskin Ahmed's return from injury. "From what we can expect, given the reaction after Taskin bowled today, barring any further injury troubles, he will be able to play against Sri Lanka," Lipu informed further.

"The support staff are trying to get batters back in form. Obviously, the best possible combination will be picked since we are getting Taskin back, which will somewhat make up for the loss of Shoriful," he added.

Bangladesh will be hoping that their batters come into some form in this crucial fixture while Sri Lanka search for form, having been bundled out cheaply in their previous outing.

- Bangladesh are yet to register a win against familiar foes Sri Lanka in T20 World Cup. The Tigers lost both their encounters with the Lankans in the tournament -- by 64 runs in Johannesburg in 2007 and by five wickets in Sharjah in 2021.
- Bangladesh were bundled out for 83 runs in their 2007 T20 World Cup group encounter against Sri Lanka. This is the second-lowest collection for Bangladesh in the mega event and their lowest-ever in T20Is against Sri Lanka.
- Shakib Al Hasan, who scored 18 runs and scalped one wicket in that game against Sri Lanka in 2007, is the only survivor from that game 17 years ago.
- Bangladesh also do not boast an inspiring head-to-head record against the Lankans in T20Is, with the Tigers winning only five and losing 11 of the 16 matches so far.
- Sri Lanka skipper Wanindu Hasaranga (106 wickets in 66 matches) needs two more wickets to surpass Lasith Malinga (107 wickets in 84 games) to become his country's highest wicket-taker in T20Is.

T20 WORLD CUP CORNER

Why hasn't the World Cup fever taken over yet?

NABID YEASIN

Even on the fifth day of the ongoing T20 World Cup [Thursday], it did not seem like the ninth edition of the mega event, being held in the USA and the West Indies, was being able to hook cricket lovers.

And there might be a few reasons for it.

This edition of the T20 World Cup is unique for two reasons. First, a total of 20 teams are playing in the main phase, giving the ICC associate nations an exposure like never before. And, the other is that this is the first time that an ICC associate nation -- USA -- is co-hosting the event.

While there was this higher risk of mismatches, the most scpetcism was regarding whether cricket's attempt to tap into the broad and cash-rich market of the USA backfire in the form of the dullest cricketing event in recent memory.

Uganda, Nsubuga make history

ICC

Veteran spinner Frank Nsubuga created history in Guyana on Thursday as Uganda registered their first-ever victory at the ICC Men's T20 World Cup with a three-wicket triumph over Papua New Guinea.

In his first T20 World Cup appearance at 43 years of age, Nsubuga collected figures of 2/4 to help bowl out PNG for just 77 and the African nation held their nerve to chase down that total with 10 deliveries remaining.

The four runs conceded by Nsubuga was the fewest by any bowler in the history of the Men's T20 World Cup to have bowled their full allotment of four overs.

Slow pitches the 'theme of tournament'

AGENCIES

Marcus Stoinis, who smashed a 67 not out and then took three wickets for 19 runs to help Australia open their T20 World Cup campaign with a 39-run win over Oman in Barbados on Thursday, said that slow pitches might just go on to be the theme of the tournament.

The worn Kensington Oval pitch block that will host its fifth match in a week for Australia's clash with England may not necessarily suit either of the two teams' blistering pace attacks, according to Stoinis.

"(The pitch) wasn't a shock. I think from watching the games so far, it seems that's [slow pitches] going to be the theme of the tournament ... it just took some getting used to," Stoinis said after the Oman victory.

Sports see big jump in budgetary allocation

SPORTS REPORTER

The Ministry of Youth and Sports has received a higher allocation in the national budget for the 2024-25 fiscal year.

It was allocated Tk 2,212 crore, a 69.8 percent increase from the Tk 1,303 crore proposed in the original budget of the outgoing fiscal year. The budget was later revised to Tk 1,517 crore.

"A total of 13 projects focused on the construction and development of sports facilities are being implemented in FY2023-24. One of the notable projects is the construction of Upazila Sheikh Russel Mini Stadium," said Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali in his budget speech yesterday.

"I am proposing 20 projects in the upcoming budget for the development of youth and sports. In addition, a talent hunt scheme is ongoing under the supervision of experienced trainers in every division for developing the skill of sportspersons," he added.

Defending champion Iga Swiatek took a big step towards a third successive French Open title by dismantling teary American third seed Coco Gauff 6-2, 6-4 in the semifinal on Thursday to match her longest winning streak on clay. A match that everyone wants to watch: Alcaraz

AFP, Paris

Carlos Alcaraz saw off Stefanos Tsitsipas in straight sets on Tuesday to set up a mouthwatering French Open semifinal clash with incoming world number one Jannik Sinner on Friday.

Alcaraz will be desperate to right the wrongs of last year -- when he suffered cramps in a defeat by Novak Djokovic -- in his second successive French Open semifinal.

Alcaraz is bidding to become the youngest man in history to win Grand Slam tournaments on hard, grass and clay courts after his Wimbledon triumph and 2022 US Open title.

He will face Sinner Friday for the ninth time, with the pair's head-to-head record level at 4-4.

"It's a really difficult challenge, I'm not going to lie," said Alcaraz of Sinner, who will usurp Djokovic at the top of the rankings next week.

"It's going to be a really good challenge, I'm ready for that challenge. It's the match that everybody wants to watch."

BANGLADESH SHOW FIGHT but lose to Aussies

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh stood their ground against Australia in their second leg match of the FIFA World Cup Qualifiers, but couldn't avoid a 2-0 defeat against the superior opponents on a 'heavy' field at the Bashundhara Kings Arena in Dhaka yesterday.

The hosts put up stiff resistance throughout the match against the Socceroos, who are 160 places ahead of Bangladesh in FIFA rankings, and conceded a defeat which s more respectable compared to their 7-0 thrashing in the first leg in Melbourne.

Bangladesh managed to keep Australia at bay for 28 minutes before Ajdin Hrustic broke the deadlock with a left-footed strike. The second goal came in the 62nd minute with Kusini Yengi heading the ball home.

"I always said the result was not that important to me. The objective was to improve the performance, which we did not do in Melbourne and I think we achieved that objective," said Bangladesh coach Javier Cabrera after the match.

"So [we did] extremely well in defending in the whole game and there were also outstanding work in marking the players, maintaining the defense line and defending the set pieces.

"We could have played more with the ball in the first half, having a couple of combinations but we lacked a bit in confidence," said a happy Cabrera who wants his side take the positives from their valiant fight against 24th ranked side in the world.

Australia coach Graham Arnold, however, expressed his displeasure with the pitch.

"I am very proud of the players today [Thursday]. Obviously, we don't get to play in these types of conditions... The pitch was poor and it was unacceptable and it's no shock to me that six players from Bangladesh were cramping, their calf muscles and hamstrings. It's not good. I'm being very honest," Arnold said.

However, Cabrera did not agree with Arnold's assessment.

"It wasn't muddy, it was heavy, depends on how you see it. May be in the beginning it was advantageous for us because it was not easy for them [Australia] to move quickly but to me, the pitch was totally playable after the rain of two or three days.

"I understand him [Arnold] because they are used to having top-class facilities. But top-class facilities are not available everywhere in football... I think the pitch we played is very very decent for Asian matches," Cabrera said.

The defeat ends the mathematical chances of Bangladesh qualifying for the next stage of the qualifiers.

Bangladesh are at the bottom of the four-team Group I with one point in five matches, which came from a 1-1 draw at home against Lebanon.

Australia have already sealed qualification as group champions, with five wins in as many matches while Palestine are in second position with seven points. Had Bangladesh managed an upset win over Australia and won their final match against Lebanon and Palestine had lost their last two matches, Bangladesh could've made it to the next phase as group runners-up.

India football legend Sunil Chhetri played his final international game on Thursday, ending an illustrious career spanning two decades. As the India-Kuwait's fixture in FIFA World Cup qualifiers ended in a goalless draw, Chhetri leaves with 94 goals for his country, behind only Cristiano Ronaldo, Iran's retired Ali Daei, and Lionel Messi in the all-time list. Hasina to attend Modi's swearing-in ceremony

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina is scheduled to leave for New Delhi tomorrow to attend her Indian counterpart Narendra Modi's swearing-in ceremony at his invitation.

PM's Speechwriter M Nazrul Islam yesterday confirmed her joining the ceremony slated for Sunday. She will return home on June 10, he added.

Modi is likely to take oath as the prime minister of India for the historic third term in a row on June 9 after his BJP-led NDA alliance won the election to Lok Sabha, the lower house of Indian parliament.

Hasina and Sri Lankan President Ranil Wickremesinghe are among the foreign leaders who have been invited to Modi's oath-taking ceremony.

Earlier, Modi invited Hasina to attend the swearing-in ceremony of his government and she accepted the invitation.

BJP, allies begin talks for coalition govt

Alliance members demand more funds, key cabinet positions

OUR CORRESPONDENT, New Delhi

Parties in Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi's National Democratic Alliance (NDA) yesterday demanded more funds for their respective states and more federal cabinet positions as negotiations began to form a coalition government.

Modi is now likely to take oath as prime minister for the third straight time on Sunday evening. Sources had earlier said that the oath-taking would take place on Saturday.

Modi was named leader of the NDA on Wednesday after NDA won 293 seats in the 543-member lower house of parliament. The majority mark is 272.

However, his Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) lost its outright majority and found itself reliant on support from regional parties, mainly the Telugu Desam Party (TDP) and Janata Dal (United).

But Modi's BJP fell well short of the majority mark, making TDP leader N Chandrababu Naidu and JD(U) head Nitish Kumar, also the chief minister of the eastern state of Bihar, kingmakers in the alliance with their 16 and 12 seats respectively. BJP won 240 seats. In 2019, it won 303 seats.

TDP also won an assembly election in the southern state of Andhra Pradesh to regain power and Naidu is set to become chief minister there.

Both parties are pushing longstanding demands to grant special status to their states, according to one TDP spokesperson and five NDA sources.

The special status allows states to receive more federal development funds on simpler terms. While Bihar is India's poorest state, Andhra Pradesh lost some of its resources in 2014 when the new state of Telangana was carved out of it.

Besides special status and cabinet positions, TDP is also seeking more funds for irrigation projects in Andhra Pradesh and to complete the building of its new capital, Amaravati, said the sources.

40 killed in Israeli strike on UN school

Say Gaza officials, 14 children, nine women among dead; mediators continue talks on ceasefire in Doha

AGENCIES

Israel hit a Gaza school yesterday in an airstrike that it said targeted and killed Hamas fighters inside, while a Hamas official said 40 people including women and children were killed as they sheltered in the UN site.

The strike took place at a sensitive moment in mediated negotiations on a ceasefire agreement entailing the release of hostages and some of the Palestinians held in Israeli jails. Hamas seeks a permanent end to the offensive. Israel says it must destroy the group first.

The United States issued a joint statement with other countries yesterday calling on Israel and Hamas to make whatever compromises were necessary to finalise a deal as the two sides gave contradictory accounts of the school attack.

Ismail Al-Thawabta, the director of the Hamas-run government media office, rejected Israel's assertion that the UN school in Nuseirat, in central Gaza, had hidden a Hamas command post.

Israel's military said its fighter jets had carried out a "precise strike" and circulated satellite photos highlighting two parts of a building where it said the fighters were based.

"We're very confident in the intelligence," military spokesperson Lt Col Peter Lerner told a briefing with reporters, accusing Hamas and Islamic Jihad fighters of deliberately using UN

Government officials recruited after July 1 next year will be incorporated in the universal pension scheme, instead of the conventional post-retirement pension benefits.

Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali announced this during his budget speech in the parliament yesterday.

"We will bring new recruits of all government institutions, who get pension benefits, under the universal pension scheme," the finance minister said.

The move comes amid protests by employees of autonomous, state-owned, and other statutory organisations against the decision to include them in the Universal Pension Scheme.

BENAZIR'S IMMOVABLE PROPERTIES

Court appoints administrators to look after them

ACC now sets June 23 for quizzing him

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday appointed administrators to look after some of the immovable properties of Benazir Ahmed and his family members.

The upazila nirbahi officer will look after the properties in Savar and deputy commissioners in Cox's Bazar and Madaripur.

In Gopalganj, the deputy commissioner, fisheries and agriculture officers will take charge of land and water bodies, the court said.

Judge Mohammed Ash-Shams Joglul Hossain passed the order, accepting a petition filed by ACC Deputy Director Hafizul Islam.

The court ordered the ACC to look after the former police chief's four flats in the capital's Gulshan, reports Prothom Alo.

Proceeds from the assets will be given to the state coffers.

Meanwhile, the ACC fixed June 23 for interrogating Benazir over allegations of corruption, after he did not show up for yesterday's hearing.

Asked whether Benazir requested the commission to reschedule the hearing, ACC Secretary Khorsheda Yasmin said the team

These fascinating sea marine creatures, whose earliest fossils can be dated back to the early Jurassic period, are found in subtidal habitats around the world. For feeding, a feather duster worm captures planktons, algae and other microscopic organic particles using its feathers. By doing so, these animals play a vital role in maintaining marine health as it prevents the buildup of detritus or other harmful substances. Additionally, feather duster worms provide a valuable food source for other marine organisms. However, despite playing such a crucial role, they face several threats to their survival, including habitat destruction caused by human activities and water pollution.

Govt measures will tame rising inflation

Says finance minister at post-budget briefing

REJAUL KARIM BYRON

Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali yesterday expressed hope that the government would be able to curb high inflation on the back of budgetary measures and the central bank's steps.

"I would like to remind you that after we assumed power in 2009, inflation was at a high level, but we brought it under control. I want to assert that inflation will fall this time too.

"We have taken several steps to control inflation through the tax structure. For example, duties have been reduced for the import of daily necessities."

The minister was speaking at the post-budget media briefing at the Osmani Memorial Auditorium in Dhaka.

Bangladesh has been seeing more than 9 percent inflation for the past two years. Though many countries have successfully brought it down, Bangladesh is struggling to contain it owing to a lack of adequate measures at the right time.

Mahmood Ali tried to allay fears that higher bank borrowing, targeted for the upcoming fiscal year, will stoke inflation.

"There is nothing to worry about," he said, adding that the government did not go for a bigger budget with an aim to rein in inflation.

"Since controlling inflation is our top priority now, contractionary policy remains the focus for a while. However, we will keep an eye to ensure our growth does not suffer too much from this."

In the budget speech, the finance minister said the goal is to increase government spending gradually in the second half of 2024-25, and this will be possible if the revenue collection increases.

Md Khairuzzaman Mozumder, secretary of the finance division, said there is distortion in the

No concrete steps to address inflation, low reserves: CPD

The proposed national budget for fiscal 2024-25 lacks concrete measures for addressing the current economic concerns, such as runaway inflation and depleting foreign exchange reserves, the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD) said yesterday.

Besides, the government will not be able to reach its projections on reducing the inflation rate and increasing economic growth and investment, the think-tank said.

The CPD made these observations in its analysis of the government's proposed budgetary measures for the upcoming fiscal year at a media briefing at the Bangabandhu International Conference Centre in Dhaka.

Overall, this is an ordinary budget during an extraordinary time.

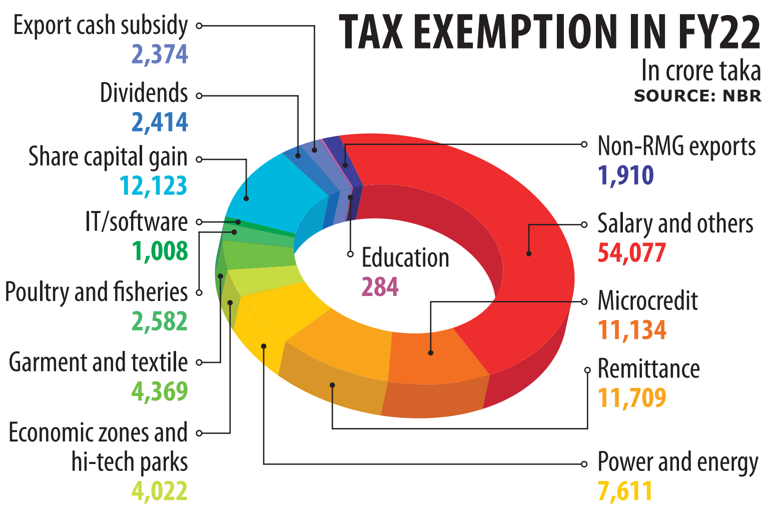
Tax exemption in FY25 rises to Tk 163,000cr



SOURCE: NBR

SUKANTA HALDER and
MD ASADUZ ZAMAN

Tax exemptions provided by the National Board of Revenue (NBR) are estimated to rise to Tk 163,000 crore in fiscal 2024-25 as the tax administration looks to ease the pressure on individuals and facilitate higher economic growth.

If the amount of exemption, also termed direct tax expenditure, were added to the total tax collection, the tax-GDP ratio would have increased. Then it would have cut the state's dependence on borrowing to finance expenses.

Direct tax expenditure is a form of tax subsidythat includes rebates, discounts, exemptions and reduced rates of taxation while excluding untaxable income when calculated.

The estimated tax expenditure for FY25 is 11 percent higher from roughly Tk 147,000 crore in 2023-24, which accounted for 2.91 percent of gross domestic product (GDP).

This is the second year the NBR has provided an estimated tax expenditure as part of its exercise to measure the volume of revenue forgone to promote industrialisation, create jobs and foster economic growth.

The tax authority took the initiative after the International Monetary Fund (IMF) asked Bangladesh to calculate its revenue expenditure as a part of the conditions for its $4.7 billion loan.

The IMF also advised rationalisation of tax exemptions targeting Bangladesh's graduation from the list of least-developed countries (LDCs) in November 2026.

> The estimated tax expenditure for FY25 is 11 percent higher from roughly Tk 147,000 crore in 2023-24, which accounted for 2.91 percent of gross domestic product (GDP).

Economists have also been recommending the government estimate the amount of tax and duty benefits given to various sectors and assess the impact of the tax waiver.

In its first attempt, the NBR estimated the amount of income, direct tax expenditure or revenue forgone stood at Tk 125,813 crore in 2020-21.

PM defends scope for money whitening

UNB, Dhaka

Supporting the budgetary provision for legalising black money, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said black money should be brought into the legal channel first.

"The money should be brought into an appropriate place [banking channel] first with payment of a nominal amount [tax]. Then they [black money holders] will have to pay tax regularly.... If you want to catch fish, you have to use bait," she said.

The premier was addressing a discussion, organised by Awami League at its Dhaka district office in the capital's Tejgaon, marking the historic Six-Point Day.

Hasina, also the AL president, said many raised questions regarding the budgetary provision for legalising black money and argued that it would discourage those who pay taxes legally.

IMPLEMENTING BUDGET FOR 2024-25

It'll be challenging

Says MCCI; FICCI hails comprehensive fiscal plan in proposed budget

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Implementation of the new budget will be highly challenging in the current context of the Bangladesh economy, Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce and Industry (MCCI) said in a post-budget reaction yesterday.

"MCCI has consistently recommended significant structural reforms in tax administration to enhance effective revenue collection. In the present framework, a considerable number of qualified entities with high income remain outside the scope of taxation.

"On the other hand, there is a growing imposition of tax burden on individuals and businesses who fulfill their tax obligations regularly. MCCI strongly emphasises the need for a proper resolution of the matter," said MCCI President Kamran T Rahman.

According to him, the final budget deficit is likely to widen because of ongoing tax reform prescribed by the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

Under the IMF loan conditions, the tax-GDP ratio is expected to rise by 0.5 percent to 8.8 percent, potentially increasing the tax burden on taxpayers, he added.

He also expressed concerns over the potential impact of growing inflation on future business expansion.

However, he hailed the government's decision to reduce the corporate tax rate by 2.5 percentage points for unlisted companies and one-person companies.

Meanwhile, the Foreign Investors' Chamber of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) has lauded the government's efforts in crafting a comprehensive fiscal plan in the proposed budget.

The budget will foster a conducive environment for business growth, it said in a press release yesterday.

The holy Eid-ul-Azha, the second biggest religious festival of the Muslim community, will be celebrated across the country on June 17.

The National Moon Sighting Committee announced the date at a meeting held at the Baitul Mukarram National Mosque in the capital after the moon of the holy month Zilhaj was sighted yesterday.

As the moon was sighted, the holy Zilhaj month will begin today, according to a press release of the Islamic Foundation.

The Eid-ul-Azha is celebrated on the 10th of Zilhaj month of the Hijri calendar as Hazrat Ibrahim (AS), on this day, some 4,500 years ago, offered to sacrifice his beloved son Hazrat Ismail (AS) who willingly submitted to the will of his father to please Allah.

CAFÉ LA VÉRANDA

A Parisian feel in the city

RBR

Tiny round tables, wrought iron chairs with red seaters, a grand piano on lend from Notre Dame College, a tiny reading corner, a food counter, and the air that has a hint of freshly brewed coffee or tea make this eatery -- Café la Véranda -- inviting. Tucked inside the Alliance Française de Dhaka in Dhanmondi, this neat, with no razzmatazz décor, café is open for all.

"Alliance Francaise de Dhaka was established in 1959 to promote French language and culture in Bangladesh. Since then, it has been successfully fostering cultural exploration and intercultural dialogue, and empowering individuals to expand their perspectives," says Md Mamun Ar Rashid, programme officer, Alliance Française de Dhaka.

Art exhibitions, French film screenings, lectures, and concerts are regularly organised to promote French culture and at the same time encourage the richness of Bengali culture. The lively café is open to all sorts of cultural events like live music sessions, instrument recitals, jazz nights, and exhibitions. It is not exactly an open-air, French café beside a cobbled lane, but as the background piano or violin plays, it lends the place a French vibe.

Their social calendar is full of happening events in Dhaka. Moreover, you can also book the space for musical events, exhibitions, and such.

Café la Véranda has an inviting milieu to it, which puts visitors in a relaxed mood. One can just sit by themselves for hours, reading a newspaper with a cup of handmade coffee, and contemplate whatever is on their mind. They can have animated conversations with friends over cups of tea.

Here, students come to work on their projects, artists come to get inspired by like-minded fellows, and intellectuals ruminate on philosophical aspects of life and living, politics, and literature. Celebrated professors of Dhaka University are frequent visitors.

Apart from visiting the café to pass time, its refreshments are something to take note of.

Arshad Ali, cash in-charge of Café la Véranda, says a special French patisserie caters for their food like canelé -- a pastry-flavoured, tender custard centre with a dark thick caramelised crust. It tastes divine with hot tea or their handmade coffee.

"I was taught to make coffee by one of our directors and customers prefer that over filtered coffee. Paris-brest, a choux pastry with praline flavoured cream, profiteroles, quiche Lorraine, our menu is selected and we are always sold out," Ali says.

So, if you are in the mood for some downtime, this is the place you should be. Despite no posh décor and a celebrated chef's menu, Café la Véranda place gives you quietness and space to reflect upon yourself. And that is precious!

16 sued over murder of BCL man in B'baria

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Brahmanbaria

Sixteen people, including a Chhatra League leader, have been sued over the murder of a BCL activist, who was shot dead in broad daylight in Brahmanbaria during the fourth phase of the upazila polls on Wednesday.

The victim's father filed the case against district unit BCL Vice President Hasan Al Farabi Joy, and 10-15 unidentified others with Brahmanbaria Sadar Model Police Station Thursday night.

Ayesh Rahman Izaz, 22, a second-year honours student of botany at Brahmanbaria Government College, was allegedly shot by Hasan Al Farabi in the district town's College Para Hostel area.

This newspaper has seen a video showing Hasan hiding his gun and fleeing the scene after the shooting.

No arrests were made till the writing of this report at 9:00pm yesterday, according to Brahmanbaria Sadar Model Police Station Officer-in-Charge Mohammad Aslam Hossain.

An elderly woman was found dead at her home in Birganj upazila, Dinajpur, yesterday.

Police recovered the body of Rezina Begum, 75, wife of Md Shabdul Islam of Dhangaon village. Her throat had been slit.

Md Moinul Islam, inspector (investigation) of Birganj Police Station, said they are currently without leads but confirmed that it was a planned murder.

Her husband discovered the body in her separate room in the morning.

Informed, police recovered her body and sent it to M Abdur Rahim Medical College Hospital in Dinajpur for an autopsy.

15 hurt in AL factional clash

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

At least 15 people were injured in a clash between two groups of Awami League in Chattogram's Anwara upazila yesterday.

According to locals, one of the groups is loyal to Deputy Minister for Finance Wasika Ayesha Khan and the other is a supporter of former Land Minister Saifuzzaman Chowdhury.

Of the injured, Anwara upazila unit AL president MA Mannan was admitted to Chattogram Medical College Hospital.

Witnesses said the clash ensued when both groups brought out separate processions in front of Boirag Community Centre around 4:30pm welcoming the national budget for the fiscal year 2024-2025.

PM defends

"Prices of different products have gone up. Anyone who owns a piece of one katha land is a millionaire [kotipoti] now. But nobody sells land at government-fixed rates. People get some additional money from the sale of land at higher prices. They keep the extra money out of the banking channel," she added.

The PM said the size of the former BNP government's last national budget was Tk 62,000 crore and the figure went up to Tk 68,000 crore during the rule of the caretaker government (in 2008). However, the AL government has been able to place a budget of Tk 797,000 crore in parliament this time, she added.

"In the proposed budget [for 20024-25 fiscal year], we have attached the highest priority to education, health, agriculture, local industries and social safety to ensure the basic rights of the people," Hasina said.

Talking about the high inflation worldwide, the AL chief said people from the limited-income groups are suffering due to inflation. "But we have introduced family cards for them so that they can purchase some essentials, including rice, pulse and edible oil, at fair prices. We are providing food to the extreme poor."

Besides, the government is providing financial assistance to the people under some 150 social safety net programmes and providing free textbooks to school students and some 30 types of free medicines from the community clinics to the people.

"The prices of commodities usually go up during the monsoon season. Keeping this in mind, we will start the sale of commodities using family cards."

Terming the control of inflation the biggest challenge, Hasina said production and supply of food must be enhanced.

About the budget deficit, the PM said the budget deficit is now 4.6 percent. In many countries, including the developed nations, the figure is higher than this, she added.

She reiterated her call for the people to cultivate every piece of land to boost food production in the country.

About the historic six-point demand, Hasina said it was the "Magna Carta" for the Bangalee nation, which ultimately brought the country's independence.

Drawing a comparison of deprivation between the then East Pakistan and West Pakistan, the premier said Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman had strongly protested the long-running deprivation.

She highlighted how the Father of the Nation carried out campaigns across the country to make the six-point demand popular among the people.

The AL chief asked her party leaders and activists to stand by the people of the country and work for them.

On June 7, 1966, Bangabandhu launched a massive movement against the misrule of the Pakistanis on the basis of the six-point demand.

BLACK MONEY DOMINATES BRIEFING

According to the new provision, no authority can raise any question if taxpayers, both individuals and companies, pay tax at fixed rates for immovable properties such as flats and land and 15 percent tax on other assets, including cash and savings instruments.

Abu Hena Md Rahmatul Muneem, chairman of the National Board of Revenue (NBR), defended the amnesty, saying there has been demand from the business community and the public to allow the scope for legalising undeclared money.

He said companies are finding it difficult to come up with an explanation about the source of income or assets when it comes to compliance with the document verification system, a piece of software that aims to prevent unruly firms from submitting falsified or multiple audited financial statements to the NBR.

In reply to a query from a journalist, Abu Hena said there is no scope for Benazir Ahmed, a former inspector general of police, to whiten his alleged ill-gotten money and assets since he is facing an investigation.

Mashiur Rahman, economic affairs adviser to the prime minister, said, "The ACC (Anti-Corruption Commission) is probing the matter. Steps will be taken as per the laws."

Rahmatul Muneem said the NBR does not want to see zero duty on anything.

Responding to the capital gains tax imposed on investors, he said it can't be said the tax cuts alone can revitalise the stock market.

"Various tax cuts had been in place for the stock market for a long time, but the market has not surged proportionately. This means the market faces other challenges.

"We are trying to end tax exemptions gradually in all sectors. It has already been done in many areas."

Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhury said food inflation rate in Bangladesh is similar to that of many other countries.

RESERVES, SAFETY NET AND NPLS

The government has projected that the foreign currency reserves would go up to $29.1 billion at the end of the current fiscal year and $32 billion at the end of FY25.

On Tuesday, it stood at $18.67 billion if calculated in line with the International Monetary Fund's manual.

When asked how the reserves would climb by $13 billion in the span of a year, Waseqa Ayesha Khan, state minister for finance, replied that the target would be attained riding on the crawling peg as well as the offshore banking operations, which will help attract foreign deposits.

Ahasanul Islam Titu, state minister for commerce, said the main challenge for the budget is to contain high inflation.

In order to support the poor and low-income groups, assistance is being given and the size of social safety net programmes will expand in the future, he said.

Mashiur said the current level of non-performing loans (NPLs) has not accumulated in a single day. Rather, they have piled up over the years.

On Thursday, Bangladesh Bank reported that the NPLs amounted to Tk 182,295 crore as of March.

"Our target is to bring down NPLs. There are provisions to set aside funds to cover NPLs. We will ensure compliance," the adviser said.

Questions were asked whether tax justice is ensured when a lawmaker is allowed to import cars by paying 25 percent tax while common people must pay up to 600 percent tax to import a car.

Mashiur said lawmakers were first allowed to import cars duty-free in 1988 during the regime of Hussain Muhammad Ershad.

"When a provision is introduced, it is difficult to change it," he said.

Md Tazul Islam, minister for local government division, and Abdur Rouf Talukder, governor of the central bank, were also present.

Tax exemption in FY25 rises

In the following year, the expenditure stood at Tk 115,616 crore, out of which Tk 71,954 crore was given to companies and Tk 43,662 crore to individual taxpayers. The sum of exemptions given in 2021-22 through VAT has been estimated at Tk 129,570 crore.

"This tax subsidy amount is very high," said Ahsan H Mansur, executive director of the Policy Research Institute (PRI) of Bangladesh.

"To reduce the tax subsidies, special attention from the government is needed."

However, the economist acknowledged, tax subsidies have made a positive impact on overall economic activities. "For instance, it has helped the domestic electronics sector expand fast."

Mansur said if the NBR could collect the exempted revenue, it would help the government cut the revenue deficit.

"So, considering the reality, the government will have to allow exemptions in some special cases."

On the other hand, everything should be brought under taxation except for some essential commodities, such as rice, pulses and wheat, he added.

Mohammad Abdur Razzaque, chairman of the Research and Policy Integration for Development Bangladesh, a think-tank, called for tax rationalisation.

"Tax benefits such as subsidies and exemptions shouldn't be set in general. It should be set on a priority basis."

The tariff rate in Bangladesh is one of the highest in the world and if this persists, the country will not be able to sign trade agreements after its LDC graduation.

Towfiqul Islam Khan, a senior research fellow at the Centre for Policy Dialogue, said tax exemptions are given without any sunset clause. As such, many sectors have been enjoying these facilities for decades.

"This is a big problem."

Out of the recipients of tax exemptions, almost half -- 47 percent -- went to salaries and other sectors.

The microcredit, remittance, and capital gain sectors each received 10 percent of the total tax expenditure in FY22.

"Hence, the government's ability to extend such strategic support to other sectors is curtailed. It is critical to analyse the impact of such facilities," Towfiqul said.

As policy decisions are heavily influenced by vested groups, these decisions are often not taken in an objective manner, he added.

The next highest recipients include the power and energy sector at 7 percent, the garment sector at 4 percent, and economic zones and hi-tech parks at 3 percent.

"Although tax exemptions have accelerated investment and employment, the tax base is shrinking to a large extent," Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali said in his budget speech on Thursday.

In this context, there is no alternative to increasing the tax-GDP ratio to sustain the country's ongoing development.

"Tax exemption is one of the major obstacles to improving the tax-GDP ratio. We should not issue special orders for exemptions unless there is an extraordinary situation. This will bring transparency in revenue administration and help manage the budget deficit," he added.

As a part of the move, the finance minister has proposed a tax on capital gains exceeding Tk 50 lakh.

down inflation to 6.5 percent while raising GDP growth to 6.75 percent is overambitious.

"These projections were made without taking into account the current realities. So, many of the budgetary targets will not be achieved," she added.

More importantly, due to the government's inability to acknowledge the nature of the ongoing economic challenges, the proposed budgetary measures are weak and inadequate, Fahmida said.

"Overall, this is an ordinary budget during an extraordinary time," she said.

Against this backdrop, she highlighted the skyrocketing prices of essentials, continuous devaluation of the taka, stagnant private investment, slowdown in economic growth, massive erosion of forex reserves, heavy government borrowing from the banking sector and escalating non-performing loans as the key macroeconomic challenges.

The government is aiming for a gross domestic product (GDP) growth of 6.75 percent in fiscal 2024-25, which is much higher than the provisional estimate of 5.8 percent for the current fiscal year.

In order to achieve this growth, the government has targeted to increase the private investment-to-GDP ratio to 27.3 percent in fiscal 2024-25 from 23.5 percent in fiscal 2023-24.

Raising the ratio will require additional private investment of Tk 343,544 crore, which is almost impossible to attain given the existing contractionary monetary policy.

Fahmida also said it remains unclear how the government will achieve its goals to strengthen the local currency to Tk 114 per US dollar and boost the country's forex reserve to $32 billion. With the exchange rates now almost fully market-driven, each US dollar currently costs Tk 117.9.

Prof Mustafizur Rahman, a distinguished fellow of the CPD, said the tax-free income slab should have been raised as people's purchasing power has been squeezed by higher inflation for the past two years.

The budget plans go against the spirit of the election manifesto of the ruling Awami League, which said it would show zero tolerance against loan defaulters and tax evaders, he said.

However, the government in the proposed budget has allowed people to legalise their undisclosed income by paying a small amount of tax.

"This is something that is discouraging honest taxpayers. It's a very sad step, which is not acceptable legally or morally," Rahman said.

He added that the CPD believes the policy will have little effect as the syndicate of black money holders does not even want to pay the proposed 15 percent tax.

Khondaker Golam Moazzem, research director of the CPD, said the private sector is facing a tough situation due to a drop in credit flow amid the contractionary monetary policy, but the government has not brought down its own spending.

"When will we see the government cut its spending?" he questioned.

The government aims to raise more funds through value-added tax and hike electricity prices four times a year, which will ultimately fuel inflation further, Moazzem added.

Though the government has reduced source tax on some essential items, he expressed doubt whether consumers would be able to reap the benefits.

"The benefit will go to the businessmen who control the supply of the goods. So, it will not contribute to a decline in prices," he said.

Without correcting the supply system and market management, the price level will not come down, Moazzem added.

Towfiqul Islam Khan, senior research fellow of the CPD, also spoke at the event.

the support of regional parties to form the government, a shift that initially spooked markets and worries analysts about policy certainty and fiscal discipline.

"It is my good fortune that all of you from NDA have chosen me to lead," Modi said earlier yesterday after NDA lawmakers voted for him to head their coalition.

"No alliance has ever been as successful as the NDA," he said, after lawmakers and senior leaders thumped tables and applauded, with some standing and chanting "Modi, Modi!" in the central hall of the old parliament building.

"We have won the majority... but to run the country it is unanimity that is crucial...we will strive for unanimity," he said, in a sign of the change in style coalition government may force on a leader used to ruling with a strong hand.

The new government would, among others, focus on raising savings of the middle class and improve the quality of their lives as the "middle class is the driving force of the country", Modi added.

Key NDA leaders - whose support has wavered in the past as they hopped in and out of alliances - praised Modi and expressed confidence in his leadership, reports Reuters.

"I am confident that whatever is left he will now complete it. We will be with him at every step," said Nitish Kumar, chief minister of the eastern state of Bihar whose Janata Dal (United) party is the third largest in the NDA with 12 lawmakers.

Chief justice pays homage to Bangabandhu

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan, alongside his Nepalese counterpart Bishowambhar Pd Srestha and Bhutan High Court's Justice Lobzang Rinzin Yargay, paid homage to Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman at his grave in Gopalganj's Tungipara yesterday.

They also offered prayers for the martyrs of the August 15, 1975 massacre, SC sources said.

Justice Bishowambhar and Justice Lobzang arrived in Bangladesh on Thursday at the invitation of Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan to attend the two-day "International Conference on Judiciary Across the Borders" in Dhaka, which began yesterday.

They held a closed-door meeting with the judges of Bangladesh Supreme Court at its Judges' Lounge on the first day of the conference.

'The country needed him now'

Say speakers on Serajul Alam Khan

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Serajul Alam Khan

In the times of criminalised politics, the leadership of Serajul Alam Khan was very much needed, said speakers at a discussion yesterday.

Serajul Alam Khan Foundation and Research Institute organised the event marking his first death anniversary at Jatiya Press Club.

Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal (JSD-Inu) President Hasanul Haq Inu highlighted Serajul Alam Khan's pivotal role in advancing the six-point demand.

"He and Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman were like a single soul dwelling in two bodies. He worked as a field hero to implement Bangabandhu's skillful decisions," he said.

Supreme Court lawyer and rights activist ZI Khan Panna said the Liberation War of Bangladesh and Serajul are inseparable.

"His [Serajul] contribution to the history of Bangladesh's Liberation War could not be erased despite repeated attempts. Even in the final days of his life, he wanted to see unity among people. However, in today's Bangladesh, those who earn in dishonest ways are being encouraged," he said.

Khalekuzzaman, adviser of the Bangladesh Samajtantrik Dal, said Serajul will be remembered for his uncompromising political approach.

Shusashoner Jonno Nagorik Secretary Badiul Alam Majumdar said Bangladesh would not have been liberated so quickly if it weren't for people like Serajul Alam Khan.

Mahbub Ullah, economist and former Dhaka University professor, expressed concerns about capitalism's criminalised form in Bangladesh, stating that overcoming it will require even more effort than in the seventies and eighties.

He said the absence of Serajul has left a void in this struggle.

Journalist Abu Saeed Khan, president of the foundation, presided over the meeting while writer and researcher Shamsuddin Peyara read an article titled "Freedom Struggle and Serajul Alam Khan".

The notification mentioned that Nayeemul will remain in office for the duration of the prime minister's term or subject to her satisfaction from the date of his joining.

The post remained vacant since the demise of former press secretary, veteran journalist Ihsanul Karim Helal. He passed away on March 10.

Nayeemul was the founding editor of the daily Amader Shomay in 2003. He has been frequently seen on TV talk shows since 2007.

Lightning kills two in Natore

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Natore

Two people were killed by lightning strikes in Natore yesterday.

In Naldanga upazila, Md Kamrul Hossain, 35, died when thunderbolts struck him while he was fishing in the Barnai river at Komarpur around 1:30pm, said Brahmapur Union Parishad Chairman SM Ashrafuzzaman Mithu.

In Gurudaspur upazila, a woman named Abera Bagem, 40, was killed by lightning in the municipality area around 2:00pm. The incident happened while the mother of two children was taking her ducks back home from a nearby pond.

Expat dies in bike accident

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Munshiganj

A man was killed when the motorbike he was riding got sandwiched between two trucks in Sreenagar of Munshiganj yesterday.

Another rider was injured in the accident, which occurred on the Dhaka-Dohar road at Baribarkhola in Baghra.

Mizanur Rahman, 40, an expatriate, came home on leave a month ago, said Baghra police camp in-charge Sekander Hossain. He was supposed to go back to Switzerland today.

POST-POLLS VIOLENCE

Seven hurt in rivals' attack in Sunamganj

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Moulvibazar

At least seven people, including a defeated chairman candidate of the Madhyanagar Upazila Parishad election in Sunamganj, were allegedly injured in an attack by their rivals yesterday.

The election for the upazila parishad was held on Wednesday. Abdur Razzak Bhuiyan was elected as chairman, defeating his rival candidate Saidur Rahman.

Yesterday afternoon, Saidur was talking to his supporters near his residence at Datiapara village when over 50 followers of Razzak attacked them with sticks and sharp weapons, alleged Saidur. "At least seven people, including me and my son, were injured," he claimed.

Saidur alleged that Razzak's nephew, Azim Mahmud, led the attack.

Both Razzak and Azim denied the allegation, saying that Saidur's supporters had attacked them earlier.

Five injured in Tangail

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Tangail

At least five people were injured in post-election violence in Basail upazila, Tangail, on Thursday night.

Dilip Chandra Sarkar, Nani Gopal Sarkar, Minti Rani Sarkar, Basanti Rani Sarkar, and Suryamani Rani Sarkar were injured in the incident occurred at Nakachim Purbapara, said locals.

Dilip filed a complaint with Basail Police Station that night.

Around 12 to 15 supporters of Kazi Shahidul Islam, a defeated candidate in the recently held upazila election, allegedly attacked Dilip's house with weapons that night.

Kazi Alid Islam, the winning candidate, demanded necessary actions.

Shahidul Islam could not be contacted as his phone was found switched off.

Basail Police Station Officer-in-Charge Mohammad Mazharul Amin said they are trying to arrest the culprits.

Empower indigenous

Rezwana Karim Snigdha, an associate professor at Jahangirnagar University, highlighted the silence surrounding violence against indigenous women within their communities, leading to social and legal discrimination.

Shahnaz Sumi, director of Bangladesh Nari Progati Sangha, said the women's movement and the indigenous women's movement share the same foundation.

"But indigenous women experience discrimination on multiple levels -- as women, as indigenous individuals, and specifically as indigenous women."

Maria Mrong, convener of BIWN, said awareness has increased in both indigenous and broader women's communities.

"If we become well-educated, we can achieve even more," she added.

The speakers advocated for constitutional recognition for people living in the CHT and the full implementation of the peace accord.

Gourango Patro, vice-chairperson of Kapaeeng Foundation, and Rekha Saha, legal aid secretary of Bangladesh Mahila Parishad, also spoke.

Realistic

He suggested that the government should allocate special funds in the budget for cash transfers to those affected by the recent cyclone.

More innovative strategies in the health budget, alongside an increase in its allocation, could have reduced the burden of health expenditure on people during this period of uncontrolled inflation, he said.

He also urged the government to increase the allocation for the agriculture sector, as it increased to only 3.59 percent from the existing 3.5 percent.

Atiur also suggested prioritising adding new taxpayers rather than burdening those already paying taxes. For this, the entire revenue collection structure needs to be overhauled, including the capacity of the revenue board and digitisation, he said.

Meanwhile, he remarked that the proposal of a 15 percent tax on black money against the 30 percent tax on the highest income through legitimate means is unacceptable.

Finally, at the end of the day, the proposed budget is realistic and timely, he observed.

However, since many cuts have to be made, implementing this tight budget will require more skill and dedication than ever before, he added.

Need combined effort to protect environment

Speakers tell seminar

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government alone cannot protect the country's environment, and a combined effort is needed in this regard, said speakers at an event on Thursday.

Eighteen green organisations -- including Bangladesh Poribesh Andolon, Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association, Association for Land Reform and Development, and Nagorik Uddyog -- organised the seminar at the Department of Environment auditorium in the capital.

Lawmaker Amatul Kibria Keya Chowdhury said political and administrative leaders are responsible for environmental destruction, not the poor.

Amatul emphasised the need for proper planning in haor development to prevent floods and called for accountability among officials.

Lawmaker Tanvir Shakil Joy said raising awareness among the people is important. He also called for an increased national budget for environmental protection.

DoE Director General Abdul Hamid said environmental impact assessments for sand mining leases would be conducted in the future, along with plans to amend the Environment Act to ensure stricter regulations.

Bapa Vice President Iqbal Habib said, "Rajuk's role should be to protect the capital's land, but often the authorities act like developers."

Empower indigenous women: speakers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Representation of indigenous women in parliament and local government bodies is vital to protect their rights, said speakers at an event yesterday.

The remarks were made at the fifth national indigenous women conference, "Strengthen the United Movement to Establish the Rights of Indigenous Women," organised by the Bangladesh Indigenous Women Network in the capital's CBCB center on Asad Avenue.

Data presented at the conference revealed that between 2007 and 2022, 747 indigenous women and girls were victims of physical and sexual abuse, yet they did not receive fair trials.

Khushi Kabir, social activist and coordinator of Nijera Kori, pointed out that despite Bangladesh emerging as a secular country after its independence, oppression against indigenous communities persisted.

"There should be special arrangements for these marginalised communities so that they too can move forward along with others," she added.

BUDGET 2024-25

Realistic and cautionary

Says ex-BB governor Atiur Rahman

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The proposed budget for the 2024-25 fiscal year has been realistic and cautionary, as the government increased the budget by only 4.6 percent from the outgoing fiscal year, said Atiur Rahman, former governor of Bangladesh Bank.

"The social sectors have not been exempted to the level intended from the overall budget cuts. Allocations for social security programmes could have been more generous to adjust for inflation," he said during a press briefing on the budget at Unnayan Shamannay's office yesterday.

Atiur, also its chairperson, said the ongoing economic challenges will not make it easy to reduce inflation to 6.5 percent from nearly 10 percent. "If the inflation rate can be reduced to the targeted level, it will relieve people from its pressure," he said.

It's to promote black money

Says Fakhrul

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday said termed proposed national budget for the fiscal year 2024-25 black money-friendly, saying it will further widen scope for corruption in the country.

"This budget is for promoting black money. This is also the budget of how black money can be whitened, corruption can be expanded, and money can be made [illegally]," he said.

Speaking at a seminar, he said the budget was not formulated for people's welfare.

"There is no need to talk about the budget. You see the cartoon on the front page of The Daily Star, where a huge elephant is sitting on top of many ordinary farmers, workers, hardworking people... This brilliant cartoon has depicted a clear picture of the budget," he said.

Fakhrul said the government has allocated a huge amount of money for unproductive sectors for creating more scopes to plunder public money.

High price of cattle irks buyers

HELEMUL ALAM

Despite the government's announcement of a surplus of sacrificial animals this year, their prices remain high so far, compared to the same time last year.

Traders at Gabtoli cattle market attribute this to the increased cost of cattle feed, transportation, and staff salaries.

Fisheries and Livestock Minister Abdur Rahman has recently said the number of available sacrificial animals this year is 1.29 crore. This is at least 22.8 lakh more than the demand and 4,44,034 more than last year.

This includes around 52 lakh cows, 1.60 lakh buffaloes, 68 lakh goats, 767,743 sheep, and 1,850 other sacrificial animals.

Md Dhoni Mandal, a cattle trader, said, "A mid-sized bull is selling for Tk 10 to 20 thousand higher than last year. Customer numbers have dropped. Last year, I sold around a hundred bulls a few weeks before Eid. The number has dropped to 10 this year."

Sabeton, Mondol's wife who helps in raising the bulls, said local farmers will suffer if the government doesn't stop cattle smuggling from India.

Monzu Bepari of Manikganj said, "I sold around 250 bulls 15 days before Eid-ul-Azha last year. So far I sold only 100 this year."

Md Santu Bepary, who brought four bulls to Gabtoli and plans to bring around 100 more on Wednesday, said sacrificial animals are available in local markets, but prices remain high. "We have to pay an extra Tk 10,000 to Tk 15,000 for a mid-sized bull outside Dhaka."

Regarding the low sales at Gabtoli market, Md Jahangir, a cattle food seller, said many people buy bulls directly from farms well before Eid-ul-Azha, leading to fewer customers at this permanent cattle market.

Doly Akhter from Dholaipar, who went to Gabtoli cattle market 10 days before Eid to buy a bull for her son Ibrahim, said prices of bulls, buffaloes, and goats are higher this year. "I couldn't buy it, it's beyond my reach," she added.

Five other buyers echoed her.

Amzad Hossain, a Gabtoli trader who bought 28 buffaloes, said small buffaloes are costing Tk 2 lakh this year, which is Tk 20,000 more than last year. Meanwhile, large buffaloes cost Tk 8 lakh.

Md Babul, a trader, said mid and small sized goats were Tk 1,000 to Tk 1,200 costlier than last year, with a 13kg goat selling for Tk 1,300 and a 45kg goat for Tk 50,000.

Besides, two camels were brought to the market, and their prices are also very high. Trader Amzad Hossain, who brought them from Pakistan, is asking for Tk 26 lakh for each camel, noting that if there were no restrictions on bringing them from India and raising them locally, prices would not be so high.

Sixteen cattle markets have been set up in two city corporation areas in Dhaka this year.

DEFAMATION CASE

India court grants bail to Rahul Gandhi

AFP, Bengaluru

An Indian court yesterday granted bail to opposition leader Rahul Gandhi in the latest of several defamation cases brought against him for accusing Prime Minister Narendra Modi or his party of corruption.

Gandhi, 53, has faced numerous legal cases brought by members of the ruling Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) and was last year briefly disqualified from parliament after a criminal libel conviction.

He is one of several top opposition leaders to face criminal proceedings in cases they claim are politically driven by Modi's government.

The latest case stems from advertisements published by Gandhi's Congress party accusing the BJP of corruptly taking commissions from infrastructure projects in southern Karnataka state.

Gandhi, 53, has not spent any time in custody over the charge. He was granted bail in a five-minute procedural hearing held to determine if he should remain at liberty, Congress spokesperson Randeep Surjewala confirmed to AFP.

Two other senior Congress figures in Karnataka state had already been bailed last week, neither of whom were in custody beforehand.

Gandhi was sentenced to two years imprisonment last year in 2023 in a separate case in Gujarat but was not jailed after appealing with India's top court.

The sentence did however force his brief disqualification from parliament until the Supreme Court suspended his conviction.

Yesterday's case came days after Modi and the BJP won nationwide elections, albeit with a reduced majority forcing them to rely on coalition partners to govern.

Critics have accused Modi and his party of using the justice system to target political rivals.

Rural vote fall cost Modi a decisive polls win

Show voter analysis as discontent grows in India's countryside over lack of jobs, high inflation

REUTERS, New Delhi

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi's party lost a third of its rural parliamentary constituencies in last month's election, a voter analysis shows, reflecting discontent in the countryside over lack of jobs and high inflation.

The Bharatiya Janata Party's poor showing in the vast heartland cost the ruling party its majority in parliament, forcing Modi to depend on regional allies to muster the simple majority required to govern the world's most populous country.

The BJP, which held 201 rural constituencies in the 543-member parliament, retained only 126 of them in the mammoth election, the analysis showed.

The seats do not include those in the regions of Assam, Jammu and Kashmir and Ladakh, as a reorientation of constituencies there meant there is no direct comparison with data from the prior election.

Rahul Verma, a political expert at the New Delhi-based Centre For Policy Research, said Modi's party especially lost ground in the big heartland states of Uttar Pradesh and Rajasthan, which have trailed more prosperous southern and western parts of India in the pace of economic development.

"The rural distress would have played a factor," he said. Under Modi, India has become one of the world's fastest-growing economies, but there are too few jobs for the millions entering the workforce each year and growth has been uneven.

Families in rural India, home to 60 percent of its 1.4 billion people, have seen incomes halve as they struggle to keep up with rising costs and fewer jobs.

S African parties cool towards ANC's coalition plan

AFP, Johannesburg

Plans by South Africa's ANC to form a government of national unity after last week's general election met a cool reception yesterday, with some potential partners reserving judgement or appearing hostile to the idea.

President Cyril Ramaphosa's African National Congress won 40 percent of the vote -- its lowest score ever -- and for the first time since the advent of democracy in 1994 it needs the backing of other groups to govern. The new parliament is to meet in about 10 days and one of its first tasks will be to elect a president to form a new government.

After marathon ANC talks on Thursday, Ramaphosa said the party had decided to try to band together with a broad group of opposition parties, ranging from the far right to the hard left.

But Julius Malema, leader of the radical leftist Economic Freedom Fighters (EFF), seemed unwilling to join hands with rivals holding radically different political views.

"We can't share power with the enemy," Malema wrote on X, formerly known as Twitter.

Hajj pilgrimage to start June 14: KSA

AFP, Riyadh

Saudi Arabia said the hajj will start on June 14 after astronomical observatories spotted the crescent moon Thursday evening, signalling the beginning of the month in which the annual pilgrimage falls.

The Supreme Court determined that Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th and final month of the Islamic calendar, begins today, the official Saudi Press Agency (SPA) said.

The hajj is one of the five pillars of Islam and must be undertaken at least once by all Muslims with the means.

It involves a series of rituals completed over at least four days in Makkah and its surroundings in the west of Saudi Arabia.

The high point comes on the second day, when pilgrims gather for prayers on Mount Arafat, where the Prophet Mohammed (PBUH) delivered his final sermon.

That will occur on June 15 this year, and the Muslim holiday of Eid al-Adha will fall on June 16, SPA said.

Saudi Arabia is home to the holiest shrines in Islam at Makkah and Medina.

USA stun cricket world, curious fans was heralded across the cricketing world, few but the hardcore fans of what is a very niche sport in the USA, witnessed it.

The tournament is being co-hosted by the USA with the game played in a converted minor-league baseball park in the Grand Prairie suburb of Dallas, Texas which holds just 7,000 spectators.

The game wasn't even broadcast on American television but was instead only shown on the cricket-specialist Willow TV subscription channel and streaming service.

But online and in social media, American sports fans quickly became aware of their team's achievement.

NPR public radio tried to put the win into context for those not familiar with the sport.

"Team USA just beat Pakistan in Super Over, the baseball equivalent is extra innings," they reported.

"Just to put this into an American sports context, Pakistan losing to the US is like the Boston Red Sox losing to the Durham Bulls," they added, referring to the minor league baseball team from North Carolina.

Outside of the USA though there was no need for analogies.

The UK's Times called it "one of the biggest upsets in cricket history" while Australia's Daily Telegraph said the Americans had "stunned world cricket".

It will all be music to the ears of the game's governing body, the ICC, who chose the USA as co-host for this tournament, alongside the West Indies, to help efforts to popularise the T20 format in the USA.

As well as Texas, Florida and New York are also holding games in the group stage before the Caribbean takes sole ownership of the later rounds.

The sport has a curious history in North America -- the first ever international match featured the USA against Canada in 1844 but the lingering influence of the colonial-era game faded as baseball gained prominence.

The Americans have never featured in either the T20 World Cup or the ODI version and not even they would have expected such a start to the tournament with the Pakistan win coming after a thrilling victory over Canada on Saturday.

The USA team, coached by Australian Stuart Law, has a strong Indian influence and is made up of immigrants who have played the bulk of their cricket in the country, along with some players who switched allegiance from other nations after meeting qualification criteria, such as ex-New Zealand all-rounder Corey Anderson.

The game has been growing at grassroots level with thriving local leagues in all three of the states which are hosting games plus in North Carolina and California.

Last year saw the launch of the domestic competition, Major League Cricket, which has begun to attract top international players and investment from Indian cricket sources.

The ICC have played down talk of 'converting' sceptical mainstream American sports fans as a goal for this tournament but the win is bound to raise their hopes.

"Now that's the way to grow the game in the States," tweeted former England captain Michael Vaughan after the match.

Joe Lynn, the curator of the United States Cricket Museum at Haverford College, near Philadelphia, said the wins were "the perfect start" for what he sees as a comeback for the game.

"Perhaps it's always been a misnomer to say cricket died in the US at the hands of baseball, but I think it's been in hibernation more than anything else. With Major League Cricket and this World Cup it is a reawakening of sorts," he told the BBC.

USA captain Monank Patel, whose crucial 50 from 38 balls earned him the man-of-the-match award, said he was sure the victory would be a game-changer for the sport.

"Of course, beating Pakistan in a World Cup is going to open many doors for us," he said.

"Obviously hosting the World Cup in the USA and performing here as a team, it helps us to grow cricket in the USA...and playing against Pakistan for the first time in the World Cup and beating them - it was an unbelievable performance from our side," he said.

It'll be challenging

"With a keen focus on containing inflation, reducing aggregate demand, and nurturing the supply side of the market, this budget lays a strong foundation for stabilising the economy," said FICCI President Mohammad Zaved Akhtar.

He said the budget outlines several measures to control inflation and stabilise the economy, including tightening monetary policy by raising interest rates to 8.5 percent.

The standing lending facility (SLF) and standing deposit facility (SDF) rates have been set at 10 percent and 7 percent, respectively, to curb inflation by reducing money supply and encouraging savings, he added.

Additionally, substantial investments aim to boost agricultural productivity by 20 percent and industrial output by 15 percent through technological advancements and infrastructural improvements, he said.

"This is expected to balance demand and supply, thereby stabilising the economy. The proposal to reduce the corporate tax rate for companies, which are not listed on the stock market, from 27.5 percent to 25 percent, is commendable," he said.

However, Akhtar said the budget lacks allocation or specific directions for the automation of tax, VAT, and customs administration to increase efficiency and simplify the tax collection process.

The absence of such reforms means the complexities related to VAT credit and potential financial strain on businesses will persist, the FICCI president said.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Bangladesh (ICAB) welcomed the introduction of prospective rate of tax, reduction of tax rate for private companies and one-person companies and reduction of source tax on daily essentials.

In a statement, the ICAB said despite the Russia-Ukraine war, high inflation, rising commodity prices, dollar crisis, slowdown in business investment and employment, and other global uncertainties, the government has taken a challenge of implementing development budget of Tk 265,000 crore, which is a very encouraging step to move forward to a developing economy.

A programme was organisedon Thursday night to celebrate Touhid's victory. Ali was returning home around 3:00am after attending the event. When he reached his village, the assailants opened fire on him and fled, said Abdur Razzak, officer-in-charge of Jashore Kotwali Police Station, quoting locals.

Locals took him to Jashore General Hospital where doctors declared him dead, the OC added.

Contacted, Dr Suzayet Hossain said Ali was brought dead to the hospital and two bullet marks were found in his body -- one in his head and another in a leg.

Ali was an activist of Jubo League, the youth wing of the ruling Awami League, said Rantu Chakladar, member secretary of the convening committee of Jashore Jubo League.

Police are investigating the incident and additional law enforcers have been deployed in the area to fend off further untoward incidents, said Belal Hossain, additional superintendent of Jashore police.

that have taken control along Rafah's border line made several raids into the centre and west of the city, wounding several civilians who had been trapped inside their homes and were taken by surprise.

Some residents said tanks were newly present in Al-Izba, an area of far southwest Rafah close to the Mediterranean coast.

"I think the occupation forces are trying to reach the beach area of Rafah. The raids and the bombing overnight were tactical, they entered under heavy fire and then retreated," one Palestinian resident told Reuters via a chat app.

Later yesterday, an Israeli air strike on a house in the southern city of Khan Younis, north of Rafah, killed six people and wounded several, including children, medics said.

Israeli forces were also operating inside the Al-Bureij camp in the central Gaza Strip, while subjecting the al-Maghazi and al-Nuseirat and the adjacent city of Deir al-Balah under heavy aerial and tank bombardment, Palestinian medics reported.

Hamas said their fighters carried out attacks on Israeli forces in several central and southern areas.

More than 36,731 Palestinians have been killed and 83,309 have been wounded in Israel's military offensive in Gaza since October 7, the Gaza health ministry said in a statement yesterday. Some 77 Palestinians were killed and 235 wounded in the past 24 hours, the ministry added.

Cut in agri subsidy

As Bangladesh's domestic food grain production has not increased significantly, the country is heavily reliant on imports.

According to the UN Food and Agriculture Organisation, Bangladesh imported around 12.5 million tonnes of food products in 2021.

The dependency on food imports increased from 9.3 percent of total food demand in 2010 to 11.2 percent in 2022.

An uninspiring budget proposal

It fails to commit to reforms and address people's sufferings

Despite having a few positive features, the proposed budget from FY2024-25 fails to recognise the immediate needs and medium-term challenges facing the economy. There are three key problems that the budget somewhat correctly identifies: runaway inflation, dwindling foreign exchange reserves, and increasing debt burden. However, the strategies for curbing inflation and providing relief to the poor and fixed-income groups are grossly insufficient. For starters, duties have been reduced on only a few essential items, and the government's poor track record does not give a lot of hope as to whether this will ultimately result in lower prices for consumers. Moreover, the government's target to reduce inflation to 6.5 percent appears overly ambitious in light of the fact that average inflation has remained above nine percent for two consecutive years. Most importantly, the budget does not provide any detailed roadmap on how to change that.

The government has correctly decided to slow down on expenditure, and the budget deficit has been set at 4.6 percent, the lowest in 10 years—indicative of a contractionary fiscal policy supplementing the contractionary monetary policy of the central bank. But it has failed to recognise where to prioritise its spending. Allocation for the social safety net programmes, for example, saw a small increase from Tk 1,26,272 crore in FY2023-24 to Tk 1,36,026 crore. Not only is this amount insufficient, but it's also misleading as the proportion of the social safety net programmes as a percentage of the GDP actually dipped from the outgoing fiscal year's 2.55 percent to 2.43 percent proposed in the new budget. And if government employee pensions and interest payment for savings certificates are discounted, the share further drops to 1.62 percent of the GDP. Similarly, allocations for education and health also remain grossly below what's needed to develop our human capital.

Keeping the tax-free income threshold unchanged when prices have skyrocketed is disappointing. The government should have sought to acquire more revenue through tax reforms instead, and by bringing tax evaders under the tax net. Instead, it has focused on increasing revenue collection via indirect taxes, which will disproportionately affect lower-income groups, increasing inequality. The government's immoral decision to allow corrupt individuals a scope to whiten black money by paying a low flat rate of 15 percent is another point of contention. Add to that the absence of any mention of how it plans to bring down the non-performing loans, and it seems that the Awami League government has performed a complete U-turn on its so-called policy of "zero tolerance" against corruption.

In fact, the overall budget speech delivered by the finance minister was disappointing on the structural reform front in light of the expectations from this being the first post-election budget. The government, it seems, has again opted not to rattle any cages by undertaking politically challenging initiatives that are critical to strengthening our economic pillars. So, the mantra seems to be to recognise the challenges, promise changes, but commit very little to actually achieve them.

A future without farmland?

Govt needs to act now to address soil degradation

We are alarmed that around 270 square kilometres of land in the country—roughly the size of Dhaka city—is losing fertility every year, posing a serious threat to the nation's food security. A recent study by the Soil Resource Development Institute (SRDI) found that 76.2 percent of the land in Bangladesh suffers from moderate to very severe soil degradation. This translates to a staggering 1.124 crore hectares of degraded land, an increase from the 1.07 crore hectares estimated in 2000.

The reasons behind soil degradation in Bangladesh are complex and interconnected. To begin with, there is the overuse of chemical fertilisers, which boosts crop yields in the short term, but their long-term use depletes essential soil nutrients and organic matter. In the coastal areas, rising salinity levels due to climate change and shrimp farming have further disrupted the natural balance of salts in the soil, making it unsuitable to grow most crops. Industrial pollution from factories, deforestation and the improper disposal of electronic and medical waste are additional factors accelerating soil degradation. Trees play a vital role in maintaining soil health by preventing erosion and regulating water flow, so when forests are cleared, the soil becomes more vulnerable to erosion and degradation.

Degradation of soil fertility reduces crop yields, diminishes the nutritional value of crops, and increases vulnerability to droughts and floods. This not only impacts food security, but also harms the environment and livelihoods of millions of Bangladeshis. Unless immediate action is taken, our country could face a future with no cultivable land within the next 63 years, according to experts. This is no doubt a frightening prospect for a nation of 17 crore people who are still heavily reliant on agriculture.

But is the government aware of the severity of the issue? It needs to play an urgent role in reversing soil degradation by phasing out profitable but harmful industries, such as tobacco and shrimp farming, which are causing irreparable damage to scarce agricultural land. It should invest in research and development of sustainable agricultural technologies and encourage farmers to adopt green agricultural practices—such as crop rotation, cover cropping, and composting—to improve soil health and fertility. Finally, the government must implement strict policies to limit industrial pollution and harmful waste disposal practices, and put an end to our destructive spree of deforestation around the country.

Our love-hate relationship with university rankings

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND

Dr Shamsad Mortuza is a professor of English at Dhaka University.

SHAMSAD MORTUZA

We love university rankings, especially when our names grace the list. Without this recognition, we'd easily find 10 reasons to criticise the process. The prestigious QS World University Rankings (WUR) 2025 naming Dhaka University as the most improved university in the country makes us revisit our love-hate stance.

Recently, Dhaka University, over 100 years old, achieved its best-ever position in the QS world rankings, landing in the 554th position among 1,500 shortlisted universities. To be eligible for QS WUR, an institution needs at least 100 papers indexed by Scopus and published over five years. This predominantly anglophone ranking landscape overlooks non-English and non-indexed journals, often favouring science or quantitative subjects over humanities and social sciences.

As Bangladesh's first fully fledged university, DU has significantly contributed to forming a middle class and laying the foundation for civil bureaucracy and political leadership. Ranking agencies will not test DU for its prestige and exclusivity. It will rather use a distinct methodology that often disregards the university's heritage, legacy, and social impact. To be ranked among the best global universities, we must meet a different set of data-driven expectations. It is a different ball game.

For example, the Academic Ranking of World Universities (ARWU) prioritises universities with Nobel laureates, field medallists, highly cited researchers, or papers in nature or science, resembling the fabled stork inviting tigers to eat from narrow jars. This elitist system can perpetuate societal inequities, countering higher education's goal of eradicating inequalities for a just world. This idea of sustainability has been included in QS WUR as well as Times Higher Education Impact Rankings.

For evaluation, QS uses specific criteria and weighted factors. This year, DU and Bangladesh University of Engineering and Technology (BUET) have moved up from their previous bands of 691-700 and 801-850, respectively, while North South University (NSU) has slipped from its previous year's 851-900 rank. The improvement in top universities' performances suggests strategic interventions by our premier institutions.

Previously, many public officials and university leaders have publicly criticised rankings, arguing that data-driven quality measurement is flawed. Can we quantify quality, particularly in light of rumours that many ranking actors manipulate data to achieve high scores? A huge scandal erupted in 2021 when Columbia University faced accusations of data fabrication. Many universities do this because ranking is one way to attract better students. To join the elite group of top academic institutions, one requires substantial subscription fees, visibility efforts, and costs for international collaboration. Competing with resource-heavy institutions is challenging for a state-funded university like DU that charges minimal tuition.

VISUAL: SHAIKH SULTANA JAHAN BADHON

QS WUR's unique data collection emphasises internationalisation (45 percent). Achieving global academic perceptions requires higher budgets, which many faculty members lack. Going to international conferences and forums are expensive affairs. Then, there are the heavy processing fees for research publications in indexed journals, sometimes up to $5,000 per paper. Meeting QS's criteria necessitates a minimum of 100 such publications annually. Our academic perceptions depend a lot on what we present and write on international platforms.

Both DU and BUET perform relatively well in terms of employability and employer perceptions. NSU, being newer, has progress to make in terms of employer outcomes. BUET's employer reputation score is concerning, showing a disconnect between students' studies and their eventual employment. For example, a customs or police officer with a mechanical engineering degree is unlikely to impress the rankers evaluating employer outcomes.

DU's international research network benefits from nearly 500 MoUs worldwide, but it faces challenges in enhancing student and faculty mobility. Three ministries currently vet international student applications before consideration. The bureaucratic red tape is one of the main deterrents for foreign students. To create a mobility window, our curricula need an international outlook, facilitating credit transfers and dual degrees. This cannot be done without government-level interventions. We need to view international students as a potential revenue source and come up with a comprehensive branding strategy like those in Malaysia and India. Even in the 1980s, Bangladesh was a destination for higher education. We need to regain that status by updating our facilities like dormitories and social security. The inclusion of sustainability as a ranking category is another case in point. Our infrastructure, policies, curricula, and extracurricular activities must demonstrate our commitment to sustainability and inclusivity to perform better in this category.

As the director of DU's international affairs office, I know how difficult it is to attract international students and faculty. Some MoUs have allowed us to host about 15 foreign faculty members, largely thanks to our partners' contributions. This earned DU a score of 1.6 out of 5. BUET scored zero, while NSU, with generous incentives for foreign faculty and dual nationals, outperformed its local rivals with a score of 7.9. BUET's international research network is far from satisfactory. Given the number of brain-drained NRB scholars that BUET has, one hopes to see better results in the future.

Academic reputation, crucial in rankings, has become a PR and networking activity, requiring our scholars to participate in international forums and conferences. Limited budgets often prevent faculty from travelling abroad or paying conference fees. Researchers face hefty processing fees for publication in indexed journals, which is necessary for QS consideration. If the government is sincere about university ranking, it must allocate dedicated research funds with specified desired outcomes.

In the age of globalisation, we cannot ignore the pull of ranking. We need to incentivise the local institutions so that they can improve their global footprints. Then again, we should not bifurcate the higher education system by promoting a segment of elite institutions. Real changes will come once we find the right balance between our primary, secondary, and tertiary systems. An improved higher education system will have a trickle-down effect on the other two. The sooner the stakeholders realise the importance of shaping our higher education system in alignment with the global system, the better it is for all of us.

WORLD OCEAN DAY

Navigating the blue frontier

Md Rony Golder
is a PhD student at the School of Earth and Planetary Sciences in Curtin University, Australia.

MD RONY GOLDER

The ocean, a vast expanse of blue mystery, has long been a source of sustenance, wonder, and intrigue. As we observe World Ocean Day today, it is imperative to reflect on the relationship between humanity and the sea, particularly for maritime nations like Bangladesh, whose destiny is inextricably linked to the marine waters that surround it.

Cradled by the Bay of Bengal, Bangladesh boasts a maritime area almost as vast as its terrestrial territory. This marine space is not just a buffer against the elements, but a treasure trove of resources that, if harnessed sustainably, could propel the nation into a future of prosperity and stability. However, an issue persists: how can Bangladesh navigate the complex waters of marine resource management to ensure a balance between economic growth and environmental preservation?

The answer lies in the adoption of marine spatial planning (MSP), a strategic approach that goes beyond traditional resource management. MSP is not merely a tool for allocation; rather, it is a vision for harmony between human activities and the marine ecosystem. It is a process that calls for stakeholders—fishermen, policymakers, scientists, and conservationists—to come together in crafting a blueprint for the ocean's future.

At its core, MSP is about understanding the spatial distribution of marine resources and the myriad interactions that occur within the marine environment. It is about making informed decisions that account for the cumulative impacts of human activities, ensuring that the ocean's health is not compromised for short-term gains.

The Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) of UNESCO describes MSP as a "public process of analysing and allocating the spatial and temporal distribution of human activities in marine areas to achieve ecological, economic and social objectives that have been specified through a political process." This definition underscores the multifaceted nature of MSP, highlighting its role as a mediator between competing interests and its potential to foster sustainable development.

A central debate in the realm of MSP revolves around its primary focus. Should MSP prioritise the extraction of marine resources, or should it champion the cause of environmental protection? This contradiction, however, is a false one. The true purpose of MSP is to find a middle path—a path that allows for the responsible use of marine resources while safeguarding the marine environment for future generations.

Expert researchers have weighed in on this debate, offering insights into the purpose of MSP. It is a decision-making framework that aids planners and policymakers in optimising the use and management of the sea, and is also a means to implement ecosystem-based management, helping countries identify areas for biodiversity conservation and sustainable economic development. MSP equips policymakers with the necessary information for strategic planning of current and future resource use. It seeks to balance the objectives of nature conservation and resource utilisation in a manner that is sustainable and equitable.

For Bangladesh, the implementation of MSP is both a challenge and an opportunity. This is because the MSP implementation process in any country depends on certain necessities, such as adequate legal and policy adoption and application; coordination and integration of complex political and economic elements including national, regional, and global institutions; improving mechanisms to avoid and resolve marine environmental conflicts; preventing and reducing environmental degradation; strengthening and developing marine environmental laws and compliance; and above all, ensuring community participation.

Bangladesh has successfully delineated its maritime boundaries through two landmark legal victories against India and Myanmar, laying the groundwork for MSP. However, the journey ahead remains challenging. The lack of an integrated legal and policy framework is a significant hurdle. Existing plans and laws are fragmented, spread across various sectors and departments without a cohesive strategy. This fragmentation hinders the effective management of marine resources and the adoption of a holistic approach to MSP.

Coordination and integration are also lacking. No single policy or law has succeeded in uniting all relevant departments under a common MSP agenda. The result is a patchwork of sector-specific plans that fail to address the interconnectedness of marine issues.

Information and data on marine resources are scarce. Without robust marine research and data collection, MSP cannot be effectively implemented. The limited scope of existing marine research institutions and their activities underscores the need for a concerted effort to gather comprehensive data on the Bay of Bengal's resources.

As Bangladesh strides forward to become a developing country, sustainable resource management has become even more imperative. The spectre of overfishing, species extinction, and habitat destruction underscores the urgency of implementing MSP.

The government's Blue Economy Cell has taken commendable steps in coordinating stakeholder efforts towards sustainable marine development. Yet, there is a pressing need for regular stakeholder meetings to identify conflicts, analyse disputes, and foster involvement in the MSP process.

In the global context, developed nations have already embarked on significant maritime plans, reaping the benefits of the sea's bounty. Bangladesh must follow suit, leveraging MSP as a tool for sustainable marine governance.

On this World Ocean Day, let us embrace marine spatial planning as the guiding principle for Bangladesh's maritime future. With MSP, we can chart a course that ensures the sustainable use of marine resources, the conservation of the marine environment, and the fulfilment of the country's social and economic needs.

LET'S TALK BUDGET

The proposal for the annual budget of FY2024-25 was tabled at parliament on Thursday. This budget came at a time when our economy is struggling with a myriad challenges, including persistant inflation and a growing debt burden. Does the new budget address these macroeconomic concerns?
Four experts share their analyses with The Daily Star

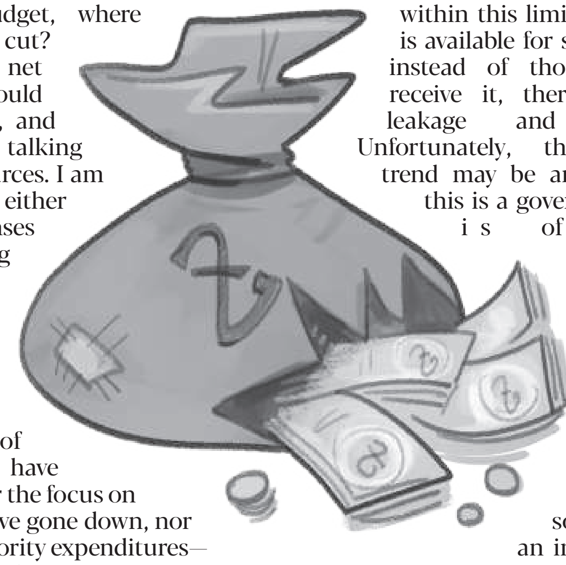
Don't shrink social safety net even during austerity

Hossain Zillur Rahman
is an economist and political sociologist, and executive chairman of Power and Participation Research Centre (PPRC).

HOSSAIN ZILLUR RAHMAN

Once again, there is an issue about the accuracy of the social safety net portfolio accounting. Here, items like civil servants' pensions have been included, which inflate the social protection portfolio more than what it actually is. This misleading accounting problem should be resolved.

Second, we are in a tight budget environment, in which the distributional issue is very important. Who should receive the load of the tight budget? The general people, or those who can bear the load more? Or should efficiency improvement be the goal, which means reducing the allocation from inefficient or relatively less prioritised expenditure items so that we can allocate more for the general population?



When I am deciding to reduce the budget, where shall I make the cut? Social safety net allocation should not be reduced, and here I am not talking about new resources. I am talking about either cutting expenses or making insignificant expansion. Where would that amount come from? Even in this period of austerity, we have seen that neither the focus on megaprojects have gone down, nor have the non-priority expenditures—such as cars for district commissioners—been curtailed.

So, in the decision about on whom the austerity burden should be imposed, if the size of the social safety net allocation does not increase, or decreases, it is saying that the government is either inattentive or going against the interest of the general people.

Third, a review of the social safety net portfolio is necessary. Not just taking out pension, there are many items that can be re-prioritised with the idea that there are two large missing groups in the current portfolio. One of them is the urban poor, who are inadequately addressed. The other is marginal and excluded population groups. I call them poverty's third frontier because they are like an excluded group within the extreme poor, like tea workers, fishermen, municipal workers, etc. There is an opportunity to increase the allocation for this group. So, when the budget is tight, you can make sure that distributional efficiency is ensured for the people, which does not seem to be happening here. The other thing you can do is ensure efficiency in the reforms. That way, the urgent groups who are left out can get the allocation.

Then there is mistargeting. Even within this limited amount that is available for social protection, instead of those who should receive it, there is significant leakage and mistargeting. Unfortunately, the mistargeting trend may be an upward trend; this is a governance issue and is of great concern. In recent times, due to governance shortfall, this mistargeting rate may have gone up. This needs to be looked into.

Finally, the social safety net is an important sector, particularly for the poor people. No matter how tight the budget is, the social safety net sector has to be given its due importance, which means the government needs to stop misleading the accounting, improve efficiency, reduce mistargeting, and address the unaddressed groups.

The direction of the budget is correct

Dr Ashikur Rahman is principal economist at the Policy Research Institute of Bangladesh (PRI).

ASHIKUR RAHMAN

If we start from the beginning, the inflation rate was triggered by a sharp decline in the exchange rate depreciation in 2022. This happened because the current account experienced a deficit of more than $30 billion. Moreover, had we supported the taka and mitigated the growing import pressure through a decisive hike in interest rate, the depreciation would not have been as strong. This was then complemented by energy price adjustments. Exchange rate depreciation and energy price adjustments were the first two triggers for the inflationary spike.

Till date, inflation is around 10 percent, which is still much lower compared to countries like Pakistan and Turkey. However, we must remain very cautious about not letting inflation run wild. Interest rates must be kept high, the central bank cannot undertake financing of the budget, and easy money under a 8.5 percent policy rate cannot be given to commercial banks. High powered money creation cannot become a routine phenomenon.

The policymakers have identified the three key problems facing the economy. The first problem is inflation, the second problem is we have lost around $20 billion of forex reserves over the last 24 months, and therefore we have to take measures to stabilise our balance of payments. The third is that we don't want to increase the debt burden through any expansionary fiscal policy. In the last budget, our Annual Development Programme (ADP) was around Tk 2 lakh crore, and it was totally financed through international and domestic borrowing. Our entire revenue is exhausted by the wage bill, subsidy bill, and interest payments. This basically means that every penny we spend in our development budget is a penny that we have borrowed. To address these three issues, this budget needed a correct strategic shift, and had to prioritise contractionary demand management.

On the whole, we needed this budget to prioritise economic stabilisation over economic growth. In other words, attention had to be paid to inflation, balance of payment, domestic resource mobilisation, cutting down expenditure, increasing the role of government revenue in financing development and reducing borrowing from the private sector to finance the budget. The government had to target inflation, forex reserve management, and managing the growing debt burden to stabilise the economy over the next 12-16 months.

It is promising that the budget deficit has been kept at 4.6 percent. It is the lowest budget deficit in 10 years, so that is indicative of a contractionary fiscal policy that supports the contractionary monetary policy of the central bank. The broad strategic direction is correct.

One point of concern is that the proposed budget outlines borrowing Tk 1,37,500 crore from the domestic banking sector. With the projected deposit growth of Tk 1,60,000 crore in the banking sector, a structural obligation of borrowing such a large sum may drive the Bangladesh Bank to step into budget financing, which will not be desirable.

Moreover, the proposed social security spending is 17 percent of the budget, which could have been higher. When interest rates are raised, when public expenditure is reduced, then under a high inflationary climate, poor people or people living on a fixed income must be supported.

The fundamental challenge facing policymakers in implementing a contractionary budget will be patience. The central bank has been of late somewhat aggressive in trying to bring down inflation, but inflation is stubborn. Even after a lot of measures, inflation could still not be brought down to the seven percent threshold. The political challenge of trying to stabilise the economy is that the benefits come in the medium run, but the costs are incurred in the short run. In the short run, people feel the tighter budget, people feel the pain of a higher interest rate regime, but when the economy ultimately stabilises over a year, growth will bounce back, and people will also experience and see the broader benefits of the stabilisation policies undertaken.

Invest more in the new curriculum

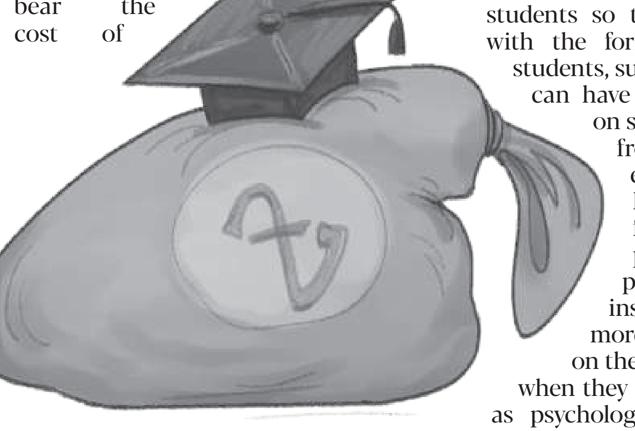
Prof Siddiqur Rahman is former director of the Institute of Education and Research at the University of Dhaka.

SIDDIQUR RAHMAN

I am not a proponent of a sudden increase in education spending. Rather, I believe it is more viable to opt for an incremental increase over several years. A high increase in the amount allocated to education will result in a mismanagement of spending as there is a lack of capacity in the concerned bodies; it will not be productive.

It is important to know where to spend the money, as the same increase cannot happen across every part of the education sector. The new curriculum emphasises experiential learning. Hence, there needs to be greater spending on "learning by doing" instead of the typical rote memorisation. In addition, we must also pay attention to classroom size. A class should not have 60-70 students, but rather approximately 25 students. The solution is, of course, to increase not only the number of classrooms, but teachers too. It is imperative that we work on training teachers well, pay them a higher salary, and provide them with more opportunities. Many issues continue to exist in this aspect. Even when teachers are trained, many are unable to implement it in the classroom. We need capable teachers.



As for the new curriculum, its focus on experiential learning may mean there is a greater need for spending on educational resources. This may have to be covered by parents, the school, or the government. In the case of students in rural areas, it may often be difficult for parents to bear the cost of educational supplies.

Attention must also be paid to the recent spate of heatwaves across the nation. While there seems to be greater emphasis on physical facilities, we need to also consider the health of students. If the health services are poor, students will suffer and their performance and learning will be hampered. If not an AC, then at the very least fans should be ensured in every school. It could also be that schools have health screenings so that if there is a minor issue, the medical professional in school may treat it, while if it is a major issue, the school can refer the student to a medical institution with the capacity for treatment. However, with the high number of students, this can be difficult to accomplish.

Lastly, the matter of mental health must be considered, particularly considering its link to student suicides. There should be teacher-student rapport, and not a fearful relationship. Teachers should foster a close relationship with students so the latter feel comfortable with the former. Harsh treatment of students, such as corporal punishment, can have highly detrimental effects on students, discouraging them from coming to school and even making them associate learning itself with negative feelings. While some may propose having a school psychologist in every institution, it may be much more feasible to train teachers on the subject of child psychology when they are receiving their training, as psychologists may not be able to sufficiently pay attention to the high number of students and their needs in the appropriate way.

Increasing the allocations for education and health remains vital, as they impact the human capacity of the nation.

Offering tax amnesty sends a wrong signal

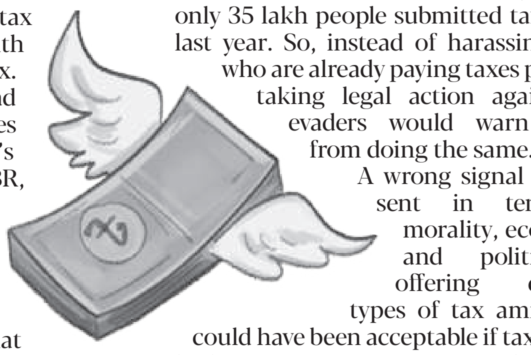
Dr Mustafizur Rahman is distinguished fellow at the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD).

MUSTAFIZUR RAHMAN

The tax structure in Bangladesh is very much dependent on indirect taxes. This ends up weighing heavily on regular consumers. Especially at a time when income, wealth and asset disparity is increasing, this reliance on indirect tax increases the gap further. What we need is to increase our reliance on direct taxes. The disparity in income in the first stage will come down after tax is imposed so that people with higher income pay higher tax.



In the new budget, we had hoped to see some initiatives about increasing NBR's powers, digitalisation of NBR, and tagging expenditure with income. The highest tax slab has been raised to 30 percent again from 25 percent. This is a positive step. This will ensure that later on if the wealth surcharge taxes are implemented, even if the rate doesn't increase, the surcharge collection will increase. These are the things that we should focus on.

Bank defaulters or tax evaders receive amnesty and benefits to whiten black money. So, the focus in the new budget should have been on bringing them back under the tax system, instead of giving them an opportunity to legalise their undeclared money by paying a lower tax rate.

One way of increasing the tax collections is to increase the rate of taxation. The other is to increase the tax base. Then there are also those who are evading tax. The NBR chairman himself has said during a presentation that around one crore people should be under the tax bracket, whereas only 35 lakh people submitted tax return last year. So, instead of harassing those who are already paying taxes properly, taking legal action against tax evaders would warn others from doing the same.

A wrong signal is being sent in terms of morality, economics and politics by offering different types of tax amnesty. It could have been acceptable if tax evaders had to pay a 7-10 percent penalty on top of their tax amount. It is not acceptable that taxpayers on the highest tax bracket should pay 30 percent of income tax, but those who don't pay tax at all can hide their money and then pay a 15 percent tax to legalise their money.

Sri Lanka complain to ICC

AFP, Colombo

Sri Lanka said Friday they have complained to the International Cricket Council over their T20 World Cup team's treatment and conditions in co-host the United States.

The sports minister Harin Fernando alleged other teams had it better and said Sri Lanka had lodged a formal protest after the squad was held up by a seven-hour flight delay at a Florida airport.

He said Sri Lanka had also been given accommodation more than 90 minutes' drive from the practice stadium when they reached New York. He said India's team had been put up much closer.

Sri Lanka lost to South Africa by six wickets in their opening match on Monday in New York.

"Sri Lanka Cricket has complained to the ICC," Fernando told parliament.

"Different countries are being treated differently. We have called for an explanation from the organisers of the tournament."

Paris hangs Olympic rings on Eiffel Tower

AFP, Paris

As the countdown to the Olympics passed the 50-day mark, Paris hoisted its rings on the Eiffel Tower overnight and showed them off on Friday morning.

Workers assembled the prefabricated steel rings and after dark on Thursday lifted the logo, weighing 30 tonnes and 29 metres long, into place between two legs of the tower just above its first level.

Pierre Engel, an engineer at ArcelorMittal, the steel company that manufactured the rings from recycled material, said tests and studies had been carried out for many months to ensure the success of the operation.

The rings, each nine metres in diameter, will be illuminated every night.

"It will be one of the images of the Games," predicted Thierry Reboul, Director of Events and Ceremonies at the Paris Organising Committee for the Olympic Games.

Only two other buildings in Paris have the five rings attached to their facades.

Earlier in the week, the rings were also hoisted at the Paris La Defense Arena, in suburban Nanterre, where the Olympic and Paralympic swimming events will be held.

Old foes set for pivotal clash

AGENCIES

Two of cricket's greatest rivals, England and Australia, are set to produce a high-octane encounter in today's ICC Men's T20 World Cup fixture at the Kensington Oval in Barbados.

This Group B clash carries immense significance, particularly for the defending champions England, who find themselves in a tricky situation following their opening game washout against Scotland.

In contrast, Australia secured a comfortable 39-run victory in their campaign opener against Oman, placing them in a more favourable position. But the men in yellow had to largely depend on an all-round exploits from Marcus Stoinis.

Former England spinner Graeme Swann has labelled the match as a "must win" for England after their disappointing show against Scotland, where England's inability to take a wicket and the sloppy fielding during the rain-affected game has raised concerns as George Munsey and Michael Jones capitalised on England's lapses before piling up 90 runs in 10 overs.

"I do think it puts the next game against Australia as a must win. They need to go with a very aggressive attitude and take them on. If they go at them hard, they can win," Swann stated.

Swann, however, remains optimistic about England's prospects, but he acknowledges the urgency of the situation. Despite the hiccups, he believes England have the potential to clinch back-to-back T20 World Cup titles.

"I think on paper we are as strong a team as anybody, and Australia are the team to beat," Swann remarked.

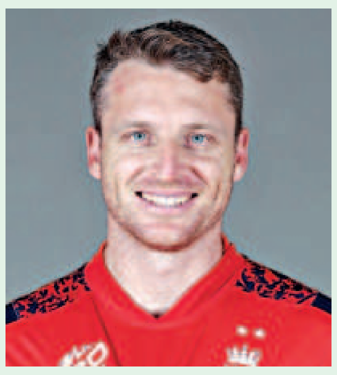
England head coach Matthew Mott is also focused on the upcoming showdown, emphasising its significance following the no result against Scotland.

"I definitely think Australia is a big game... and then depending on how we go there, we reset and go again," Mott commented.

For England, a loss to Australia would severely dent their hopes of advancing, especially after Scotland's victory over Namibia. This scenario could potentially bring run-rate into the equation later in determining the second team to advance from the group.

Both teams are aware of the stakes. England must execute their aggressive playing style and utilise depth in both batting and bowling to overcome a formidable Australian side. For the 2021 champions Australia, on the other hand, continuing their winning momentum could pave the way for a historic treble, having already secured the World Test Championship and last year's ODI World Cup.

As the tournament, still in its early days, gears up to reach fever pitch, this England-Australia face-off promises to deliver drama and high-quality cricket, keeping fans on the edge of their seats.



- England edge Australia in head-to-head records in T20Is with 11 wins to their names against Australia's 10 in 23 encounters overall. Two matches between the sides produced no results.
- England also boast a slender 2-1 lead over Australia in T20 World Cups, with wins in 2010 and 2021 editions. In the last five T20I meetings, England have won three and lost one against their arch-rivals, with the other match ending in a no result.
- Australia have a better record at the Kensington Oval in Barbados, the venue for the showdown, as they won four of their seven T20Is there while England have a 50 percent win record at the venue having won six of their 12 matches.
- In 28 T20Is at the venue, teams batting first have come out on top on 19 occasions in contrast to the nine wins by teams chasing.

South Africa look to overcome Dutch past

SPORTS REPORTER

South Africa will look to build on their dominant victory against Sri Lanka in the T20 World Cup on Monday but face a tricky opposition in the Netherlands against whom the Proteas suffered a memorable upset in the 2022 edition of the tournament.

The Proteas bundled out the Lankans for 77 at the Nassau County International Cricket Stadium in New York and after a few hiccups got across the line eventually.

At the same venue today, Aiden Markram's side will be wary of the Dutch courage that was the death of the Proteas in that Super 12 encounter in 2022.

The defeat eventually knocked the Proteas out of the tournament.

The Dutch will also come into the contest with the confidence of a win as they beat Nepal in their opening fixture on Tuesday.

However, the Dutch will undoubtedly be aware of the fact that they would need to up their game to rattle a star-studded South Africa.

In T20Is, the two sides have only ever met in T20 World Cups and are even on head-to-head records.

The Proteas won the first meeting in the 2014 edition and the Dutch stunned them in the second in Australia.

Southgate wants England to refocus

AFP, London

Gareth Southgate has urged his England players to refocus after he dropped Jack Grealish, James Maddison and Harry Maguire from his Euro 2024 squad.

Southgate believes his group now need to come together after an emotional day as they start to focus on their bid to win a first major trophy since the 1966 World Cup.

"I didn't want to keep the players waiting until Friday. I think that would have been a mess, really," Southgate told the BBC.

"It wouldn't have been fair on the players that we've released, wouldn't have been fair on the players that were waiting to have confirmation that they were in.

"Inevitably, we knew when we named a 33 there would be a period of a nice prep camp, and then there was going to be a couple of days where there would be a lot of anxiety and a difficult couple of days for us all.

"But we'll close that down later tonight and now tomorrow everybody's heads are clear."

England play Iceland at Wembley on Friday in their last warm-up before the Euros.

Paolini stands in way of treble-chasing Swiatek

AFP, Paris

Iga Swiatek goes into Saturday's French Open final as the overwhelming favourite in her quest for a third successive Roland Garros title against surprise challenger Jasmine Paolini of Italy.

Swiatek, the world number one from Poland, is attempting to become the fourth woman in the Open era to lift the Coupe Suzanne Lenglen four times -- after Justine Henin, Chris Evert and Steffi Graf.

Only two have won the French Open three years in a row -- Henin (2005-07) and Monica Seles (1990-92) -- but Swiatek's supremacy on the clay in Paris has attracted comparisons with Rafael Nadal, winner of 14 men's titles and who holds a 112-4 record at Roland Garros.

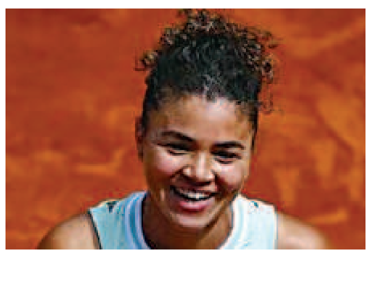
"We'll see in 14 years if the journey is similar. That's obviously really nice for me," said Swiatek.

"I would never expect anybody to compare me to Rafa because for me he's above everybody, and he's a total legend."

The 23-year-old Swiatek has won all four of her previous Grand Slam finals and will bid to extend that run against Paolini.

Swiatek has won both her previous meetings with 12th seed Paolini, although the last of those was at the 2022 US Open and the Italian is enjoying by far the best year of her career.

Paolini, 28, will be appearing in her first Grand Slam final after defeating Russian 17-year-old sensation Mirra Andreeva in the last four. That came after she knocked out former Wimbledon champion Elena Rybakina, the only player to beat Swiatek on clay this season.



It is an astonishing transformation for a player who had never gone beyond the second round of a major before the start of this year.

The world number 15 had won a total of four matches in 16 Grand Slam appearances before advancing to the fourth round of the Australian Open in January.

Now she is one win away from an improbable title as she tries to emulate compatriot Francesca Schiavone, who won the 2010 French Open. Paolini's doubles partner Sara Errani lost the 2012 final to Maria Sharapova.

Paolini is the first Italian woman through to a Grand Slam final since Flavia Pennetta beat Roberta Vinci to win the 2015 US Open.

"I was watching the other Italians make it in the finals, and also won Grand Slams, but (to) imagine that can be myself was tough," said Paolini.

"Of course, I wished, but now it's something crazy for me. I'm really happy. Also surprised. I never dreamed to be, you know, number one, Grand Slam champion. Never dreamed so big. Never," she added.

The question before the tournament was whether anyone could stop Swiatek, who arrived in Paris having won titles in Madrid and Rome.

Her last defeat in Paris came to Maria Sakkari in the 2021 quarter-finals. Swiatek's only other loss here was in the fourth round of her French Open debut in 2019.

She takes nothing for granted and is trying to just focus on delivering another accomplished performance.

"Sometimes, yeah, it's hard not to see what's at stake and what the atmosphere is around these matches. So still I'm not used to it. It's not the routine."

It's certainly uncharted territory for Paolini, who this time last year was playing a WTA 125 event, below the top tier, in Croatia.

The biggest moment of her career now lies before her, with the toughest current assignment in women's tennis standing between her and French Open glory.

In the T20 World Cup month, kabaddi and football garnered attention with Bangladesh retaining the Bangabandhu Cup International Kabaddi title, where Arduzzaman Munshi called time on his career, and the women's football team losing 1-0 to Chinese Taipei in a friendly where Sabina Khatun was sidelined. To learn more about their individual and collective state, The Daily Star caught up with the two stalwarts.

'I have come this far overcoming challenges'

Bangladesh women's national football team's new coach Peter Butler recently benched captain Sabina Khatun in the second match against Chinese Taipei, later saying that he wants to give younger players more chance and use Sabina as an impact player more in future. Does this push the veteran forward towards the end of her international career? In an interview with The Daily Star's Anisur Rahman, Sabina spoke about this issue and the experience of the two matches as well as the upcoming SAFF Women's Championship. The excerpts of the interview are as follows:

The Daily Star (DS): Before the FIFA friendly matches against Chinese Taipei, you said that Bangladesh would understand their position in world football playing against such a strong team. What is your assessment after these two matches?

Sabina Khatun (SK): I think the result of the first match would not have been that bad if we played in the formation that we are used to playing. In the second match, the coach realised this and the girls played better.

DS: What have the team learned from the matches?
SK: The experience was that the girls who usually play the first half well also performed well in the second half. So the overall tempo has improved. Another thing that happened was we did not give up fight too early.

DS: What does Peter Butler want from the team and how much expectation have the team fulfilled?
SK: The new coach likes to play different formations. He tries to play high-line defence even though we used to play mid-line defence earlier. Every coach has a different philosophy which we all accept and respect. Every player also wants to present themselves the way the coach desires. The girls are trying to give 120 percent to learn things. I think the coach should talk to the girls to discuss which system they prefer and how they can do better.

DS: How do you evaluate the junior players, especially those who came into the senior fold from the under-19 squad?
SK: As they are coming through different age-level teams where they have already played age-level international matches, they did not perform badly.

DS: Butler said that he wants to create a competitive environment in the camp. How do you see this?
SK: Every coach has told us the same thing. The coaches motivate the girls in different ways. The girls are ready to take the challenge of a competitive environment.

DS: The coach dropped some senior players from the starting eleven of the second match including you. How do you see this?
SK: I think the coach wanted to see new players in the second match and he did it.

DS: Do you think you are heading towards the end of your international career or can Sabina serve the nation for a few more years?
SK: Time will tell. Actually, I have come this far overcoming challenges. In my 14-year career, I have always had to give extra effort. I had to compete against younger players and I always pushed myself to secure my place. I could not have served the nation for so long had I not pushed myself the way I did.

DS: What type of preparation do you think Bangladesh need ahead of October's SAFF Women's Championship?
SK: I think it is really necessary to shift the camp elsewhere (from the BFF dormitory) because too many girls are staying there. A new environment may help the girls focus more on training, similar to the men's training camps. We don't need five-star hotel accommodation, but an open and relaxed environment should be good and it can be either at home or abroad.

DS: Do you believe Bangladesh can defend the title?
SK: Retaining the title depends on our preparation and training. We need to play at least four tough matches – one match each month ahead of the tournament – against superior opponents. Only then can we hope to defend the title.

'We need a tournament like Pro Kabaddi League'

Country's star kabaddi player Arduzzaman Munshi bid adieu to the game after leading Bangladesh to their fourth title in the Bangabandhu Cup International Kabaddi on June 3 in Dhaka. The Daily Star's Anisur Rahman spoke with the Bangladesh Navy player about the ups and downs of his illustrious career and what steps need to be taken to improve the state of the game in the country. The excerpts are given below:

The Daily Star (DS): You ended your career in grand fashion. How did it feel?
Arduzzaman Munshi (AM): I never thought that my retirement would be so grand and memorable. I also did not expect that Bangladesh would win the trophy under my captaincy and I would be the best player of the tournament. It really can't be expressed in words.

When I decided that I would retire, I did not feel anything special about it. But the emotions became almost unbearable as the final approached. I had a sleepless night before the final, I was thinking that I will not represent Bangladesh any more. At one point I even started crying. I was restless throughout the night. The next morning, many people phoned me to talk about my retirement and the final but I switched off my mobile phone and tried to get some sleep.

DS: You debuted for Bangladesh in 2009. How was the country's kabaddi back then?
AM: Kabaddi was not in a good position as the performances of the players were not good. There also were shortcomings in organizing. In that period, we started returning home empty-handed from international competitions because we could not take enough preparation and did not have proper training facilities. We had to wait for funds from the Bangladesh Olympic Association to start camp ahead of international competitions.

DS: Bangladesh used to regularly win silver at the SA Games and the Asian Games. But now silver has turned elusive...
AM: We won silver medals in Asian Games when countries like Iran, Pakistan were learning kabaddi from us. They improved year by year while we remained stuck. We are still behind them in terms of training and facilities. That's why we are not winning medals anymore.

DS: Ha-du-du, a different format of kabaddi, is played all across the country. Still, there is a dearth of talented players in kabaddi...
AM: Former captain Tuhin Tarafder, Fedous, Monirul and I were ha-du-du players before entering kabaddi. There are still a lot of talented ha-du-du players. When I play ha-du-du matches in rural places, I encourage them to take up kabaddi. But they are unable to because there is no future in kabaddi, no financial benefits. I believe if the federation trains young players and includes them in a pay-scale system or provides them jobs, the interest in kabaddi will grow.

DS: You played at the Pro Kabaddi League in India twice. What are the differences here and there?
AM: There is a gulf of difference. I would have never learnt about modern kabaddi had I not gone there. Why wouldn't they [Indians] play kabaddi? The players of franchise teams are being guided by physios, trainers, coaches and nutritionists. Unfortunately, our coaches can't get the best out of the players because of poor environment.

I think if more players from Bangladesh are allowed to take part in that league, the players will try to improve their performance to get contracts. This will ultimately help the country's kabaddi.

DS: How much can Bangladesh benefit from Bangabandhu Kabaddi where strong teams are not competing?
AM: I don't think that the participants were weaker than Bangladesh. We lost to Nepal in 2017, to Thailand in 2016, Japan in 2010, Korea in 2016 and Sri Lanka in 2016. I have seen new players failing to cope with pressure and break down during international matches due to lack of experience. The benefit of holding this tournament is that players are gaining experience and learning how to manage different match situations. I think it will help new players against bigger teams in the Asian Games and SA Games.

DS: Do you regret not winning any medals in three Asian Games appearances?
AM: Of course, there is regret. In the three Asian Games that I took part in, the teams that won bronze were not superior to us. We got close, but could not win the medal.

DS: How can we improve the country's kabaddi?
AM: First of all, the financial benefits for kabaddi players have to be ensured. I think if the federation takes an initiative to hold a franchise tournament like the India's Pro Kabaddi League, then the new generation will be encouraged to take up kabaddi.

We also must improve the coaches by holding training course or sending them abroad for higher training. I am also interested in coaching and I would love it if the federation gives me the responsibility to train a group of young players by arranging a round-the-year training camp.

Cut in agri subsidy will hurt farmers

Say experts; allocation reduced by Tk 272cr in proposed budget compared to the current one

SAJJAD HOSSAIN

Economists say allocation for the agriculture sector in the new budget is inadequate, and it will not only hurt farmers but may also affect food production.

In the 2024-2025 budget placed at parliament by Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali on Thursday, the allocation for farming and food security is Tk 38,259 crore, which accounts for 4.80 percent of the total.

In the 2022-2023 fiscal year, the allocation for farming was 4.97 percent, in the following year, it was 4.71 percent.

In the new budget, the Ministry of Agriculture gets Tk 27,214 crore, up from Tk 25,118 crore in the current fiscal year.

But the subsidy for the agriculture sector in the proposed budget is Tk 17,261 crore, down from Tk 17,533 crore.

Agricultural economist Jahangir Alam said, "Rice production in Bangladesh has grown by just 0.52 percent annually over the last three years, while the population has increased by 1.3 percent.

"When there is not enough investment in the sector, food prices rise. In order to boost grain production, more subsidies for farmers are crucial."

Moreover, fertiliser and oil prices have fallen in the global market, but not in Bangladesh.

"When the Russia-Ukraine war began, fertiliser and oil prices surged. Although the prices fell significantly last year, people in Bangladesh did not benefit from it," he added.

In his speech, Finance Minister Ali said, "Existing incentives to the agriculture sector will be continued since food security is of the highest importance here. We have given the highest priority to the agriculture sector in our budget."

However, many farmers were disappointed by the new budget.

Haider Ali, a 60-year-old farmer in Chapadaha area of Rangpur, said, "Every year, when a budget is announced, I think perhaps the government will support us. But it turns out the government does not really care much about us."

Cultivating the BR-28 variety of paddy on two bighas of land costs him around Tk 30,000, including expenses for fertiliser, seeds, irrigation, planting, and harvesting, he said.

"I get 34 maunds of rice from the land. Currently, the price of each mound is Tk 750. So, my entire harvest sells for Tk 25,500, which is less than what I spend," he added.

It was always going to take something big to make Americans pay any attention to cricket and Thursday's stunning victory by the USA over established power Pakistan provided just that moment.

The thrilling Super Over triumph in Dallas by the T20 World Cup debutants over the 2022 finalists and 2009 winners was the biggest upset in the history of the competition.

23 more Palestinians killed as offensive enters 9th month

REUTERS, Cairo

With no sign of progress in mediators' arduous efforts to broker a ceasefire in the Gaza offensive, Israeli tanks and warplanes blasted central and southern areas of the enclave overnight, killing at least 23 Palestinians, local medics said yesterday.

Qatari and Egyptian mediators backed by the United States, have tried to halt hostilities, secure the release of Israeli hostages and Palestinians jailed in Israel, and get aid flowing into shattered Gaza to ease a humanitarian crisis. But sources close to the talks said there were still no signs of a breakthrough as Israeli offensive in the enclave enters nine months.

Russia and China, which hold veto powers in the UN Security Council, raised concerns on Thursday evening with the US draft resolution that would back a proposal for a ceasefire between Israel and Hamas.

The council's only Arab member, Algeria, also signaled it was not ready to back the text, diplomats said.

In the Gaza Strip, residents said Israeli tanks advanced further west in the embattled southern city of Rafah skirting the border with Egypt amid fierce gunbattles between Israeli troops and Hamas fighters.

Palestinian health officials said two Palestinians were killed and several wounded in western Rafah from tank shelling there. In central Gaza, Palestinians medics said at least 15 people died overnight in Israeli assaults.

Dazzling new blue ant species 'neela' found in Himalayas

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Scientists have discovered a new blue ant species in India's northeastern state of Arunachal Pradesh, sparking more interest in the unique biodiversity of this section of the Himalayas.

The rare small ant, named Paraparatrechina neela, reaches a length of less than 2mm and its body is predominantly metallic blue, except for its antennae, mandibles, and legs.

Modi to take oath as India PM tomorrow

President invites him to head new coalition government

AGENCIES

Narendra Modi will take oath as India's Prime Minister for the third successive term tomorrow, as his National Democratic Alliance (NDA) formally presented its claim to the president yesterday to form a government.

World leaders, including Bangladesh Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, Sri Lankan President Ranil Wickremesinghe and Nepalese PM Pushpa Kamal Dahal, will attend the swearing-in ceremony at the Rashtrapati Bhavan in New Delhi, reports our New Delhi correspondent.

Modi, along with NDA leaders, yesterday met President Droupadi Murmu and submitted the claim of the alliance, led by Modi's Bharatiya Janata Party, to run the world's most populous nation for the next five years, the President's Office said.

"I want to assure the people of the country that in the 18th Lok Sabha (lower house) also...we will work with the same pace, same commitment to fulfil aspirations of the people," Modi told reporters outside the president's palace.

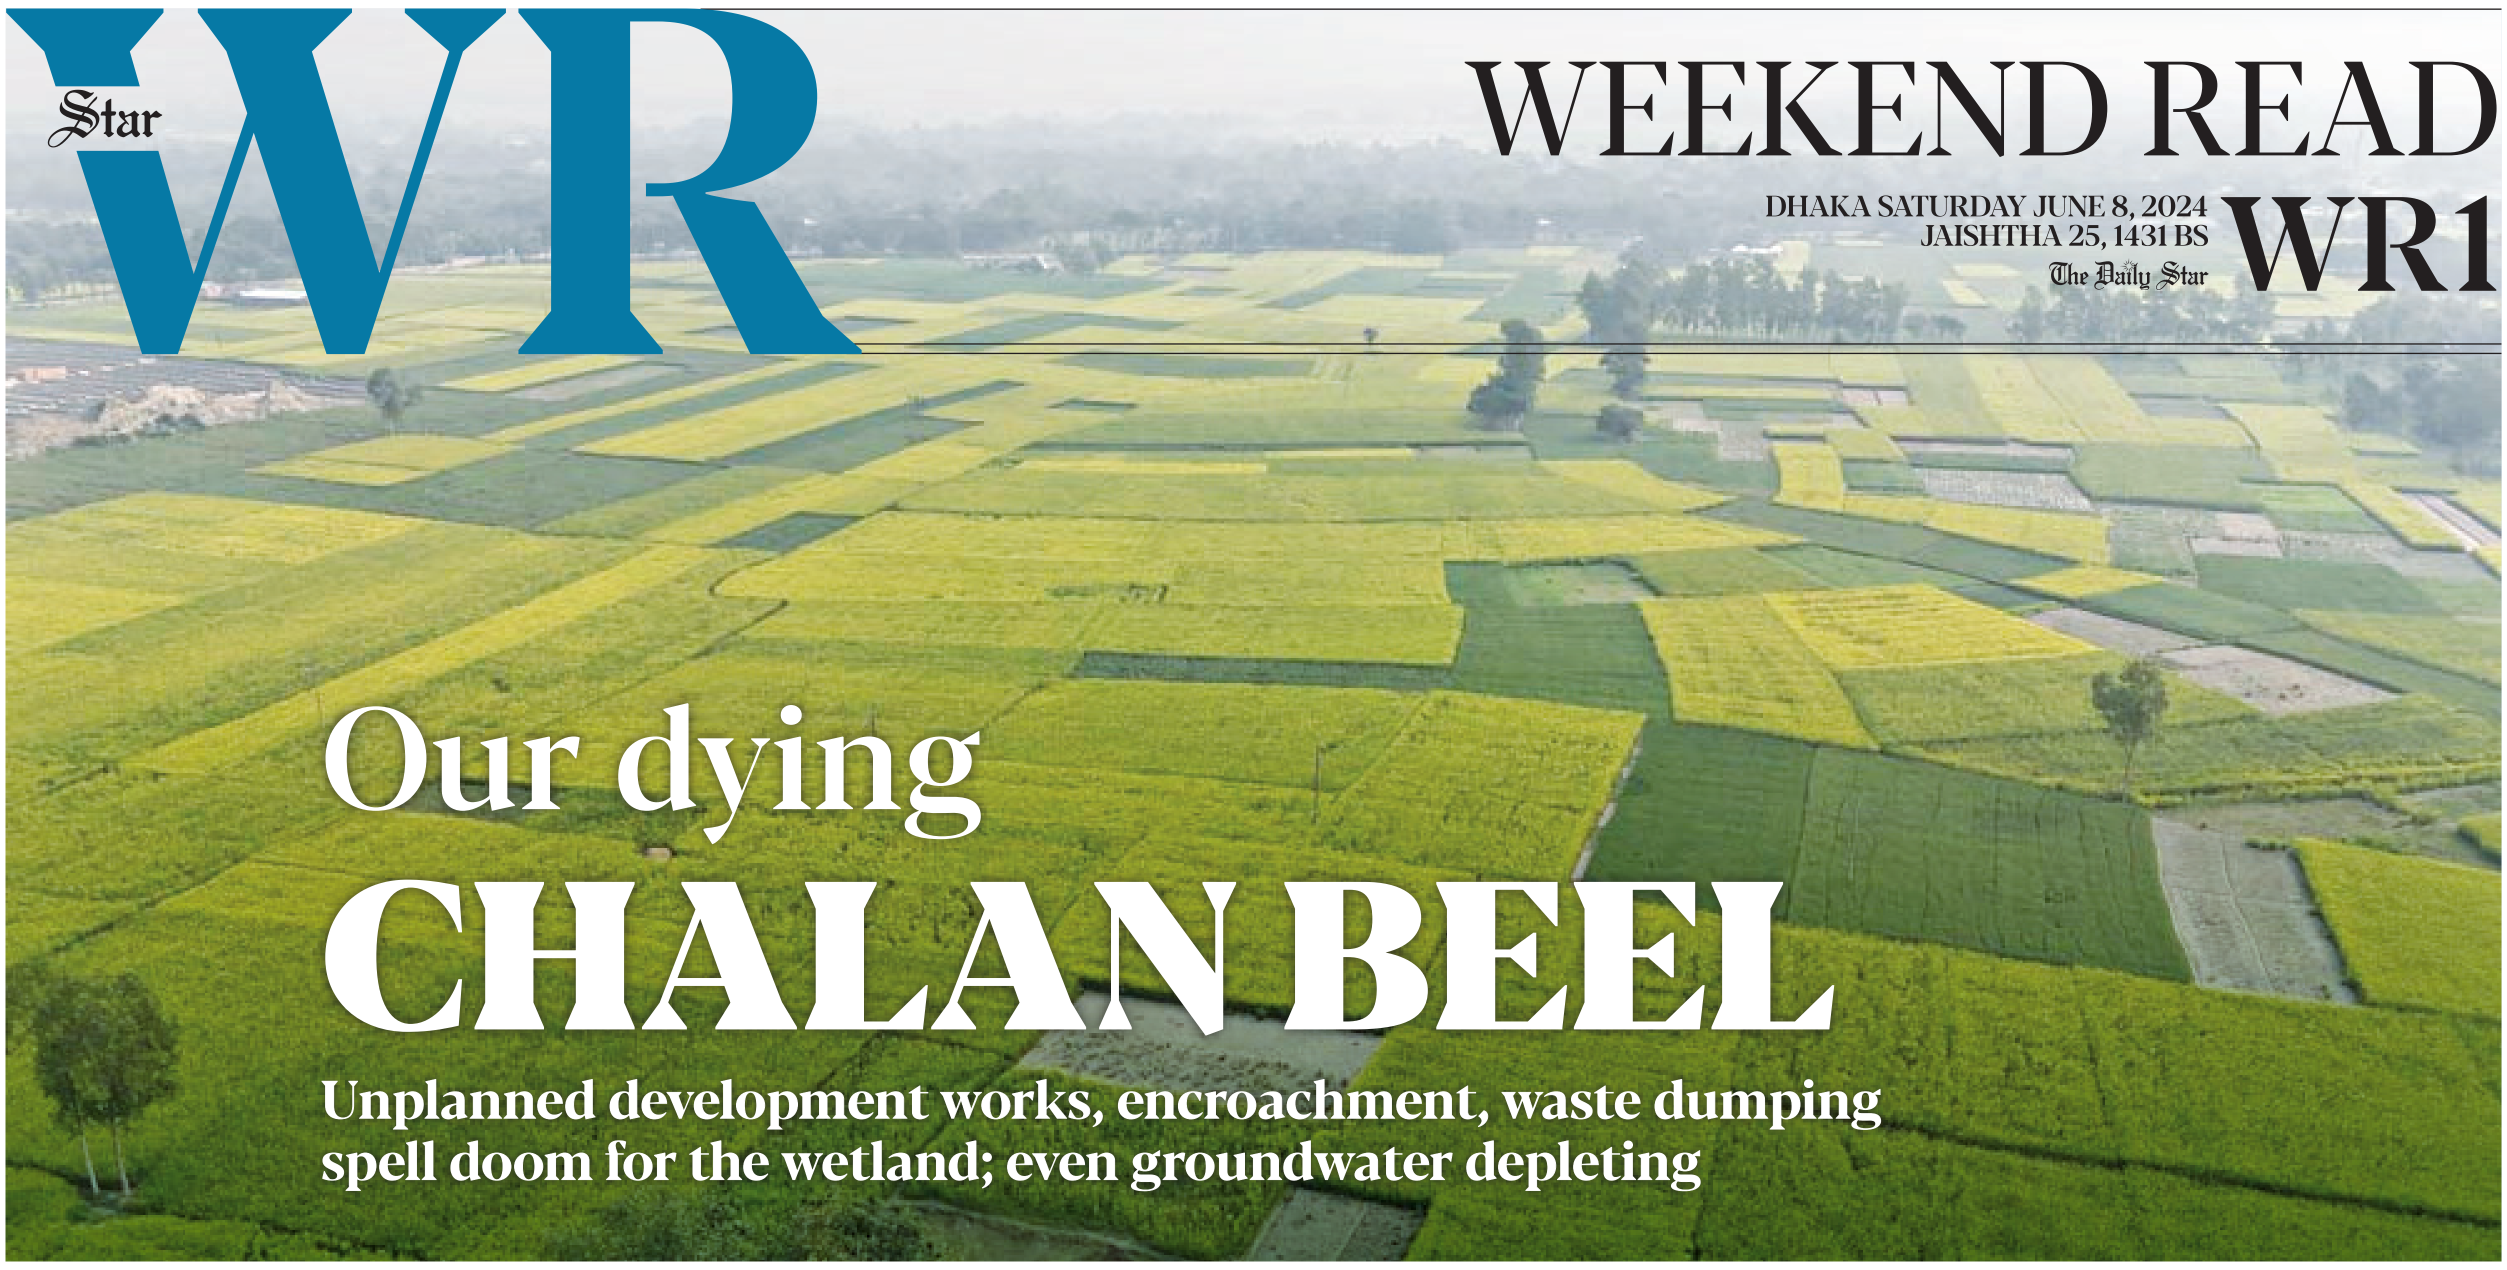
Our dying CHALAN BEEL

Unplanned development works, encroachment, waste dumping spell doom for the wetland; even groundwater depleting



The vast areas of Chalan beel turn into a crop field during the dry season. Thousands of farmers rely on the beel for survival. However, due to unplanned development works, encroachment and dumping of waste, this once pristine waterbody has not only shrunk alarmingly, its groundwater level is also dwindling. The photo was taken in Handial area of the Chalan beel in February.

PHOTO: STAR

A dried up Chiknai river in Chalan beel at Chatmohor upazila in Pabna last month.

Due to groundwater depletion, many farmers are struggling to sustain. The photo was taken last month in Mulgram area.

According to a research paper (IOSR journal) of Nahida Sultana and M Nazrul Islam of Rajshahi University, total fish production in Chalan beel has declined by 45 percent from 1982 to 2012. The average production has declined by at least 12.1 percent per year.

AHMED HUMAYUN KABIR TOPU and MASHFIQ MIZAN

Imagine vast, shimmering water reflecting a clear blue sky. Boats glide across the surface, carrying villagers through a network of rivers and canals teeming with life. Schools of fish, like silver flashes, dart beneath the water.

Today, that image is a fading memory.

The water, once ever-present, has receded. The sky, now without flocks of white herons, is a harsh reminder of the ecological decline.

This is the story of Chalan beel, spanning over 11 upazilas across Pabna, Rajshahi, Naogaon and Bogura.

A 1909 survey showed the waterbody flowed across 1,085 square kilometers. By 1940, that number had shrunk to 705 square kilometers, a decline of over 35 percent in just three decades.

Now, by government estimates, the waterbody is only limited to 375 sq km.

Private estimations are even bleaker. According to Banglapedia, the current area of Chalan beel is 168 sq km.

On average, the area of the beel is shrinking by 1.83 percent per year.

Experts believe the name "Chalan beel" comes from "Chalanta Beel", meaning "moving" or "flowing beel". The beel's formation is linked to the ever-changing course of the Jamuna river.

Unplanned development works have accelerated its decline.

Silt has accumulated over the extensive network that once fed Chalan beel -- 32 rivers, 93 beels and 26 canals. Meanwhile, encroachment and garbage dumping have gradually killed these waterbodies.

It keeps getting worse.

Even groundwater sources in Chalan beel area have dwindled due to excessive use.

The irony is stark. An area historically defined by its abundance of water is now struggling to retain even its ground water.

So, what happened?

THE CURSE OF DEVELOPMENT

In 1914, after the British government constructed a railway line cutting across Chalan beel from Sirajganj to the Hardinge Bridge, the natural flow of water began to decline.

In 1980, the Baghabari-Tarash flood control embankment severely disrupted its water flow, said environmentalists and locals.

Since then, various development projects have been implemented one after another within the beel.

A review of government development projects from the 1995-96 fiscal year to the 2009-10 fiscal year reveals that in 15 years, 1,188.5 kilometers of paved roads, 113 bridges, 855 culverts, 90 growth centres and 21 sluice gates have been constructed in Chalan beel.

In 2003, the construction of the Nalka-Bonpara highway in Sirajganj also caused severe obstructions to the water flow, said Md Mizanur Rahman, the founder of Chalanbeel Rakhkha Andolan.

The construction of numerous roads around this highway has impeded the beel's water flow in various places, he claimed.

Additionally, the mouths of canals and rivers have been blocked with numerous structures, causing water movement to be hindered and silt to accumulate, rapidly filling up the beel and reducing its depth, said Mizan.

The latest blow to the existence of Chalan beel, one of North Bengal's significant natural diversities, has come from pond excavation. The excavation of ponds has disrupted the natural water flow.

In just 12 years, at least 8,000 to 10,000 ponds have been excavated across the vast expanse of Chalan beel.

DYING RIVERS

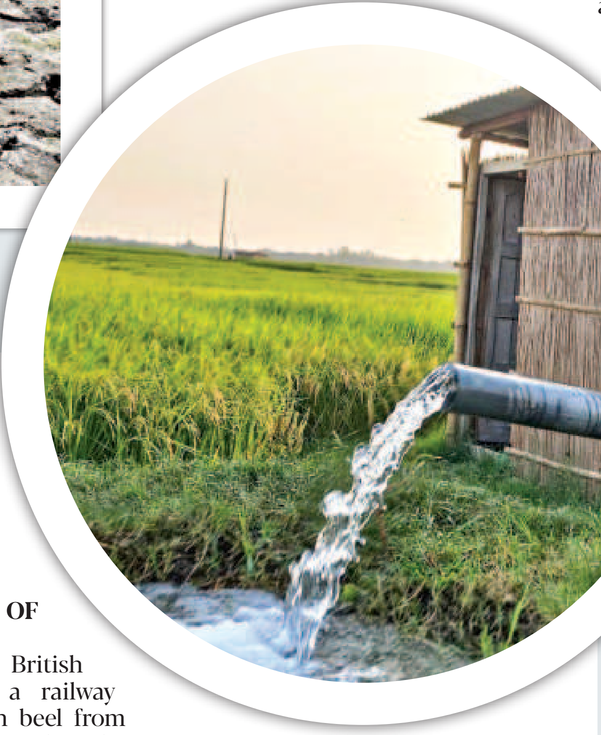
Eight rivers connected to the Chalan beel -- the country's largest wetland spanning across Sirajganj, Natore and Pabna districts -- have nearly been destroyed due to the construction of roads, regulators and sluice gates, according to a report by Bangladesh Poribesh Andolon in 2023.

Take the case of the Boral river for example.

A 2018 National River Conservation Commission report said at least 18 kilometres of the river has been lost due to encroachment. The Daily Star ran a report in 2021 detailing how even public entities set up illegal structures on the river land.

The Boral also bears the brunt of mindless garbage dumping and construction of unplanned sluice gates.

Eight municipalities in four districts, along with local industries, dump waste into the river.



Originally, the river was over 500 feet wide, but the construction of narrow sluice gates and dams has reduced the water flow significantly.

In 1985, the construction of a sluice gate at the source of the Boral in Charghat, Rajshahi, resulted in the river losing water flow. Since then, Chalan beel has also started drying up.

A 2018 feasibility study conducted by the water resources ministry recommended removing illegal structures, reconstructing sluice gates, and dredging the river to restore water flow and navigability.

The study also highlighted the need to prevent untreated sewage from being discharged into the river.

According to Bangladesh Agricultural Development Corporation, most of the 21 rivers in the Pabna, Natore, and Sirajganj sections of the beel are now filled with silt.

It has 71 canals and drains spanning 410 kilometers. Around 66,240 farmers used to get irrigation water from these canals and drains.

Currently, 368 kilometers, or 90.24 percent of these canals and drains are silted up. Efforts are underway to dredge and restore the remaining 42 kilometers to restore navigability, according to officials.

DISAPPEARING FISH SPECIES

In the 1980s, Chalan beel was a thriving habitat for a wide variety of fish species, including rui, katla, mrigal, shol, boal, chitol, koi, pabda, silong, magur, shing, gochi, baim, bata, khashla, nandai, taki, chela, chapila, puti, mola, banshpatari, boumach, bele, deshi chanda, mola, dhela, tengra, kakila, shrimp, and batashi.

However, around 80 species of fish have become extinct. The extensive use of chemical fertilisers and pesticides, along with natural changes, has led to the decline of many fish and other eco-friendly species.

Around 52 fishers have left the profession from 1982 to 2006, according to a survey titled "Chalan beel in Bangladesh: Habit, biodiversity degradation and implications for future management".

An additional 19 species of fish are in risk of extinction, the survey added.

In 1982, fish production in Chalan beel was 26,990 tonnes.

This decreased to 24,336 tonnes in 1987, 18,700 tonnes in 1992, 15,421 tonnes in 1997, 12,460 tonnes in 2002 and 12,117 tonnes in 2006.

In 2012, it further dropped to 11,999 tonnes.

According to a research paper (IOSR journal) of Nahida Sultana and M Nazrul Islam of Rajshahi University, total fish production in Chalan beel has declined by 45 percent from 1982 to 2012.

The average production has declined by at least 12.1 percent per year.

The Pabna District Fisheries Office reports that as natural fish production declines, there is a corresponding increase in fish farming in artificially dug ponds.

"A few decades back, we would catch a significant amount of fish by casting nets in the beels or rivers of Chalan beel. There were times when we couldn't even manage to carry all the fish we caught. Nowadays, the natural fish population has declined drastically due to the prevalence of artificial fish farming," said Subal Haldar, a fisherman from Kumargara village of Pabna's Chatmohar upazila.

GROUNDWATER DEPLETION

Farmer Saidur Rahman from Kholishagari beel in Pabna's Chatmohar upazila, started farming back in the 90s. He now finds it difficult to access sufficient water for his fields.

"In the 90s, when I first installed a shallow pump, I could find water at depths of 12 to 13 feet below the ground. But this year, I had to dig down to 32 feet to reach water," Saidur said.

Over the past three decades, the water level has dropped below 20 feet, if not more.

"Currently, I need to operate the mechanical pump for two to three hours to irrigate just one bigha of land whereas a few years ago, one hour was sufficient," Saidur added.

Farmers across Chalan beel echoed him.

Mizanur, founder of Chalanbeel Rakhkha Andolan, said over 7,000 deep tube wells, 100,000 shallow tube wells, and more than 700,000 to 800,000 submersible pumps have been extracting groundwater across the vast Chalan beel region, none of which have been properly installed.

The haphazard installation of pumps and the rampant extraction of groundwater have led to a drastic decline in ground water level.

In Tarash upazila, covering 25,490 hectares of land, crop cultivation depends entirely on 10,190 shallow pumps and 84 deep tube wells, said Md Abdullah Al Mamun, upazila agriculture officer.

SAVE RIVERS, STOP UNPLANNED DEV

According to Dr Md Nazmul Islam, associate professor of Geology at Pabna University of Science and Technology and a researcher, said almost all the major rivers feeding the Chalan beel are in a precarious situation due to encroachment, pollution and unplanned construction of embankments and sluice gates.

Farmers harvesting paddy in Chalan beel at Dharamgar.

"These rivers must be saved to protect Chalan beel," he added.

He also called for bringing installation of subversive pumps under regulation to prevent further depletion of groundwater.

Citing data collected from three weather centers in the Chalan beel region, Nazmul said weather patterns have changed significantly over the past 100 years.

Average rainfall has decreased, while the temperature has risen up.

The fluctuating weather pattern also leads to decreased oxygen levels in the water, affecting fish population, increasing humidity and also damaging crops, he added.

STORM CHILD

I remember the sense of disquiet I'd get, looking at random strangers on the road, and how, whenever I told anyone about it, they'd take it incredibly seriously.

SARAZEEN SAIF AHANA

The majority of my early childhood was spent in a big house filled with endless possibilities. At least, that's what my preteen self thought at the time.

Here in South Asia, kids don't generally move out of their parents' home until they have a house of their own, though that's a tradition that's slowly edging out. Anyways, what that means is I lived with my parents, my older sister, my grandparents, three uncles, two aunts, and two cousins. The latter two were both boys, the older being about two years older than my sister, and the younger about a year my junior. We were essentially raised as two sets of twins, and I did not realise my brothers were my "cousins" and not "actual" brothers until I was well into my teens. To us, we were brothers and sisters, and that was that.

The thing you need to know about my family is that we're bat-sh*t crazy. It was a house full of overly-emotional, excitable, very noisy, and very loving people, and we kids grew up loved and pampered, but not spoiled. The first thing we were taught was respect, and it's a lesson I retain to this day. My world was one of hugs and being sneakily handed treats by winking aunts so my mother didn't see.

It was idyllic.

I didn't realise until last year that it was not as perfect as I remembered. There were hints of something darker, especially concerning me, that my preteen mind either didn't notice or just ignored.

Like how there was a room in the south-west corner of the big house that no one was allowed to enter, and how no one ever told me what was in there. I'd overhear snatches of conversation about "that room" at times, but those conversations always cut off whenever they saw me. I never tried to sneak in, because that would be disrespectful, and over time, my curiosity faded.

There were other odd aspects of life in that place, too.

Like the time I bounced past my youngest uncle's room (on a yoga ball, of all things), and I thought he must have invited at least 50 people over because of all the voices. When I bounced in, ready to be cuddled and made a fuss over by the guests, I found the room empty, and my uncle fast asleep.

I prodded him awake. "Where are your friends?"

"At home...?" he said groggily. "What're you talking about, you under-sized elf?" He reached over with a half-asleep arm and mussed my hair.

I giggled. "But they were here! I just heard them!"

"I thought I was the one asleep."

And I squealed as he grabbed me, and I fell asleep in the crook of his arm, tucked safe and warm. He smelled like ice cream. I woke up to my mom calling everyone to dinner and was vaguely surprised to find the blankets I'd burrowed under replaced with musty old curtains I'd never seen before. They smelled like foetid meat.

"Sarah! Get your plate before your brothers eat the whole fridge."

"Coming, Mommy! And someone please tell Uncle Sam to change his curtains. They're ew!"

But everyone was too busy with the food, and I only mentioned the curtains in passing.

I told my eldest aunt to get me better toys on my birthday when I found a rubber snake in the formal sitting room. A toy that I now realise was too thick and skin-like to be a toy. It was striped yellowish-orange and black, and the end was oozing blood, with bits of flesh still attached. It was too morbid, especially with what looked like a tooth stuck on the bloody end. I was too young to pay attention to the news, but I remember my father and my eldest uncle discussing a break-in at the local zoo.

I remember, when I was about eight, I saw two kids push another one down the stairs at school. He bounced all the way down, and when he finally stopped at the landing, his neck was bent at a strange angle, with blood gushing from the place in his throat where something white was poking out.

I ran, crying, to my favourite teacher, and I led her to the stairs. There was nothing there, not even the blood. When she very gently asked me about all three of the children, my descriptions matched none of the students enrolled in that school. I sat in the principal's office, shaking, and she sat with me, holding me close until my mother came to get me.

At home, I found the kid in my room, his neck still broken, holding my favourite teddy.

I asked him if he was okay, but he said nothing. His eyes were hauntingly empty. I heard someone laugh in the other room, but when I looked back, he was gone.

My teddy's neck was twisted around, and not even my grandmother could fix it. She had to get me a new one.

I remember the smoke that I saw sometimes, seeping under the locked door of that forbidden room, thick and oily.

I remember the sense of disquiet I'd get, looking at random strangers on the road, and how, whenever I told anyone about it, they'd take it incredibly seriously.

I remember feeling that way about an old friend of my grandfather's, and how, after I told Grandda about it, he flew into a rage and threw him out of the house. One of my uncles told me a few years ago that, a couple of weeks after that, the man was arrested for filming child pornography.

My early childhood was not idyllic at all. Not even remotely. It's just that my entire family worked so hard to give me good memories that I eventually forgot the strange ones.

Until last year.

I was eleven years old when my parents purchased a big, beautiful apartment in a newer part of the city, and we moved out. My new home felt strange to me, with no rambling uncles and aunts, and none of my brothers with me. It was lonely. My grandfather died about a year after that, an event that none of us ever really recovered from.

After Grandda's death, the family sort of unwound. My uncles and their families eventually moved out of the big house until it was just Gramma living there. We'd all gather every few weeks for dinner and a family movie night, but it wasn't the same.

As time went by, those odd memories of mine faded, and my brothers and sister grew up. The two sets of twins were not twins anymore, but two brothers and two sisters, and, eventually, we became cousins. We were still close, but not like before. I guess that happens as time goes by, but it's still sad.

And then, last year, Gramma called me. That, in itself, was nothing special, but she didn't sound right to me.

"Darling, can you come to see me this weekend?"

I had plans with a bunch of my friends, but this was Gramma. She is important. "Sure. What time? And what're you cooking for me?"

She laughed. "Anything you want, my love. Do you still like candy? I have a bunch left."

"I'm 25, Gramma."

"So? I'm almost 90, and I still like candy."

"That's why you barely have any teeth left," I teased her.

"Life's too short for teeth. Can you come over after breakfast?"

"I can't wait. Love you to bits!"

"I love you more, sweetheart."

Gramma is the most beautiful woman in the entire world. Yes, she's old and stooped and her skin is wrinkled, but she's beautiful. She has the brightest smile I've ever seen, and she's tough as old roots. She's probably smarter than my entire group of friends put together. Half of my poetry is inspired by her. That morning, she looked like none of it. She did not look bright or tough or smart. She looked old and weary and slightly scared.

She smiled and hugged me, but there was no heart in it. It was not a Gramma-hug at all. Not remotely.

I knew something was wrong, and I knew it was big. I tried to lead her inside because I didn't want her to be cold, but she shook her head, and we sat on the old swing by the porch.

"Tell me," I said.

She did not speak for a long time, and I did not urge her. She'd tell me when she was ready. And she did. And it was a story like none I could ever have expected.

This is part one of "Storm Child", to be serialised here on Star Literature.

Raw Magnolias

SNATA BASU

This is a garden, these are my petals; this is my armoring plant that harbours the first light. Birthing river, are you ready to give to the world?
Are you ready to dawn my beloved auroras? To break my darling things—evil-eyed and crouched against the cold respite?
What can I say about being a woman? There is nothing much I can say.
In a cup pin-floats your passive nescience; my resistance, ready to arm itself, coils against the ripples of a mighty hot earth, pulped like barbed wire that's easy to bloom, quick to swallow...difficult to crack.
Here in this deity-womb climbs shoddy water, fighting dislocations of the body—this body that is a temple,
a malady, a ground of battling pilgrims.
This body is disarmed and gentler than all that has ever happened to it.
Lunar dust that's blocked against the light patter of the rain bears this body that is fleshed into something human, so that one day you might understand what a mother's labour has prized, what her blood has given.
This body that has loved and forgiven, disfigured by a thousand cruelties, asks to flower like a bare sea.
All it asks is to be left alone, to be freed remorseless into a grave of everyone it had had to be.

ILLUSTRATION: MAISHA SYEDA

What is there to say about being a woman? Now, there is that question.
Will you allow me a final hour to heap up all the bodies, disclaimed and given up to cerebrate on these trifling convictions hollowed to the bone?
Not much to say about being a woman,
but while the shell cracks open, would you peer inside:
in it, raw magnolias—dispetaling like Venus in a drought;
scraps crocheting into a blooming Moon-God.

with hands hovering over the tawa in which i cooked my morning paratha
i see the bubbles in the kettle and move one of my hands to infuse the water with tea leaves and cardamom after all, everyone is home.
stacks of unwashed plates in the sink leaning, like the tower of Pisa
i let my hands drown in the smoke
i quite like the smell of cloves, even more when they're burning turning charcoal in front of my eyes while my henna darkens and it dries.
i turn the button as right as it goes remove the tawa and pull back my long sleeved shirt so it rests above my elbows i put my hands close to the sapphire flame the heat makes me feel something it makes me feel better burning but better.
'what's the weather today, alexa?'
43 degrees, i hear from the living room
i pour the milk inside the kettle
i take two teacups out , fill it with tea mix a spoon of ginger and dash of honey and i pull my sleeves down, purple patches peaking through the translucent cream linen.
i give him the tea
he complains about my henna possibly staining the white shirt and notices his marks through it eyes fixated on it, like it's a piece of art before they're shut; ignored, like a masterpiece he cannot afford.
he raises his gaze to my face his iris pulls and his pupils dilate a curve breaks open a familiar dimple as he compliments my henna and the tea even the honey, like i don't mix a spoonful everyday.
i smile, as i burn my tongue on my cup with a closed fist to endure the heat of the sip like the one i took not too many cups of burnt honey before.
here, open arms come with a closed fist just like tea comes with burnt honey.

"Burnt honey" was the winning entry in last month's Khero Khata.

Monalisa's ENDURING CHARM

For Mozeza Ashraf Monalisa, popularly known as Monalisa, love is more than just a feeling– it's a way of life. The sweet-smiling actress and sought-after model, who has captured hearts across Bangladesh and beyond, has recently returned to her homeland for a visit. Despite having lived abroad for years, Monalisa's popularity in Bangladesh remains undiminished.

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

During her recent visit to The Daily Star office, Monalisa opened up about her life's journey, her artistic pursuits, and her unending quest for a soulmate worthy of her boundless affection.

How do you view love in your life?
Love can arrive many times in one life, at any time, anywhere. Also, why do we always associate love with another person? For me, love transcends the mere connection between two people. You can fall in love with a river, a mountain, or an ocean. I want to fall in love all my life. I don't want to live without love. No one can live without love.

What are your thoughts on marriage?
I haven't found the kind of person I want yet. First, I have to find the right person and then I can think about marriage. When I find someone with whom I can share an understanding relationship, someone who will respect me, love me, and value me, and our relationship–only then I might decide. Till then, I want to focus on my professional journey.

How busy have you been after returning to the country?
I'm having an extremely busy time after returning to the country. I've received many invitations. I've met many friends and co-artistes. I've participated in various photoshoots and interviews. I'm also spending quality time with my mother.

How has the acting world responded to your return? Are you receiving offers?
I've been inundated with a myriad of opportunities since setting foot back in Bangladesh. I've been receiving offers for dramas and modelling gigs. However, I'm not one to blindly accept every role that comes my way. I intend to be selective in my choices, picking projects that truly resonate with me.

My plan is to strike a balance, dividing my time between my homeland and living abroad. Even if the stars don't quite align for me to take on an acting project during this particular visit, I'm certain the future holds such prospects.

It is perceived that you're still as popular as before. What are your thoughts on it?
The day I landed at the airport, I realised how much people love me. Wherever I go, I'm getting everyone's love. I thought people had forgotten me. But apparently, they didn't. I'm overwhelmed by everyone's love and amazed at the same time. This love is a gift from the Almighty.

You were offered silver-screen projects before. If you get an offer now, will you take it?
At one stage of my career, yes, I received hundreds of offers for films. I didn't do it then. Now, many quality films are being made in our industry. If I get offered a good story and character that align with me, as well as director and producer, I will take on films. I have to like it first.

What is the last Bangladeshi movie you watched?
The last ones I watched were Priyotoma and Surongo. I watched both films in America. I really liked them. Bangladeshi cinema has improved a lot. Whenever I go to America, I try to watch Bangladeshi films out of love and admiration for the country's art. Shakib Khan was also there during the screening of Priyotoma. I attended the screening after receiving an invitation.

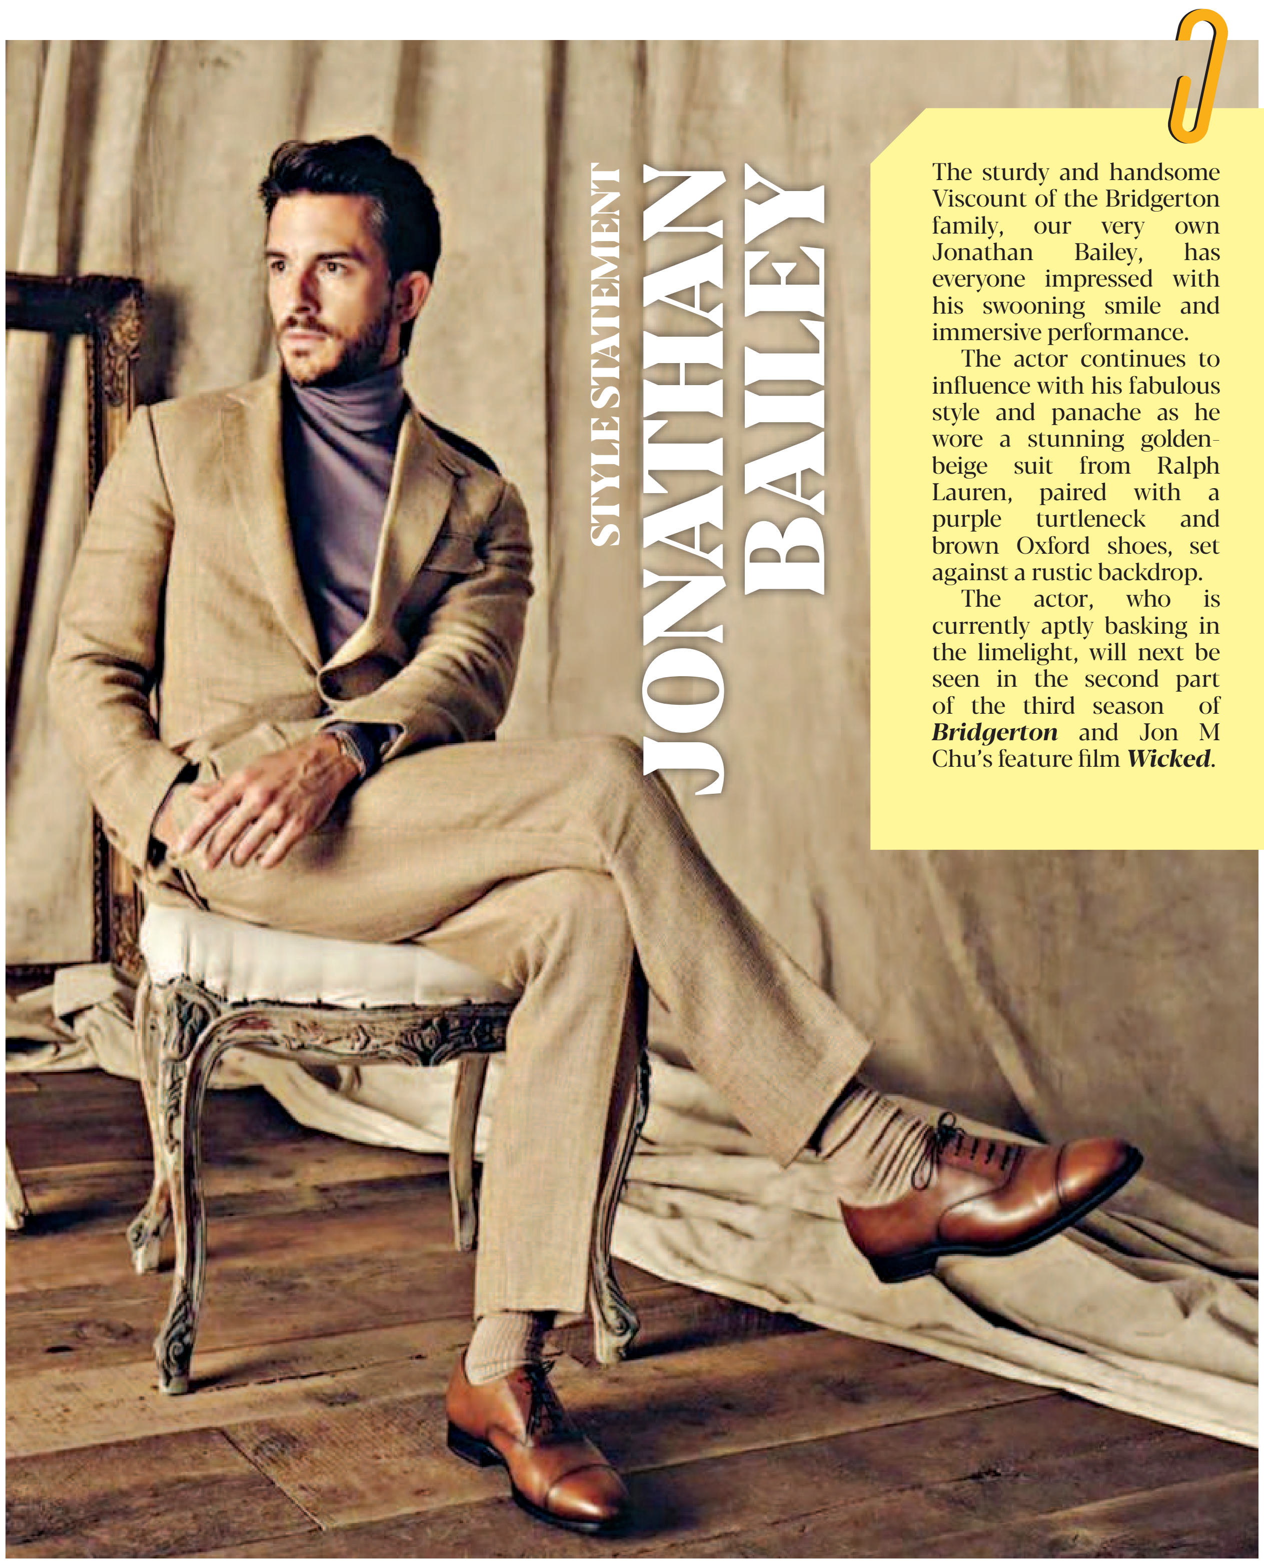
STYLE STATEMENT
JONATHAN BAILEY



The sturdy and handsome Viscount of the Bridgerton family, our very own Jonathan Bailey, has everyone impressed with his swooning smile and immersive performance.

The actor continues to influence with his fabulous style and panache as he wore a stunning golden-beige suit from Ralph Lauren, paired with a purple turtleneck and brown Oxford shoes, set against a rustic backdrop.

The actor, who is currently aptly basking in the limelight, will next be seen in the second part of the third season of Bridgerton and Jon M Chu's feature film Wicked.

WHAT'S PLAYING
Perdida

Perdida (Spanish for 'loss'), the eighth studio album by American rock band Stone Temple Pilots, is a departure from their signature grungy sound. With flute, acoustic guitar, and generic lyrics, the onetime grunge icons seem to be evolving into something different. The title track, Perdida, devoid of power chords, showcases a light and airy texture, exuding a melancholic, longing feel – both musically and lyrically.

The song, delivered in slow to mid-paced tempos and often permeated with a Spanish feel, explores the narrative of looking back, heartache and loss.

The song's introspective nature and sonic reinvention make it a thought-provoking, if imperfect, addition to Stone Temple Pilots' discography.

5G TECHNOLOGY remains a pie in the sky. Why?

MAHMUDUL HASAN

Is 5G merely a vanity, just another technology that offers nothing extraordinary? Or has it emerged as a central cog in transforming the digital space by resolving issues related to low speed and latency?

Despite being launched years ago across the world, firm answers to these questions are yet to be produced. But if you look at statistics, it may surprise you.

Over 1.5 billion people – more than one in every four mobile subscribers globally – now use the fifth-generation technology standard for cellular networks, widely known as 5G.

The technology offers several advantages over previous generations, including faster data speeds, lower latency, and greater capacity to connect multiple devices simultaneously.

Its impact spans industries like healthcare, autonomous vehicles, virtual reality and many more.

Such benefits make it attractive for both consumers and businesses and its widespread adoption indicates significant impact, suggesting that 5G is more than a passing trend.

The Automated Future

a World of Possibilities

> 5G's true value lies in specialised use cases, such as digitising ports, airports, hospitals and industry, says Sigve Brekke, president and CEO of Telenor

But for Bangladesh, the launch of this technology, which promises faster speeds and broader connectivity capabilities, remains a far cry.

Although the rollout of 5G was part of the ruling party's election manifesto in 2018, the technology has so far been limited to trial runs.

Globally, operators began launching 5G networks around 2019, with initial rollouts in major urban areas. By 2021-2022, 5G adoption peaked as more operators expanded coverage and consumers embraced the technology.

According to the GSMA, by 2025, 5G networks are likely to cover one-third of the world's population, which would have a profound impact on both the mobile industry and its customers.

But in Bangladesh, sluggish moves to prepare 5G guidelines, operators' reluctance and a lack of readiness are hindering the launch of the technology.

REGULATORY DELAYS

As the election manifesto of Bangladesh Awami League set out the aim to launch 5G by 2021 to 2023, Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission (BTRC) formed a committee and multiple subcommittees to issue 5G guidelines ahead of its roll-out.

The committee, which is represented by all stakeholders, including officials from intelligence agencies, academics and policymakers, was tasked with drafting the guidelines so 5G could be launched in Bangladesh by the end of 2022 or 2023.

To do so, the committee had to choose a suitable spectrum for the service and fix the price of the spectrum among others.

Later, the BTRC designated 2.3 GHz, 2.6 GHz and 3.5 GHz spectrum bands for 5G technology-based cellular mobile services, according to the BTRC's documents.

In March 2022, the telecom regulator issued Instructions for Radio Frequency Auction – 2022, announcing it would hold the spectrum auction for 2.3 GHz and 2.6 GHz bands on March 31, eying to roll out services by that year.

In its instruction, the BTRC made it mandatory for operators to launch 5G services within six months from the date of the spectrum auction.

"The Commission shall immediately issue Cellular Mobile Service Operator Licence (unification of 2G, 3C, 4G, 5G and beyond) for further expansion of 5G and beyond cellular mobile services," it said.

"In this regard, the terms and conditions of the said licence will be applicable for the deployment of the networks for 5G and beyond cellular mobile technologies," it said.

The country's four mobile phone operators bought 190 megahertz (MHz) of spectrum for $1.23 billion on March 31, 2022, but the regulator failed to issue guidelines that year.

Finally, in 2024, nearly two years after the 5G spectrum auction and over 4 years after the start of the process of the formulation of the guidelines, the BTRC issued a licensing guideline.

However, the guideline failed to explicitly outline the 5G roll-out obligation and omitted the word "5G" from the headline amid the operators' unanimous stance against immediate 5G roll-out.

WHY ARE OPERATORS RELUCTANT?

In March 2022, market leader Grameenphone bought 60 MHz in 2600 band for Tk 3,361 crore. The same was done by Robi, the second largest operator.

Banglalink took 40 MHz in the 2300 band for Tk 2,241 crore while state-run Teletalk 30 MHz in the same band for Tk 1,681 crore.

The Daily Star spoke to around a dozen officials of mobile network operators and top officials of their parent companies over the past year and all of them expressed reluctance to roll-out 5G.

They said rolling out 5G is not financially viable due to high infrastructure costs, consumer affordability concerns, and uncertain returns on investment.

However, the differences between 4G and 5G networks are substantial. 5G offers significantly faster data speeds, potentially reaching up to 10 gigabits per second (Gbps) compared to 4G's maximum of around 1 Gbps.

5G reduces latency to as low as 1 millisecond (ms), compared to 30-50 ms for 4G, enabling near-instantaneous communication critical for applications like autonomous vehicles and real-time gaming.

But officials pointed out that both 4G and 5G enable users to access mobile data services for quality internet, streaming media, and accessing online content.

"For us, bringing 4G to all, not 5G for a few, is the number one priority," said Kaan Terzioğlu, group chief executive officer (CEO) of Banglalink's parent company Veon.

In an earlier interview with The Daily Star, he added that he was not a big fan of the vanity of 5G.

"I see that mobile internet access in the country is growing but I believe '4G for all' -- the vision that we initiated at Banglalink -- still needs a lot of work," he added.

He also pointed out that almost half of the mobile users in Bangladesh still do not even use 4G.

Currently, over 55 percent of mobile subscribers in Bangladesh use 4G networks.

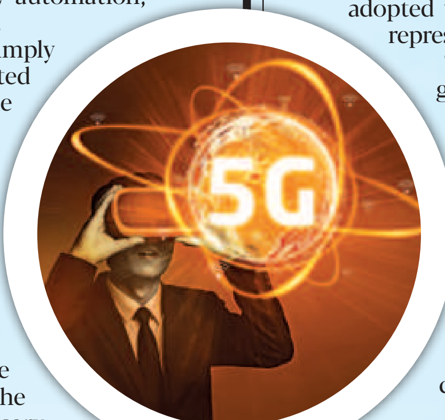
Sigve Brekke, president and CEO of Telenor, the parent company of Grameenphone, said in a recent interview that Grameenphone has established extensive 4G coverage across Bangladesh and now aims to improve indoor connectivity.

Regarding their 5G launch plans, he noted consumer benefits of 5G are minimal compared to 4G.

"5G's true value lies in specialised use cases, such as digitising ports, airports, hospitals and industry," he said.

He emphasised the need for specific 5G applications, such as factory automation, to justify its implementation.

This is because simply deploying 5G without targeted use cases is not a viable business model, he added.



Some industry people said Bangladeshi consumers are not ready for 5G. According to the BTRC and official of operators, only 3 to 4 percent of mobile users have 5G devices.

"In order to assure the use of updated technology, the right device is also necessary. Bangladesh's perspective should be strengthened in this regard," Vivek Sood, group chief executive officer of Axiata Group, the parent company of Robi Axiata, told The Daily Star in an interview.

But despite their unwillingness to launch 5G in the near future, the operators have already completed the successful trial run of the technology.

Although Bangladesh became one of the first nations in Asia to launch 2G in the 90s, 3G only arrived in the country in 2013 and 4G in 2018 – a significant delay since the technologies were launched around the world in the early and late 2000s respectively.

Experts divided on 5G necessity

MAHMUDUL HASAN

Experts are split on the necessity of rolling out 5G in Bangladesh due to several critical issues.

Some believe the delay in implementing 5G technology may cause the country to lag behind in digital infrastructure, economic growth, and technological innovation, affecting its global competitiveness and limiting access to high-speed internet for businesses and consumers.

"Before the launch of 4G, we didn't even think that it would revolutionise services like video streaming, e-commerce and mobile gaming," said a top official of a company in the telecom sector, wishing anonymity.

"If 5G isn't launched, you might not realise what transformative advancements you're missing out on," the official added.

According to Mahtab Uddin Ahmed, former CEO of Robi Axiata, the return on investment for 5G is unclear and given the current forex crisis, it is deemed a non-essential service.

"With low 4G device usage, allocating funds to enhance 4G device availability and network strength would be more beneficial for the nation," he said.

"Even if 5G is pursued, it should be limited to select areas like port authorities and the military. For general use, it is not justifiable under the current circumstances," he added.

Even leading 5G pioneers such as Japan, China and South Korea struggle to get a return on investment, he said.

Operators would need to double their sites for 5G deployment, which requires more than just setting up radio access network equipment on existing sites. Device penetration remains a significant hurdle, he added.

According to Khaled Mahmud, a professor of the Institute of Business Administration at the University of Dhaka, two factors primarily hinder development of 5G in Bangladesh.

Firstly, Bangladesh has not yet widely adopted the technological paradigm shift represented by 5G, he said.

"Our businesses, customers, and government agencies are still unclear on the sheer magnitude of transformative changes possible," he said.

Second, the number and variety of business models that would drive demand for and adoption of 5G are sparse at present. This makes large-scale deployment of this technology an unprofitable venture for cellular companies, he said.

However, he pointed out that the delay in 5G adoption limits the country's businesses in creating novel, real-time, and scalable value.

"It impedes our government agencies from delivering individual and community-level solutions to tackle education, healthcare, agricultural, energy, and climate issues. In all, it holds back our citizens in reaching higher productive and welfare potential," Mahmud said.

In the upcoming decade, Bangladesh could face significant competitive hurdles, especially if peer nations such as Vietnam continue to make progress in commercialising 5G, he added.

He said the primary solution is not regulatory or infrastructural.

"It is mostly a demand-side problem that requires demand-side intervention. Businesses need to innovate and come up with new models that can exploit 5G," said Mahmud.

More importantly, the technologies that can harness 5G, such as large networks of the internet of things (IoT) devices, robotics, big data and AR/VR-powered e-commerce, need to be "localised" by finding profitable use cases, said Mahmud.

Top academic institutions for both technical and business education can be major partners in providing timely research insights to bridge these technologies with innovative local use cases, he added.

Power gets a third of Tk 108,240cr subsidies

Capacity charges may take up most of it

ASIFUR RAHMAN and REJAUL KARIM BYRON

More than a third of the subsidies allocated in the new budget is for the power sector due to what experts say is the huge spending on capacity charges.

The large sum of subsidy has raised eyebrows as the government increased electricity prices several times since January last year.

Currently, the power generation capacity is around 26,000 megawatts while the highest generation was recorded at 16,477MW on April 30 this year.

Finance Minister AH Mahmood Ali in his budget speech said 27 power plants with a combined capacity of 9,144MW were being constructed.

All sectors combined, subsidy allocation for the fiscal 2024-25 is Tk 108,240 crore, of which the power sector will get Tk 40,000 crore, or 37 percent of the total.

In the current fiscal year, the power sector got Tk 35,000 crore of the total Tk 106,897 crore subsidy.

For many years before 2021-22, subsidies for the sector used to be between Tk 7,000 crore and Tk 9,000 crore.

According to a study by the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD) last year, most of the subsidy money was spent to pay capacity charges, a fee paid to private power plants whether they produce electricity or not.

Laurels for women breaking the barriers

bti-The Daily Star Stellar Women 2023 gala puts the spotlight on 12 pioneers in various sectors

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Building Technology and Ideas Ltd (bti) and The Daily Star yesterday honoured 12 women from various walks of life for their exemplary contributions to nation-building.

The first ever "bti-The Daily Star Stellar Women-2023" gala, held at the banquet hall of Kurmitola Golf Club in the capital, acknowledged the women who challenged conventions and inspired innovation, inclusivity, and empowerment.

They were selected in 12 categories for trailblazing in their respective fields: Shamsin Ahmed in the development sector; Tasfia Tasbin in technology; Nazli Hussain in architecture; Sadia Jafrin in education; Ridy Sheikh in culture; Shamima Akhter in corporate; Salma Akter Mone in sports; Dr Sakina Khanam in agriculture; Lutfunnahar Piki in writing; Monoshita Ayruani in startup and entrepreneurship; Tawhida Shiropa in social welfare; and Rozina Islam in journalism.

Speaking as the chief guest, Housing and Public Works Minister RAM Obaidul Muktadir Chowdhury appreciated the initiative, terming it a "great task".

He congratulated bti and The Daily Star for organising a programme promoting women and recognising their contributions, saying this recognition will greatly inspire other women.

About the government measures to empower women, Muqtadir said that after Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's assassination, there were attempts to take the country backwards.

BCL leader arrested over activist's murder

Admits to police about opening fire

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Brahmanbaria

A Chhatra League leader has been arrested for his involvement in the murder of a BCL activist, who was shot dead in broad daylight in Brahmanbaria during the fourth phase of the upazila polls on Wednesday.

Prior to his arrest, Hasan Al Farabi Joy was expelled from his post as vice president of BCL's district unit.

Farabi was directly involved in the murder of BCL activist Ashrafur Rahman Ijaz, said Mohammad Shakhawat Hossain, superintendent of Brahmanbaria police, at a press conference in his office yesterday.

A court sent Farabi to jail yesterday afternoon, a day after the victim's father filed a case against 16 people, including Farabi, in connection with the murder.

A team from the Detective Branch (DB) of police arrested Farabi from Kutubpur village under Atpara upazila of Netrakona on Friday morning, said the SP.

After the arrest, Farabi told police where he dumped the pistol used in the murder. Subsequently, the pistol was retrieved from a bush in Bhatpara village under Brahmanbaria Sadar Upazila, said SP Shakhawat.

During primary interrogation, Farabi admitted that he opened fire at a victory procession brought out by Ijaz and others before the announcement of the results of the Sadar upazila parishad election.

The police official also mentioned that Farabi had a conflict with Ijaz. A heated argument took place between them at a polling centre on Wednesday morning. Later in the afternoon, Farabi opened fire on the victory procession.

POST-POLLS VIOLENCE

Journo attacked by defeated candidate

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Jamalpur

A local journalist was allegedly assaulted by a defeated upazila vice-chairman candidate and her supporters in Bakshiganj upazila, Jamalpur early yesterday.

Masud Ul Hasan, 35, Bakshiganj correspondent of the daily Samakal, filed a written complaint with the local police against four named people and five to six unnamed others.

According to the complaint, as Masud was returning home on his motorcycle from his office, a group of people ambushed him when he reached Russell Amin Market 12:15am, leaving him injured. They also vandalised his motorbike and snatched his camera.

Atiq Mia and his wife defeated female vice chairman candidate Masuma Yasmin Smrity led the attack, Masud alleged in his complaint.

Hearing his scream, locals rescued him and took him to Bakshiganj Upazila Health Complex.

Masud said he has no dispute with Masuma Yasmin Smrity, adding that she might have attacked him for not working in favour of her in the recent upazila parishad election.

This correspondent could not reach the accused over the phone for their comment.

Abdul Ahad, officer-in-charge of Bakshiganj police station said they received a complaint in this regard. "We are looking into the matter."

The president and general secretary of Bakshiganj Press Club condemned the attack and demanded the immediate arrest of the attackers.

Jamalpur Zilla Press Club formed a human chain also demanding immediate arrest and exemplary punishment of the attackers.

Power gets a third of Tk 108,240cr subsidies

Capacity payments reached Tk 28,000 crore in 2022-23, a major leap from Tk 5,600 crore in 2017-18, said the study.

In the current fiscal year, it was Tk 32,000 crore, according to officials of Bangladesh Power Development Board (PDB).

Contacted, Mohammad Hossain, director general of the Power Cell, said, "It is not true that the subsidy money is spent to pay capacity charges. The PDB buys electricity from the Independent Power Producers at a higher rate than we sell [at a lower rate] to the distributor companies and consumers. What we get as subsidy is used to fill the up."

The PDB pays for gas and fuel used by the power plants, he said. "The volatile prices of fuel in the global market and devaluation of the taka against dollar are raising power generation costs.

"We only slightly increased power prices and have plans to hike more. But we are still spending more for each unit of electricity."

Khondaker Golam Moazzem, research director at the CPD, said capacity payments and higher energy prices in the international market were making the subsidy necessary in 2024-25.

Even after raising power prices several more times, the government will still need to subsidise the sector because power plants that are in the pipeline will soon require capacity charges, he said.

By retiring the inefficient and old power plants and getting rid of the provision for capacity charge when a plant does not produce electricity, the government can reduce the burden, he said, but the focus is not there.

The government has plans to raise power tariffs three to four times a year to lower subsidies over the next three years.

Electricity price was raised by 5 percent in February this year and three times last year.

A finance ministry official, requesting anonymity, said, "Power price is being raised slowly while generation costs have risen rapidly."

Prof Mohammad Tamim, former adviser to a caretaker government, said, "If subsidy is withdrawn, the cost of power will rise and drive up inflation."

In the new budget, the government allocated Tk 7,000 crore for importing liquefied natural gas (LNG), up from Tk 6,000 crore in the current fiscal year.

OTHER SUBSIDIES

Considering the rising costs of living, food subsidy has been raised to Tk 7,250 crore from the current year's Tk 6,916 crore.

Ahasanul Islam Titu, state minister at the commerce ministry, told a press conference yesterday that more people will get subsidised food.

"We plan to have shops in designated areas under the Open Market Sale programme," he said.

In the agriculture sector, Tk 17,533 crore was allocated in the proposed budget last year, but the amount reached Tk 25,644 crore in the revised budget. In the new budget, the amount is Tk 17,261 crore.

The government will provide Tk 9,025 crore to the export sector in the form of incentives.

Laurels for women breaking the barriers

"But since the Awami League-led government assumed office, it has been tirelessly working to change the country and improve the fate of women."

He mentioned how the government promoted women with opportunities in various top positions in different government agencies, security forces, and other sectors.

The minister also said, "Now, we see 60 percent of the attendees in village high schools are girls. This didn't happen overnight."

Managing Director of bti FR Khan, who was the guest of honour, gave the welcome speech. "We're very happy that The Daily Star is with us for this prestigious event.

"Through this initiative, we are honouring the women who have been working for the society and profoundly impacting the nation-building, despite facing enormous challenges. The stories of these stellar women and their determination will inspire and empower other women in the society."

Mahfuz Anam, editor and publisher of The Daily Star, in his speech thanked bti for taking this initiative and said, "For The Daily Star and me personally, it's a proud privilege to be here at this absolutely brilliant event. More so, it's an honour to be the partner of bti on this great journey. I must confess that when bti first proposed the idea to us, we were a bit surprised because no real estate company had come forward with such an initiative before ...

"The main theme of this whole effort is to highlight the brilliant roles that women are playing in the country. The leadership emerging at practical, enterprise, company, and small business levels, is setting a trend and contributing significantly to the nation's progress. Through this award, each of the women honoured has inspired many of us."

CEO of bti Nalaka Hettiarachchi thanked the audience, the winners, The Daily Star, and the chief guest for being present.

"Bti is unwavering in its commitment towards women empowerment, and with this aim bti and The Daily Star have initiated the Stellar Women Awards-2023 for those who made enormous contributions in different sectors, including education, development, art, and culture. We are honouring them to recognise their contribution and innovation, and provide financial assistance."

He urged other women, who believe they are making such contributions, to register for next year's edition of the awards.

The awardees were handed over crests, cheques and scarves at the end of the programme.

The 2024 categories for the initiative were also launched.

early next week.

Parliamentary regulations require the opposition leader to come from a party that commands at least 10 percent of the lawmakers in the 543-seat lower house.

The post has been vacant for 10 years because two dismal election results for Congress -- once India's dominant party -- left it short of that threshold.

Tuesday's election results increased the party's parliamentary representation from 52 to 99 seats.

A statement from the Congress executive said that "many challenges" remained in the party's road to reclaiming its credibility and returning to government in the future.

"The people of India have spoken -- the Congress has been given another chance," the statement said.

"It is now up to us to build on it. We must and we will."

Modi and his Hindu-nationalist BJP ruled outright for the past decade but failed to repeat its previous two landslide wins this time, despite widespread expectations of another easy triumph.

foreign leader to have reached the Indian capital for the event at the Rashtrapati Bhavan at 7:20pm, the Indian external affairs ministry tweeted.

"This visit of one of our most valued partners will further strengthen close and deep-rooted bonds of friendship," said the ministry.

It also tagged pictures of Hasina being warmly received by External Affairs Secretary Muktesh Pardeshi. Bangladesh High Commissioner to India Mustafizur Rahman and Indian High Commissioner to Bangladesh Pranay Kumar Verma were also present.

This is Hasina's first visit to India after the January 7 parliamentary polls in Bangladesh.

During her stay in New Delhi, the Bangladesh premier, who is leading a 60-member delegation, is likely to meet Modi after his swearing-in ceremony.

Hasina along with other foreign leaders will attend a banquet, to be hosted by Indian President Droupadi Murmu, at the Rashtrapati Bhavan after the oath-taking.

Apart from Hasina, Sri Lankan President Ranil Wickremesinghe, Maldivian President Mohamed Muizzu, Vice-President of Seychelles Ahmed Afif, Prime Minister of Mauritius Pravind Kumar Jugnauth, Prime Minister of Nepal Pushpa Kamal Dahal and Prime Minister of Bhutan Tshering Tobgay, have accepted the invitation to attend Modi's oath-taking, the Indian external affairs ministry said in a statement yesterday.

"The visit of the leaders to attend the swearing-in ceremony of Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi for his third consecutive term is in keeping with the highest priority accorded by India to its 'Neighbourhood First' policy and 'SAGAR' vision," the ministry said.

Muizzu was a surprise addition to the list of invitees, especially amid the strained ties between India and the Maldives since his election last year on the back of an "India Out" campaign.

The opposition INDIA bloc is yet to get invitation for attending the swearing-in of Modi.

Replying to a question from reporters, Congress leader Jairam Ramesh said his party was yet get any invite for the swearing-in. "If and when we get it, we as INDIA bloc will take a collective decision."

In Kolkata, West Bengal Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee yesterday made it clear that her party Trinamool Congress would not attend Modi's oath-taking.

Hasina is scheduled to return Dhaka tomorrow.

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina is greeted by a group of Manipuri dancers who performed as she arrived at Palam Air Force Station, the VVIP airport in New Delhi, yesterday to attend the oath-taking ceremony of her Indian counterpart Narendra Modi.

Displacement fear looms over thousands living in 5 unions of Khulna's Koyra

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

Breached embankments, homes under water and submerged croplands, this is a regular scene in five unions of Koyra upazila, Khulna, every monsoon.

This year is no different. An unsettling stillness hung heavy in the air as more properties were dangerously close to getting devoured by relentless tides.

Despite this being a perennial issue, the embankments in coastal areas continue to have fault lines.

The situation became particularly worse this year after cyclone Remal battered most of the embankments in this area, just before monsoon.

Forced displacement due to climate change is not new to around 1,93,931 people of Koyra upazila. But that doesn't mean one gets used to the pain of seeing their belongings disappearing into the river, year after year.

Locals alleged that the embankments were in a state of despair even before the cyclone made landfall.

Sabita Sana, a local living beside the Shakbaria river embankment, echoed the collective anxiety. "This year, we are passing days in fear as water has already invaded the village. There are breaches in many points in the embankment," she added.

Around 2,000 villagers in the area share a similar fate.

In Dakkhin Bedkashi Union, the situation is particularly dire. Erosion has brought the Shakbaria river embankment in Katkata to the brink of collapse.

Local residents, public representatives, and WDB officials said about 12km of embankments along Ghatakhali, Harinkhola, Madinabad Launchghat, Mathbaria, Hogla, Gazipara, Golkhali, Hajatkhali, Jorshing, and Maheshpur areas are in an unsafe condition.

Additionally, eight sluice gates in the Kapotaksha and Shakbaria rivers are out of order, with the sluice gate of the Shakbaria river near Nayani and Sutia Bazar almost broken.

Santosh Sardar, a resident of Gunari village in Dacope upazila of Khulna, said, "Recently, at least 10 places of polder number 32 have been breached."

Polder is a piece of low-lying land reclaimed from the sea or a river and protected by dykes.

"We were forced to live on the embankment for two years after Aila hit, as our land was underwater and saline water destroyed all kinds of trees and agricultural land. We have not yet recovered all our losses," he said.

"We have survived Remal, but we are now worried about the Dhaki river erosion," he added.

Sattajit Sardar, a resident of the same village, said within the last five months many sections of the newly constructed embankments in Kamarkhola, Jaliakhali, Kalabgi, and Sutarkhali have partially broken down, leaving vast areas at risk of flooding.

According to BWDB, approximately 73km of embankment out of the 2,006km in the Khulna, Bagerhat, and Satkhira districts are in a dilapidated condition.

Abdur Rahman, executive engineer of BWDB in Khulna Division-1, said 10.5km of the 365.24km of a dam in his zone are in a vulnerable condition.

Additionally, 12km of 630km flood protection embankment in Koyra, Dacope, Paikgachha, and Batiaghata upazilas are at risk of collapse, confirmed sources within BWDB, Khulna Division-2.

Gouranga Nandy, researcher and chairman of Center for Environment and Participatory Research, said the embankments are often built in an unplanned way, and sometimes using substandard materials.

Bidyut Kumar Saha, additional chief engineer of the South Western Region of BWDB, said a new megaproject is underway to build stronger embankments and reduce risks for communities in Khulna and Satkhira.

ROAD, RAIL, BRIDGE SECTORS

Allocation cut may hamper projects

Fear officials, transport experts stress proper utilisation

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

The government has proposed to cut down budgetary allocation for road, rail and bridge sectors by around 9 percent in the next fiscal year.

Officials say this may delay the implementation of some ongoing projects as well as execution of their expansion plans.

The allocation for Roads and Highways Department, which is in charge of a 22,476km network of roads and bridges, came down for the first time in five years.

Bangladesh Railway, which is still struggling to expand its service even after receiving a huge investment in the last 16 years, will receive less allocation for the first time in four years.

Prof Hadiuzzaman, an independent transport expert, however, said the allocation given for roads, rail and bridges is still a "handsome one"; and proper utilisation of the allocation is the key.

BUDGET
2024-2025

RHD, BR and Bangladesh Bridge Authority will get Tk 58,087 crore under Annual Development Programme, which is Tk 5,010 crore (8.62 percent) less than the allocation of previous fiscal year.

He said although allocation of these sectors has decreased, allocation for shipping has gone up by around Tk 1,000 crore, which is a positive signal towards building a balanced and smart transport system in the country.

"I think the ongoing financial crisis is the main reason behind the less allocation in this priority sector," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

As per proposed budget placed on Thursday, RHD,

Counterfeiters active ahead of Eid; 4 held in drives

MUNTAKIM SAAD

Hridoy Matobbar, 22, an employee at a computer shop in the capital's Shaympur, learned counterfeiting from YouTube and mastered his computer skills to produce fake money at home. He formed a network and started selling counterfeit currency on social media.

Not only Hridoy, several other gangs are now active in selling counterfeit notes as demand for fake notes increased ahead of Eid-ul-Azha.

A team of the Rapid Action Battalion arrested Hridoy on Friday from the West Dholaipar area and seized various equipment including a computer and printer used to counterfeit notes, said Shamim Hossain, assistant superintendent of police at Rab-3.

Rab said the gang usually charged Tk 10,000-12,000 per Tk 1 lakh of fake notes, but ahead of Eid-ul-Azha, they were selling it for Tk 15,000.

Using various social media platforms and online mediums, Hridoy built a network for selling fake money. By promoting and boosting these pages, he attracted many wholesalers and retailers. Besides, the accused were illegally producing fake national and foreign identity cards and selling them to various criminal gangs for substantial amounts of money, he added.

Rab recovered nine fake NIDs, three fake Indian identity cards, and fake notes.

Meanwhile, in a separate drive yesterday, a team of Detective Branch of police busted a counterfeit currency gang and arrested four members of the racket including the ringleader, from Kadamtoli area in Jatrabari.

The arrestees are -- Liaqat Hossain Zakir, 40, also known as "Mazar Zakir" and "Guru Zakir", along with his second wife Mumtaz Begum, 25, Lima Akhtar Rina, 40, and Sajeda Akhtar, 28.

Saad Ershad comes under 'friendly' fire

Leaders of 'Raushan's JP' slam him for lack of political tact

RASHIDUL HASAN

The Jatiyo Party officially split for the fifth time on March 9 this year when a faction, led by Raushan Ershad, severed ties with the GM Quader-led group and held a council of their own. They labeled themselves as the "Real Jatiyo Party".

However, fault lines have started appearing in the new group within less than three months.

A section of leaders have bashed Rahgair Almahe Ershad, son of Raushan Ershad and co-chairman of the splinter group, for his perceived lack of political tact and decorum.

This discontent was voiced during a meeting of the party's presidium members, held at Raushan Ershad's Gulshan residence.

According to insiders, a JP co-chairman told the meeting, "He seldom answers our calls, which is disrespectful. We can't expect this from a top leader who we rely on to rebuild our organisation's image."

The JP leader also asked, "How can the party progress if our leader treats senior members poorly?" referring to Rahgir Almahe, also known as Saad Ershad.

Another JP co-chairman mentioned that he recently called Saad Ershad from abroad to Budget designed for plundering

Says Fakhrul

UNB, Dhaka

New arrangements have been made in the proposed budget for fresh looting of the nation's wealth, said BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday.

Speaking at a discussion, he also criticised Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's comment where she described the provision for whitening black money as "using bait for catching fish".

"How long will you [PM] be able to deceive people by creating a smoke screen with such statements?" he asked.

"Just by looking at the budget, you can understand that arrangements have been made

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday defended the provision to whiten black money saying it aims to bring undisclosed income into the mainstream economy.

The provision, which allows a person to whiten black money by submitting a 15 percent tax, has come under severe criticism from policy experts and organisations.

"It [the move] will increase money flow into the banking system. The scope to whiten black money has been kept in the budget to recover the money secretly possessed by many," said Quader while addressing a press conference at the AL central office on the capital's Bangabandhu Avenue.

Asked about the Centre for Policy Dialogue's (CPD) comment that allowing black money to be whitened contradicts AL's election manifesto,

Artist Hashem Khan honoured

CITY DESK

The Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation Limited (HSBC) has recently honoured artist Hashem Khan, said a press release.

On the occasion, an artwork album was published.

Hashem Khan is known to conjure vivid representation of history and humanity with his brushstrokes. He was awarded Ekushey Padak and Swadhinata Padak for his contributions. At the ceremony, art enthusiasts gathered to honour his lifetime artworks.

Prime Minister's Education and Cultural Affairs Adviser Dr Kamal Abdul Naser Chowdhury attended the event as the chief guest. State Minister of Cultural Affairs Naheed Ezaher Khan was present as the chairperson.

Besides, lawmaker Asaduzzaman Noor, Liberation War Museum's founder trustee Mofidul Hoque, and Bengal Foundation Director General Luva Nahid Choudhury attended the event as special guests.

Dedicated roads for cycling twice a month: Atiqul

UNB, Dhaka

Dhaka North City Corporation Mayor Md Atiqul Islam yesterday said specific roads in the DNCC area will be designated for cycling two days a month.

He made the announcement while attending the "Pedal for Planet" cycling rally organised by Jaago Foundation and Volunteer for Bangladesh from in front of the Sangsad Bhaban to Gulshan-2 intersection.

The rally was organised to raise awareness about carbon emissions and environmental protection.

Now political rivalry adds to the murder mystery

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN and RASHIDUL HASAN

Gold smuggling, honey trap and narcotics, lots of theories have been floating around since the last few weeks over the murder of Jhenaidah-4 MP Anwarul Azim Anar in a Kolkata flat.

Now local political rivalry has come to the fore after detectives picked up Jhenaidah Awami League leader Kamal Ahmed Babu for interrogation.

Babu is the relief and social welfare affairs secretary of district AL.

Investigators are now trying to find out whether the gold racket, which is behind the murder of Azim, collaborated with his political rivals.

The Detective Branch of the Dhaka Metropolitan Police has already made a list of suspects and picked up Kamal as part of the interrogation on Thursday night, said DB sources.

Kamal, who is a cousin of Aktaruzzaman, one of the masterminds behind the murder.

Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (DB) of the DMP, yesterday said, "Kamal is being interrogated on various important issues. He will be arrested if his involvement is found during the interrogation."

Ashraful Alam, mayor of Kaliganj municipality, informed The Daily Star that Kamal was one of the rivals of the lawmaker.

"The lawmaker's rivals might have been linked with the murder, as many are already trying to take nomination from the constituency," he said, adding, "We demand that the law enforcers look into this matter and reveal the identity of the real killers of the lawmaker."

Besides, the detectives have already sought bank account information of two others -- Taj Mohammad Khan, and Md Jamal Hossain alias Jamal Hazi.

Both are from Jheniadah and close aides of Aktaruzzaman.

Local sources said Taj and Jamal used to oversee Aktaruzzaman's businesses, including gold smuggling.

The two allegedly kept the gold consignments in Aktaruzzaman's farmhouse and then smuggled those out with the consent of lawmaker Azim.

Syed Al Mamun, officer-in-charge of the Kotchandpur Police Station, told this newspaper that Taj and Jamal are on the run.

Azim went to Kolkata on May 12 and stayed at his friend Gopal Biswas' house for a night. He went out the following day saying that he would visit a doctor. On May 22, India and Bangladesh police confirmed that the lawmaker was murdered.

Regarding the DNA test of the recovered body parts from the New Town's flat on May 28, DB chief Harun said the lawmaker's family members will go to India very soon.

On extraditing Aktaruzzaman from the US, Harun said, "We are working in this regard, and they [India] are working too. We have submitted relevant papers to the NCB [National Central Bureau] at the police headquarters, and the NCB have reported it to the Interpol."

Meanwhile, a Kolkata court yesterday granted a 14-day remand for Siam Hossain, one of the key suspects in the murder of Azim.

Assistant Public Prosecutor Mandakranta Mukherjee confirmed the development while addressing reporters outside the court premises yesterday.

"The police argued that they wanted to know other persons involved in the killing and their whereabouts. Besides, police also said Siam is an important person who knows the whereabouts of the body parts of MP Azim and what kind of weapons were used to kill him," she said.

Siam was produced before the court on Saturday after he was taken to India from Nepal.

Harun said Siam and Jihad Howlader knew about the murder of the lawmaker. They are also involved in dumping the body parts, he added.

"India has both of them now. Interrogating them will yield good results. If necessary, we will also interrogate Siam," he said.

Harun said they informed the NCB after learning that Siam was in Nepal, and the NCB immediately passed the information to their Nepal counterparts who eventually made the arrests.

to release a large volume of counterfeit money into the market ahead of Eid-ul-Azha.

During the raid, the officers seized counterfeit currency worth over Tk 1 crore. They also seized materials including paper, ink, laptops, four printers, screens, white paper, heater machines, and security threads.

The operation also uncovered a significant quantity of counterfeit Indian rupees.

Zakir employed around 15 to 20 individuals, paying them a total of Tk 2-2.5 lakh monthly.

The gang took orders online via social media platforms and delivered counterfeit notes through couriers. They also installed CCTV around their house to stay alert.

When arrests were imminent, Zakir and his associates would take refuge in shrines, earning Zakir the nickname Mazar Zakir.

Zakir had been involved in counterfeiting notes for the last 25 years and was previously arrested six times, but he has continued his counterfeiting activities, the DB said.

Earlier in Eid-ul-Fitr, the DB arrested a woman over drug trade. Later she got involved in counterfeit note trading.

Some days ago, she bought fake notes worth Tk 50 lakh from Zakir. The DB learnt about Zakir's whereabouts after arresting her.

Addressing the event, former Foreign Minister AK Abdul Momen said people at the local level have very limited understanding about renewable energy, though the government has policy regarding this.

BEI President M Humayun Kabir said local government institutions, including the city corporations and municipalities, need to be empowered to expand renewable energy.

"We need to frame an inclusive and comprehensive roadmap to achieve the target of renewable energy. Peoples' participation towards this goal is critical," he said.

Meeting sources said most leaders present at the meeting supported the two leaders' remarks.

Meanwhile, executive chairman of the faction Kazi Firoz Rashid told the meeting that they would have to teach political mannerism to Saad.

"Otherwise, we will fail to compete with our opponent group," a JP leader who was present in the meeting quoted Kazi Firoz as saying.

The allegations were made in front of Raushan, but The Daily Star couldn't independently verify what her initial reaction was.

Saad Ershad was not present in the meeting. This newspaper could not contact him despite repeated attempts.

Quader said, "What CPD, TIB, or Sujan said is not our headache. They all speak in the same language as the BNP. Their actions do not match with what they say."

The AL general secretary said there is no scope for exempting punishment of illegal acts, "If someone commits a criminal offence, the perpetrators will face the music according to the existing law."

Quader expressed hope that the move will also help control inflation.

When asked about taking action against AL leaders accused of corruption, Quader said: "Provide a list of those you believe are corrupt. We will request the ACC to investigate them."

Allocation cut

BR and Bangladesh Bridge Authority (BBA) will get Tk 58,087 crore under Annual Development Programme (ADP), which is Tk 5,010 crore (8.62 percent) less than the allocation of previous fiscal year.

RHD will get Tk 32,042 crore in 2024-25 fiscal year, which is Tk 2,021 crore (5.93 percent) less than the outgoing fiscal year.

Contacted, Shoaib Ahmed, acting chief engineer of RHD, said it's true that they received less allocation than they sought, but there is still scope to get more allocation when the ADP will be revised in the middle of the fiscal year.

A senior engineer from RHD highlighted that reduced allocation could negatively affect road improvement and bridge replacement projects, impacting the transportation system overall.

Meanwhile, the budget proposed Tk 13,726 crore for BR in the next fiscal year, which is Tk 1,234 crore (8.25 percent) less than the outgoing fiscal year.

A top BR official said main works of several major projects including Padma Bridge Rail Link, Khulna-Mongla Rail Line, Chattogram-Cox's Bazar Rail Line will be completed within the ongoing fiscal year.

But there are several projects, which are now at initial stage and would require more funds for land acquisition, he said.

He said they have sought over Tk 8,000 crore from the local fund (government) for land acquisition of Sirajganj-Bogura Rail Line, Khulna-Darshan Double Line, Dheerashram ICD, but they got only Tk 4,354 crore.

As a result, the land acquisition process will get delayed, which will also delay the project, he added.

The budget proposed Tk 7,309 crore for BBA, which is Tk 1,755 crore (1,936 percent) less than the outgoing year.

Contacted, BBA Chief Engineer Quazi Muhammad Ferdous said, "We received our expected allocation."

Replying to a question, he said two major projects -- Padma Bridge and Bangabandhu Tunnel -- will be completed within this outgoing fiscal year, resulting in less allocation.

POLLS WITHOUT SYMBOLS

No need to amend the law: Tazul

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Local Government, Rural Development, and Co-operatives Minister Tazul Islam yesterday said there is no need to amend the law to hold elections for upazila parishads and other local government bodies without party symbols.

Speaking at a seminar at the Dhaka Reporters Unity, he noted that the existing law allows parties to field their nominated candidates, who can contest the election without using party symbols.

The Reporters Forum for Election and Democracy (RFED) organised the seminar titled "Challenges in Strengthening Local Government System and the Role of Party Symbols in Elections".

Brig Gen (retd) Sakhawat Hussain, a former election commissioner, emphasised that local government elections were not initially intended to be held under party symbols. He argued that assigning party symbols to candidates centralises power within party leadership.

"Now the entire election system has become corrupted. The party symbol was introduced in local government elections to serve the interests of a party," he said.

Another former election commissioner, Kabita Khanam, suggested that changing the political culture is essential for making elections acceptable.

Badiul Alam Majumdar, secretary of Sushashoner Jonno Nagorik (Shujan), mentioned that the local government system has weakened due to "intervention by lawmakers and control by public administration".

Recognise the 1971 genocide

Speakers tell first council of 'Aamra Ekattor'

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The new generation is stronger than the freedom fighters and will lead the country forward while preserving the pride, heritage, and heroism of the Liberation War, said Mahbub Zaman, chairperson of Aamra Ekattor, yesterday.

He made the remarks at the first council of Aamra Ekattor, an organisation dedicated to upholding the spirit of the Liberation War, held in the capital.

Zaman said the pride, heritage, and heroism associated with the Liberation War and its victory will continue to grow stronger. To support this mission, "Aamra Ekattor" has been established to pass the national flag to the new generation.

"Our slogan is 'Awaken in the spirit of '71, awaken others'," he added.

During the inaugural ceremony, freedom fighter Hilal Foyezi, chief coordinator of Aamra Ekattor, delivered the welcome speech.

Marking 53 years of independence, 53 freedom fighters were honoured by 53 young individuals who have excelled in fields such as literature, culture, sports, science, technology, and travel.

Speaking about the organisation's journey, Mahfuza Jasmine, a member of Aamra Ekattor, said, "Following the glorious path of our past and inspired by the ideals of the Liberation War, we started an informal journey. Our goal is to create a new awakening to build a non-communal, humane, and equitable Bangladesh."

Addressing the organisation's objectives, another member, Tamzid Siddiq Spondon, said one of their major goals is to achieve international recognition of the 1971 killings as "genocide".

He said they have already submitted a memorandum to the United Nations secretary-general and are actively engaging in international seminars and various movements to pursue this goal.

Need roadmap to meet renewable energy targets

Speakers tell dialogue

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh needs a clear roadmap to implement the renewable energy targets set by the government, said lawmakers and policy experts at a dialogue yesterday.

They said people in general have limited awareness on the importance of renewable energy, that will be critical in the days to come because of climate change impacts.

The observations came at a national dialogue organised by Bangladesh Enterprise Institute (BEI) at a Dhaka hotel.

The Bangladesh government aimed to generate 5 percent of its electricity from renewables by 2015 and 10 percent by 2020. However, as of June last year, this number is less than 5 percent.

The government has now set new targets, aiming to produce 15 percent of electricity from renewables by 2030, 40 percent by 2041 and 100 percent by 2050.

'WB loan for Rohingyas won't solve crisis'

Speakers say it will make country more debt-ridden

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The World Bank loan that is being provided for projects involving Rohingyas and host communities means the country will be more debt-ridden, said civil society groups at a rally yesterday.

When there is no option but to repatriate the around one million Rohingyas in Cox's Bazar and Bhashanchar, the WB loan will intensify the crisis of Bangladesh, which is already debt-ridden, they said.

Nine civic and development organisations organised a human chain and rally in front of Jatiya Press Club.

Recently, Ecnec approved two projects involving Tk 8,483 crore. Here, WB will provide Tk 7,720 crore ($700 million) -- Tk 4,475 crore in loan and Tk 3,244 crore in grants.

Civil society groups said there has been no repatriation in the last seven years, while funds for Rohingyas are also dwindling. The WB loan, instead of just grant, does not ensure justice for the people of Bangladesh.

Rezaul Karim Chowdhury, chief moderator of EquityBD, said, "When Bangladesh asked for assistance in the development of local communities affected by the Rohingya crisis, WB offered a loan. Since Bangladesh is not responsible for the Rohingya crisis, it must not take loans."

EquityBD Secretariat Coordinator Mustafa Kamal Akand said the per capita fund allocated for Rohingya population has already dropped from $12 to $8.

'OBAK BHALOBASHA'
30 years later

The very talented Babna Karim, a former member of the band and also the original creator of the song, was flown in from the US to perform with the band. The song also featured a host of gifted musicians who played and vocalised alongside the band.

ELITA KARIM

Warfaze, one of the most celebrated bands in Bangladesh, turned 40 years old on June 6. With albums, compositions, awards, and several hits to their name, the band has contributed much to the music industry in Bangladesh. They have also played a vital role– through their melodies and lyrics– in keeping the Bengali language alive, thriving, and evolving, over several generations and in countries all over the world, where Bengalis live and communicate accordingly.

The latest release of the famous song, Obak Bhalobasha on the Coke Studio Bangla version proved to many that certain compositions are here to stay forever and can be reborn generations later.

As the new version of the song crosses the eight million mark, one can't help going back to the original version of the song, which was released in a self-titled album 30 years ago. The album was definitely a big hit, especially the song Obak Bhalobasha. The unique elements that defined the composition– the beginning of the guitar solo, going on for minutes, sounds of waves crashing against the rocks at sea, calls of seagulls flying above, and then finally sliding into the words of a beautiful saga– had the younger ones asking for more.

Fast forward to almost three decades later, the release of the new version of Obak Bhalobasha now has a younger set of followers and music lovers. The song featured the current band members of Warfaze– Sheikh Monirul Alam Tipu (drums), Ibrahim Ahmed Kamal (lead guitar), Palash Noor (vocals), Samir Hafiz (lead guitar), Naim Haque Roger (bass guitar) and Shams Mansoor Ghani (keyboard).

The very talented Babna Karim, a former member of the band and also the original creator of the song, was flown in from the US to perform with the band. The song also featured a host of gifted musicians who played and vocalised alongside the band.

"It was Arnob who got in touch with me last November regarding Coke Studio Bangla Season 3," says Tipu.

PHOTOS: BAYEZID BIN WAHEED/ RAW EXPOSURE

Tipu adds that initially, the band was considering working on Ekti Chele, yet another Warfaze hit. "Palash, the band's current vocalist, does a fantastic rendition of the song," says Tipu, adding, "And we all thought that the song would be perfect. However, the Coke Studio team wanted Obak Bhalobasha instead."

The entire production was nothing less than a team effort, says Tipu, with Arnob, Samir, and himself working on the production of the new version.

PHOTO: COURTESY

Babna Karim, the lyricist and composer of Obak Bhalobasha, remembers writing the song on February 29, 1992, a couple of years before it was released. "I first created the melody and the lyrics followed later," he says.

After the release of the self-titled album in 1994, the band found out about the Coca-Cola Band Music Award and was adamant about participating in the competition with the submission of their newly released song Obak Bhalobasha. However, they were falling short of approximately Tk 3,500.

"The requirements were as follows: the song was to be submitted on five chrome cassettes, along with the lyrics and the structure of the song," says Tipu. "Neither I nor Babna had the funds to do this, so I went to Kabir bhai from Rainbow Music Store. He immediately handed me the money and recorded the chrome cassettes himself."

As one can guess, the team won the competition and walked off with a cash prize of Tk 50,000. This, undoubtedly, motivated them to flourish and achieve more in the industry. Three decades later, it was as if fate reunited Coca-Cola and Warfaze for this new rendition of Obak Bhalobasha in the third season of Coke Studio Bangla.

"I simply loved everything about it!" says Babna, referring to the production and the set. "Also the blending between two different scales was done perfectly," he adds, noting the striking difference between the original and the new version of the song. "This was done because Palash and I sing on different keys."

The key shift that Babna Karim speaks of is the transition to an E minor from a C minor - while performing the new version live on set. Shifting of keys within a composition is sometimes done to add an artistic layer to a performance, where the tempo also goes through exciting changes. This is also done to make adjustments between two or more vocalists performing the composition.

"In the rendition, we moved from C minor to E minor– a total of four shifts!" Palash exclaims.

"Both Warfaze and Arnob had long discussions about how this transition would take place. Eventually, a point was reached where the transition for the instruments and vocals would be smooth. I definitely learned a thing or two that day!" says Palash.

Obak Bhalobasha has been relevant for several generations and has created connections through the power of love and music. It is now time for the younger musicians to come forward and create new dimensions; this will only be possible if the legends make way and welcome new ideas to the circle.

Traditional duli still in demand

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

Duli, a traditional rice storage bin or a small silo, made of bamboo, is still being used by farmers in different rural areas of the northern region.

Usually, use and sale of traditional duli increase in many folds during the paddy harvesting period as most of the farmers in Rangpur region prefers it for storing rice all the year round.

As a result, local bamboo craftsmen pass busy times in making and selling duli during the rice harvesting season.

Currently, the bamboo-made rice storage bin is available in almost all the Haats (weekly markets) in Rangpur region's five districts--Lalmonirhat, Kurigram, Rangpur, Nilphamari and Gaibandha.

Locals said duli still has a high demand among farmers in rural areas.

A number of farmers said gradually traditional agricultural practices as well as the tools and accessories, used by farmers, are being replaced by modern machinery and gadgets.

But duli, a traditional paddy storage bin or a miniature silo, is still being used by farmers in rural areas for storing harvested rice at their homes.

Depending on the amount of paddy harvested in a single season, each farmer usually sets-up one or two duli at their homestead to store rice for consumption of their family members all through the year, they added.

Farmer Nagendra Nath Das of Thetrai village in Kurigram's Ulipur upazila said the demand for duli is at its peak during the paddy harvest season.

Moreover, most of the craftsmen remain busy during that period, trying to keep up with orders made by duli traders.

"Duli is considered as one of our traditional accessories for storing rice," he said.

Craftsman Anil Chandra Das of Nayarhat village in Lalmonirhat Sadar upazila said duli is available in three regular sizes -- small, medium and large.

The small one holds about 10 to 12 maunds of rice, the medium one about 20 to 22 maunds, and the large one holds as much as 25 to 30 maunds.

If made with inferior quality and thin bamboo slices, a duli lasts around three to four years, but a duli made with high quality thick bamboo slivers can last up to seven to eight years.

Each small size duli is being sold for Tk 1,000 to 1,200, medium size at Tk 1,800 to Tk 2,000 and the large one at Tk 2,500 to Tk 2,700.

It takes about two to three days to make a duli, while profit from each duli is around Tk 500 to Tk 800, he said.

Will Tigers cash in on lucky break?

his only boundary in the innings, killing off a match which got unnecessary tense owing to some questionable batting.

In the end, Mahmudullah remained 16 not out off 13 balls following a steady 36 off 38 from Liton Das and a bold 20-ball 40 from Towhid Hridoy as Bangladesh got over the line with two wickets in hand in a nervy 125-run chase.

The low-scoring thriller had multiple twists and turns, with Bangladesh faltering in a chase that should've been much more straight-forward, accepted their captain.

"We gave our 120 percent. Last 10-15 days we have been making plans and all the fielders are doing their job. I think they bowled really well, but on a wicket like this we should have won this easily," said skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto after the match.

Sri Lanka had started the match brilliantly, plundering 53 runs in the Powerplay, thanks to Pathum Nissanka's 28-ball 47. But after Mustafizur Rahman, who eventually finished with 3-17, got the batter caught with his trademark cutter, it was all Bangladesh.

The bowlers conceded just 71 runs from the seventh to 20th over at a run-rate touch above five runs per over with leg-spinner Rishad Hossain claiming three wickets, being in with a chance to claim a hat-trick at one point, and injury returnee Taskin Ahmed taking 2-25.

The bowlers had set up the match wonderfully for the Tigers but the batters nearly threw it away multiple times, owing to a mixture of some brilliant bowling from Sri Lanka and sub-par batting.

Even Bangladesh's final runs in the chase came off an overthrow, after Mahmudullah was nearly run out going for a single, which would've seen the Tigers needing two runs with just one wicket in hand in the last over.

Bangladesh's win over Sri Lanka may not have been entirely convincing but it has already put the Tigers in a favourable position in the race to Super 8s.

After the defeat to Bangladesh, Sri Lanka are staring down the barrel, as they now need to win against associates Nepal and the Netherlands by big margins and pray for a few upsets if they are to finish as one of the two top teams in Group D.

Sri Lanka's misery has opened the doors for Bangladesh as a couple of wins over the associates should be sufficient for them to progress. However, if this World Cup has shown anything, it's that the margin between the elites and the full members has shrunk and many associates have the ammunition to pull off surprises.

Nevertheless, in a campaign where not much was expected of them, Bangladesh now have a clear cut path to the next phase following their South Africa fixture as their final two group games will be played in the Caribbean pitches, which are closer to pitches back home.

The Tigers now can dare to dream.

"There is an understanding, but the initiatives are not enough to overcome the crisis," he said.

The SANEM executive director said there is also a lack of initiatives for achieving the targets on institutional reforms.

The projections on foreign currency reserves, revenue collection, and investment, are also not realistic, he observed.

The research organisation said that the government has set some unrealistic targets for inflation and economic growth.

The government seeks to bring down inflation to 6.5 percent, which averaged more than 9 percent in the last two years.

It also aims to achieve the target for 6.75 percent gross domestic product (GDP) growth for FY25, which is much higher than the provisional estimate of 5.82 percent for the current fiscal year.

In order to achieve the targeted GDP growth, the government's goal is to increase the private investment-to-GDP ratio to 27.3 percent in FY25 from 23.5 in the current fiscal year.

"Significant challenges remain in alleviating poverty, reducing inequality, and creating employment. Bringing inflation to a tolerable level will be another big challenge," said Sayema Haque Bidisha, research director of SANEM.

It is not possible to bring down inflation to the targeted level, said Bidisha, a professor of economics at Dhaka University.

She said higher foreign and domestic debts will have a direct impact on inflation.

"The authorities should have taken measures to stop Hundi [transaction of money through illegal channels]. No steps have been taken in this regard. There is no initiative to encourage farmers to produce agricultural products as an alternative to imports," she said.

Also, there are no significant initiatives in the proposed budget to encourage employment generation, she said, adding that a detailed roadmap is needed in this regard.

SANEM, however, praised the government's decision to increase the highest tax rate from 25 percent to 30 percent, abolish the tax at source on some essential commodities, and raise the allocations for the health and social safety net sectors.

Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali placed the Tk 7,97,000 crore national budget in parliament on June 6.

"A total of 252 people were inspected, and 92 of them were arrested for various offences.

"We also arrested a 62-year-old local man under Section 56(1)(d) of the Immigration Act 1959/63 for harbouring illegal immigrants," he said.

Those detained included 30 men from China, four men from India, four men from Indonesia, 53 men from Bangladesh, and one man from Pakistan.

"Those arrested are aged from 20 to 40," he said, adding that the settlement was located about 500 metres from a construction site where the illegal immigrants were working.

"It's amazing to be here. I love this place. I wait every year to come back," said Swiatek, who clicked into gear after saving a match point against Naomi Osaka in the second round.

"I was almost out of the tournament," she said. "I also needed to believe this one is going to be possible, it's been a really emotional tournament."

Swiatek becomes only the third woman to win the tournament three years running. Henin, in 2005-07, was the last to do so. Monica Seles also achieved the feat as a teenager at the start of the 1990s.

At 23, her four Roland Garros titles is the same number Rafael Nadal, the record 14-time champion, had at the same age.

D-8 group urges world to up pressure on Israel

AFP, Istanbul

An alliance of mostly Muslim-majority countries including Turkey, Egypt and Iran yesterday demanded full Palestinian membership of the United Nations and greater international pressure on Israel amid the Gaza war.

The D-8 Organization for Economic Cooperation, which also includes Bangladesh, Indonesia, Malaysia, Nigeria and Pakistan, called for an immediate ceasefire in the devastated Palestinian territory, where Israel has been battling Hamas militants for more than eight months.

Foreign ministers from the group meeting in Istanbul called on the United States to lift its veto on full Palestinian UN membership and on all countries to "exert diplomatic, political, economic and legal pressure" on Israel.

They also urged states to ensure Israel complies with the International Court of Justice's decisions, withdraws from the southern Rafah governorate and guarantees the safe entry of humanitarian aid to Gaza.

Denouncing an "ongoing genocide and grave violations of international law", the group called on states to contribute to and join legal proceedings against Israel at international courts.

The eight countries also demanded an end to arms and ammunition deliveries to Israel and that all measures be taken to protect Palestinian civilians, rejecting any attempted forced displacement.

'INDIA bloc offered PM post to Nitish Kumar'

NDTV ONLINE

Bihar Chief Minister and Janata Dal (United) chief Nitish Kumar was offered the prime ministerial post by the Opposition INDIA bloc after the Lok Sabha election results were announced, party leader KC Tyagi claimed in an exclusive interview with NDTV.

The remarks came amid speculation that the INDIA bloc is trying to get Nitish Kumar back into the alliance in a bid to stop the NDA from forming the government for a record third term.

Tyagi, though, made it clear that the JDU has rejected all the offers from the opposition and plan to work with the NDA for the next five years.

"Nitish Kumar's speech supporting Prime Minister Narendra Modi has put to rest all the rumours doing the rounds. These reports should have stopped when we (JDU) joined the NDA," Tyagi told NDTV.

"We were hurt by the way Congress and its allies treated our leader, and had to choose a different path. Those who thought Nitish Kumar was not worthy of being the alliance's convenor are now offering him the prime minister's post. But the JDU has already rejected all such offers," he added.

Buzz of a sensational Nitish Kumar - INDIA bloc reunion surfaced Tuesday evening after it became clear the BJP would not win 272 seats on its own. Senior INDIA leaders, including former Maharashtra Chief Minister Uddhav Thackeray, suggested an olive branch might be extended to Nitish Kumar.

On Thursday sources close to Nitish Kumar ruled out this possibility, but left a sting in the tail; with both sides locked in talks over ministerial berth allocation, the BJP brass was reportedly told to remember Nitish Kumar had walked out of the INDIA bloc over delays in naming him as its Convenor.

According to sources, JDU will get two key posts in the new cabinet led by Prime Minister Narendra Modi, which will be sworn in today. The party has proposed the name of two senior leaders - Lalan Singh and Ram Nath Thakur. Lalan Singh was elected to the Lok Sabha from Bihar's Munger, while Ram Nath Thakur is a Rajya Sabha MP. Thakur is the son of Bharat Ratna awardee Karpoori Thakur.

Strikes on Russia-held Ukraine kill 26

AFP, Moscow

Ukrainian strikes on parts of the Russian-held Lugansk and Kherson regions killed 26 people and injured dozens more on Friday, occupation authorities said.

Both Ukrainian regions were among four Russia claimed to have annexed in September 2022 despite not fully controlling any of them following the full-scale military campaign launched that February.

A shop in the village of Sadove in the southern Kherson region "with a large number of visitors and employees was destroyed", Vladimir Saldo, head of Russian occupation authorities in Kherson, wrote on Telegram.

A HIMARS missile struck shortly afterwards as residents from neighbouring houses rushed to help the victims, Saldo told Russian media.

Saldo condemned the "vile murder of civilians" made possible by Western arms deliveries to Ukraine.

Earlier on Friday, Russian-appointed officials in Lugansk reported that a Ukrainian missile strike on an apartment block in the eastern region's main city of the same name killed four and wounded more than 40.

The strike tore open the facade of a five-storey Soviet-era block of flats from the roof down and left a deep crater in the ground, images posted by the Russian emergency services showed.

UK foreign minister fooled by hoax call

AFP, London

Britain's foreign minister David Cameron has been the victim of a hoax video call from someone claiming to be the former president of Ukraine, officials said.

Cameron had a short video call with former Ukrainian leader Petro Poroshenko, who was president from 2014 to 2019, but later became concerned. The hoax was being made public to alert others of the risk and ensure the video was not "manipulated and subsequently used", a Foreign Office statement said.

A number of "text messages were exchanged followed by a brief video call between the foreign secretary and someone purporting to be Petro Poroshenko", according to the statement issued on Friday. "Whilst the video call clearly appeared to be with Mr Poroshenko, following the conversation the foreign secretary became suspicious and stopped communication."

The statement did not say when the call took place.

France's President Emmanuel Macron (L) talks with US President Joe Biden during a ceremony at the Arc of Triomphe in Paris yesterday. Biden, after meeting Macron pledged Washington's support for Kyiv in its battle against the Russian invasion, warning that Vladimir Putin would "not stop" at Ukraine. Both Biden and Macron on Friday met Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky in Paris, pledging support for the Ukrainian cause. Danish PM attacker gets 12 days in custody

REUTERS, Copenhagen

A 39-year old man who assaulted Denmark's Prime Minister Mette Frederiksen in Copenhagen on Friday causing her to suffer a neck injury was sentenced yesterday to 12 days in custody, Danish police said.

The assault took place in a square in the city centre on Friday when a man walked up to the prime minister and hit her.

Frederiksen's office said the incident had left the politician "shocked" and suffering a minor whiplash injury.

All programmes of PM have been cancelled. .

The assault comes two days before Danes head to the polls in the European Union election.

A month ago, three German politicians suffered assaults ahead of European Parliament and district council elections and more attacks followed earlier this week.

Suspected Islamists kill 38 in DR Congo

REUTERS, Beni

Suspected Islamist rebels killed at least 38 people in an overnight attack on villages in eastern Democratic Republic of Congo, two district officials and a civil society leader said yesterday.

Local civil society leader Justin Kavalami blamed members of the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF) for the attack. The ADF, alleged to be behind another village assault that killed at least 16 people earlier this week, originates from neighbouring Uganda.

Now based in eastern Congo, it has pledged allegiance to Islamic State and mounts frequent attacks, further destabilising a region where many militant groups are active.

Armed men used guns and machetes to attack residents of villages in Beni territory, in North Kivu province, overnight on Friday, local official Fabien Kakule told Reuters.

District official Leon Kakule Siviwe said the death toll stood at 38 and said the recent surge in violence was due to the attackers taking advantage of a low security presence.

No good news for the unemployed youth

Proposed budget offers no hope or way out for them

Historically, the promise of job creation has been a cornerstone of political pledges. When Awami League came to power in 2009, it vowed to provide employment to every household. But we all know how that turned out. Such lofty promises are difficult to fulfil when contrasting priorities emerge and bureaucrats take over, but there is no denying the importance of sustained efforts—"sustained" being the keyword—to ensure proper utilisation of the youth. Unfortunately, the recently proposed budget has been frustrating in that regard. Not only does it offer no way out of the present job crisis, but it also betrays no intention of eradicating well-known barriers to employment such as corruption; if anything, it seems to have encouraged it. Case in point: allowing whitening of black money.

Corruption, it bears repeating, stifles economic growth and deters investment, thus limiting job opportunities. It is because of the widespread corruption and lack of targeted measures in Bangladesh that the number of the unemployed, especially among educated youths, has reached alarming levels. Many are forced to settle for low-paying jobs despite being overqualified. Many are seeking employment abroad through illegal and often precarious channels due to lack of opportunities. Businesses and entrepreneurs are facing various systemic hurdles. Even a large number of vacant positions in the public sector remain unfilled. The budget, as the nation's roadmap to secure its financial future, has missed the chance to address all such issues affecting the job market. Its poor allocations for education and health sectors, vital for the development of human resources, also do not help.

This reality—a stagnant job market and the uncertainties surrounding it—has been weighing heavily on young undergraduates. A recent survey by the Aachol Foundation, as reported by Prothom Alo, highlights the mental health struggles of university students with 55 percent of the surveyed expressing anxiety about their future careers. The intense pressure to succeed, coupled with an environment rife with bullying, harassment, and dissatisfaction with educational standards, has led to significant mental health issues among them, including depression and suicidal thoughts. This, among other things, indicates the growing disconnect between the education and employment sectors, with many students being forced to consider a career overseas.

This is bad news for the country. Clearly, what we are missing is an enabling environment for the nurturing and utilisation of young talents. We, therefore, urge the authorities to treat unemployment as a national emergency, with comprehensive strategies to stimulate job creation, curb corruption, and support both undergraduates and graduates as well as other job seekers. Our future and well-being depend on it.

Stop the decline of Chalan beel

Protecting the beel and its network of waterbodies is vital

It is appalling how we have allowed unplanned development, encroachment, waste dumping and over-extraction of groundwater strangle life out of the largest wetland of the country: the Chalan beel. The beel once provided subsistence to thousands of farmers and fishers in North Bengal. But in just over a century, according to a report, its size has reduced from 1,085 square kilometres to a mere 168 sq km, with its biodiversity largely destroyed and groundwater sources almost depleted.

The gradual decline of many of the rivers and canals that feed water into the beel caused its alarming decline. Those rivers too have been subjected to encroachment, construction of unplanned sluice gates, and mindless waste dumping. Lack of dredging is another issue. Despite repeated media reports in this regard, no effective measures have been taken by the government. Instead, the government itself built structures and set up projects, especially on Boral river's land, the main water source of Chalan beel. Although some ad hoc steps were taken to remove some of the structures on the Boral, based on a 2018 study by the water resources ministry, no long-term coordinated action has been taken to restore the navigability of the river, and consequently, the beel continued to dry up.

Several government agencies are responsible for the protection of our rivers and wetlands. It is, however, clear that no one is doing their job right. While the ill-equipped Department of Environment has done nothing to protect the biodiversity of Chalan beel, the fisheries and livestock ministry did not think twice before giving permission for pond excavation and fish farming. No action was taken to penalise illegal enclosures harming the beel's natural environment. The local administration and other responsible agencies too kept on turning a blind eye to the unplanned roads, bridges, culverts, regulators and sluice gates constructed through the beel and its network. Unfortunately, it is not the only victim of the government's sheer apathy in protecting our wetlands. We have seen several other beels being subjected to the same fate.

This needs to stop. Government agencies must work together, and develop and implement long-term projects to save this precious wetland and others. They must also preserve the networks of rivers and wetlands breathing life into our delta.

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

Donald Trump indicted

On June 9, 2023, the former president of the US was indicted with a felony over storing sensitive documents about nuclear capabilities in his Florida estate. It was alleged that he repeatedly attempted to hide records that were requested by investigators, and showed off a classified map and military plan from the Pentagon.

LABOUR RECRUITMENT TO MALAYSIA

Syndicate wins, migrants suffer, country loses

Shariful Hasan
is the associate director of Migration Programme and Youth Platform at BRAC, and a columnist.

SHARIFUL HASAN

"Is the syndicate more powerful than the state?"

This was the closing line of my article about labour recruitment to Malaysia, published in The Daily Star on July 25, 2022. After two years, particularly in the last few days, many now understand the syndicates' complexities and influential role in the recruitment process of Bangladeshi migrants for Malaysia.

Such incidents are common in the context of migration to Malaysia. Over the past 15 years, Malaysia's labour market has been shut down three times due to the same syndicate's involvement, irregularities, corruption, and bribery allegations.

When Malaysia resumed hiring Bangladeshi workers in August 2022, following a four-year hiatus, the governments of both countries agreed that a worker would spend no more than Tk 78,990 during the whole process. However, migrants each had to pay Tk 5.44 lakh or $5,000, according to a survey by the US-based non-profit Verité.

On March 28, four UN experts wrote to the governments of Bangladesh and Malaysia, highlighting the plight of Bangladeshi migrants. They reported that each migrant spent between $4,500 and $6,000 to secure a job in Malaysia. Several migrant workers told the media they spent over Tk 5 lakh to get there.

Despite paying such excessive amounts, at least 16,970 migrant workers failed to reach Malaysia before the May 31 deadline due to mismanagement by the government authorities and local recruiting agents.

Deceived by the recruiting agencies, some failed to obtain airline tickets, while others bought tickets at triple the usual price, but still couldn't travel due to a lack of clearance from the concerned company in Malaysia. Many mortgaged their lands or sold livestock and borrowed from banks, friends, and relatives, only to see their dreams shattered as they missed the opportunity to travel within the stipulated time.

The government could have avoided this by proper planning, as the deadline was set three months ago. But we saw repetition of the cycle of halting the intake of Bangladeshi workers, then re-opening the market, workers paying five to seven times the official cost and struggling to find work and eventually, the market shutting down again. Meanwhile, a group of people profited immensely.

State Minister Shofiqur Rahman Choudhury announced that the ministry had formed a six-member probe committee to investigate this mismanagement. "Those responsible will be brought to book," he assured, adding that the committee would submit its report within seven days and action would follow. However, will this committee uncover the truth? What solutions will they propose, as this is not an isolated incident?

Migration to Malaysia has been fraught with issues since the Bureau of Manpower, Employment and Training (BMET) recorded the first 23 Bangladeshi workers migrating in 1978. Over the last 46 years, the recruitment process has seen different names, but it has experienced persistent mismanagement, high migration costs, corruption and repeated closure.

After the market was almost frozen between 1997 and 2005, Malaysia introduced the calling visa system at the end of 2006. Then, in 2007 and 2008, 400,000 Bangladeshi workers went to Malaysia. Although the migration cost was fixed at Tk 84,000, individuals had to pay Tk 2-3 lakh. Despite that, many Bangladeshis did not get jobs and started to suffer in KL. Nearly half a million migrants became undocumented at that time. Due to this, Malaysia stopped hiring workers from Bangladesh in 2009.

After closure from 2009 to 2012, a G2G (government to government) agreement was signed on November 26, 2012, and people went to Malaysia at a very minimal cost of Tk 33,000. But strong opposition from the businessmen and private agencies put a stop to G2G and in 2016, Malaysia declared that it would hire workers through private agencies again. This time, they adopted a syndicate of 10 agencies. There was corruption and massive ambiguity about the process in both countries, and migrants had to pay high costs, at least 10 times more than the government-fixed cost. In September 2018, the market closed again due to corruption and irregularities, re-opening in 2022, only for the same syndicate to emerge.

Most people were delighted about the Malaysian market re-opening, but optimism was replaced by anxiety and scepticism when the syndicate issues re-emerged again in 2022. Dhaka wanted to allow all 1,520 licensed recruiting agencies to send manpower to Malaysia, but in a letter sent to Bangladesh's Expatriate Welfare Minister Imran Ahmed on January 14, 2022, Malaysian former Human Resources Minister M Saravanan said that Malaysia wanted to recruit workers from Bangladesh through 25 agencies.

According to media reports, Aminul Islam Bin Abdul Nor, a Malaysian national of Bangladeshi origin, controls the entire business of sending workers to Malaysia. Ruhul Amin, alias Shawpon, the former Secretary-General of Bangladesh Association of International Recruiting Agencies (Baira), represents Aminul in Bangladesh. Together, they decide who joins the syndicate.

Aminul also owns the Foreign Workers Central Management System (FWCMS) software MiGRAMS, used for recruiting workers in Malaysia. If the demand papers for any workers are finalised in Malaysia, they are distributed among the approved agencies through the FWCMS software.

Initially, the syndicate had 25 agencies sending workers to Malaysia. This number increased to 100 private agencies, including several owned by parliament members, their relatives, and political leaders, controlled by the syndicate.

From August 2022 to May this year, around 4,76,672 Bangladeshi workers migrated to Malaysia for jobs. This means the syndicate syphoned over $1 billion out of Bangladesh.

There are 14 countries, including Bangladesh, that send workers to Malaysia. However, other than Bangladesh, none of the countries have such a syndicate. So, the government needs to start analysing the amount of remittance and the amount of cost for migration to Malaysia. Nothing will happen if Bangladesh denies sending people through the syndicate.

However, for the sake of the people and for the country, Bangladesh and Malaysia should investigate such irregularities and punish the guilty. But the crucial question remains the same: Is the syndicate more powerful than the state? If not, why do they go unpunished? Are they above the law?

Many mortgaged their lands or sold livestock and borrowed from banks, friends, and relatives to arrange the money to travel to Malaysia, only to see their dreams shattered.

The Indian election's winners and losers

Shashi Tharoor
is an MP of the Indian National Congress, who was re-elected to the Lok Sabha for a fourth successive term, representing Thiruvananthapuram.

SHASHI THAROOR

When the results of India's general election were announced on June 4, the biggest losers were the pundits and pollsters, who had almost unanimously predicted an overwhelming victory for Prime Minister Narendra Modi and his ruling Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP). Their exit-poll projections were so far off the mark in several states that one prominent pollster, appearing on India's most popular English-language television channel, burst into tears on camera when the actual results were revealed.

To be sure, Modi's BJP has been returned to power. But its victory looks more like a defeat. Far from expanding its formidable majority from 303 to 370 seats in the Lok Sabha, the lower house of Parliament—as Modi and his principal lieutenant, Home Minister Amit Shah, had predicted—the BJP lost 63 seats.

Indeed, the BJP now holds only 240 seats—well short of the 272 needed for a majority. With the allied regional parties in the National Democratic Alliance similarly falling short of Modi and Shah's predictions, the BJP now must depend on a motley array of NDA allies to get any legislation passed.

The second-biggest loser was Modi himself. He made the election all about himself, seeking to capitalise on the personality cult that he has spent years promoting. His approach was shameless: Covid-19 vaccination certificates bore his photo, rather than that of the vaccinated person; bags of grain distributed to 800 million people were emblazoned with his image; railway stations across the country featured "selfie points," where travellers could pose with life-size cutouts of Modi.

So inflated were Modi's delusions of grandeur that they apparently morphed into illusions of divinity. During the election campaign, he told one interviewer that he used to believe that he was biologically born, but had become convinced that he was sent directly by the Almighty to serve India. Some might find this cringeworthy, but the public seemed to lap it up: in one recent survey, Modi obtained a 75 percent approval rating.

Now, however, Modi is confronting the downside of his strategy: the BJP's failure to secure even a simple majority has damaged Modi's reputation not only in the eyes of Indian voters, but also within his own party, over which he has long enjoyed unchallenged dominance.

In fact, Modi has taken highly consequential decisions—such as the disastrous demonetisation of 2016 and the stringent pandemic lockdown in 2020—without so much as a discussion with his cabinet. But this is likely to change, because prominent BJP figures and the leaders of the party's now-indispensable allies can now be more assertive, thereby reining in Modi's increasingly autocratic tendencies.

Just as the BJP's victory represents a kind of defeat, the resurgent opposition's defeat looks a lot like victory. The opposition Indian National Congress (of which I am a member) and its partners in the Indian National Developmental Inclusive Alliance (INDIA) have much to celebrate.

The Congress party nearly doubled its seat total, from 52 to 99. And several of its INDIA allies performed better than ever before. With control of 232 seats, INDIA is now a formidable force. One can be certain that the Lok Sabha will no longer serve as a mere rubber stamp for Modi's agenda.

A striking feature of the vote is the widespread rejection of the BJP's Hindu-chauvinist Hindutva doctrine. The BJP lost several formerly "safe" seats in constituencies where Modi's campaign rhetoric had been the most Hindu-centric and inflammatory, including Ayodhya, where he inaugurated a magnificent new temple in January.

In fact, opposition parties made significant gains in the "Hindutva heartland" of northern India, including states where the BJP juggernaut crushed the opposition alliance in 2019.

The biggest winner of the recent election is undoubtedly Indian democracy, which has come under increasing strain during Modi's decade in power. This is reflected in the beating India has taken on global indices. Freedom House has now downgraded India from "free" to "partly free," while the Varieties of Democracy (V-Dem) Institute has reclassified it as an "electoral autocracy." With the BJP in charge, India has become a prime example of "democratic de-consolidation" around the world.

Likewise, India now ranks 111th out of 125 countries in the Global Hunger Index, and 159th out of 180 in the World Press Freedom Index. The German foreign ministry has expressed concerns about declining press freedom, while the British government questioned the banning in India of a BBC documentary on Modi's role in the 2002 anti-Muslim pogrom in Gujarat, where he was chief minister.

Others have raised related concerns. The United States Commission on International Religious Freedom is worried about the treatment of minorities, and the US State Department has sounded the alarm over human-rights abuses more broadly. The World Health Organization took issue with the BJP government's unconvincing Covid-19 mortality figures, and the World Bank pushed back against India's rejection of its human-capital index.

Fortunately, these trends are now set to be reversed. India's opposition is determined to continue fighting to restore an older vision of India, in which, to quote the immortal words of the Bengali poet Rabindranath Tagore, "the mind is without fear and the head is held high."

Is more research funding the answer?

Dr Syed Saad Andaleeb is distinguished professor emeritus at Pennsylvania State University and former vice chancellor of BRAC University.

SYED SAAD ANDALEEB

Drawing upon data from the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics, a recent report by the Bonik Barta highlighted the state of research funding in Bangladesh. The amount of such funding was shown as 0.3 percent of GDP (roughly equivalent to $628 million). According to the report, the highest amount of spending was in agriculture (appropriately so because hunger has serious political ramifications) at $330 million. The lowest spending was in the industry and technology sector, which comes as a surprise. The "entire" education sector, in second place, was allotted about $88 million. For perspective, recent research funding for Johns Hopkins University alone was $3.42 billion while that for the University of Michigan (Ann Arbor) was $1.77 billion.

According to one source the global economic giants spend a greater share of their "far greater" GDPs than Bangladesh on research (especially on cutting edge research). The USA spends more than 3 percent of its GDP on research. The BRICS nations' research expenditures according to one source are as follows: Brazil (1.16 percent), Russia (1.04 percent), India (0.65 percent), China (2.2 percent), and South Africa (0.83 percent). The USA and China outpace research spending by far, globally. The two countries are also economic and military giants. Comparatively, research spending by Bangladesh is miniscule. Nevertheless, the amount is not insignificant. Properly managed, even the current level of research expenditures can provide measurable output and impact.

The article in the Bonik Barta seems to suggest that increasing expenditures on research is an immediate need according to several "experts." My personal position is that greater attention needs to be directed to the management of the current expenditures, driven by a clear set of agendas and goals. For example, in the education sector, the UGC may be hard pressed to articulate what research goals are in its purview, how much has been allocated by sector to the different research projects, the status of each project (apparently there is no proper reporting system), research allocations to public and private universities, and the impact that any funded research has delivered. Lack of management and administration of research, a specialised skill, is sorely missing. Officials at the UGC also speak in hushed tones about the political realities of research.

The fact is, Bangladesh needs to implement a comprehensive set of measures to become competent and innovative like the research-driven nations. Some of the essential strategies to consider include creating a supportive policy environment, strengthening research infrastructure, cultivating a culture of innovation, fostering industry-academia collaboration, improving research funding mechanisms, ensuring ethical research practices, leveraging existing data (across the various sectors), and monitoring, evaluation and regular reporting of progress in research. Each of these areas are rife with deficiencies that have remained in place for decades. For the sake of space and brevity, I shall focus on three immediate action items if research is to begin playing a meaningful role in the affairs of the nation.

Creating a supportive policy environment

- There is a clear need for a National R&D Strategy with clear (sectoral) goals, priorities, and funding mechanisms which are implemented robustly through an efficacious command and control system. In the Strategic Plan for Higher Education 2018-2020, for example, there was a clear mandate to establish a National Research Council (NRC) to oversee and direct higher education research in phase-1 and extend its services to other sectors in later phases. No one seems to know how to prioritise and proceed on this strong and vital recommendation.
- Incentives are imperative for innovation: these include tax incentives (for industries to invest in and pursue their research agendas), substantial targeted grants (and eliminating trivial allocations for the sake of equity) and introducing subsidies for private sector investment in R&D in a PPP mode.
- Intellectual property rights must be strengthened to protect innovations and encourage investment in research.
- Recognition for good research is another vital tool for encouraging critical investigations. A young researcher award may be introduced to encourage neophytes and to imbue in them the culture and value of research.

An enduring buzz in academia is that it requires political connections to advance in one's career. This is a fundamental concern which saps the enthusiasm among academics from becoming creative and inquisitive researchers. Unless they are autonomous and free from political oversight and interference, research will not take off.

Strengthening research infrastructure

- Bangladesh is abysmally deficient in K-12 education. A large majority of the students are not even prepared for university education. Clearly, the proliferation of universities in the country is inconsistent with an ineffective K-12 output where progression in education is still based largely on rote memorisation, not creative or problem-solving modes of learning. Unless the K-12 base is strengthened, with a focus on STEM/STEAM (Science, Technology, Engineering, Arts, and Mathematics) fields, it will not help create research mindsets. Also, where are the teachers who can implement this transformation? This community must be strengthened first. A good step is to make the academic field a sought-after career, not as the choice of last resort, by "upgrading" the status and remuneration of those who choose to serve in this noble profession. It is worth mentioning that those who enjoy a higher status have been blessed in some way by their educators.

VISUAL: SHAIKH SULTANA JAHAN BADHON

- For state-of-the-art research to flourish, specialised programmes and curricula must be developed that strengthen exposure to research methodologies and critical thinking skills. Two issues research students face even in the recognised institutions are: i) teachers do not want to share their knowledge of methodology and analytics; and ii) supervisors are not willing to give time; instead, they load unrelated work on the students to advance personal agendas.
- For research to proliferate, the ratio of PhD to non-PhD faculty must be strengthened and continuous professional development opportunities must be availed to researchers to stay updated with the latest advancements in knowledge and methodologies in their fields.
- To build world-class research institutions, their laboratories must be fully equipped, state-of-the-art facilities provided, and competent personnel selected to run their affairs. At the same time, the researchers must have access to modern technologies and resources for advanced research.
- A digital infrastructure to support data collection, analysis, and dissemination of research findings would be the icing on the cake.

Monitoring and evaluation

It's important to establish a robust set of metrics to track approved research projects. These metrics should capture various aspects of a project, from inputs and processes to outputs and impacts. Additionally, a dedicated entity should be established (e.g., the proposed NRC) to oversee the monitoring process, ensuring compliance, and facilitating comprehensive and reliable data collection and analysis.

Inputmetrics such as R&D expenditures, percentage of GDP allocated to R&D, public vs. private sector investment in R&D, and quality of human resources as researchers (especially their qualifications) should be regularly monitored. Process metrics include the number of ongoing research projects, interdisciplinary and collaborative research initiatives, as well as training and development (number of workshops and participation rates in professional development activities). Output metrics, to be made public, include theses and dissertations at the post-graduate level, publications (in peer-reviewed journals with impact factor and citations), and patents and innovations. Impact metrics are research specific: job creation; improvements in public health, education, and environmental sustainability; international collaborations; and rankings in various global indices.

Conclusion

An enduring buzz in academia is that it requires political connections to advance in one's career. This is a fundamental concern which saps the enthusiasm among academics from becoming creative and inquisitive researchers. Unless they are autonomous and free from political oversight and interference, research will not take off.

The UGC also needs to be completely reimagined because the people who run its affairs can make the difference. Instead of placing its governance under people nearing their retirement, serving only for a short duration (the revolving door phenomenon), and those who are deemed politically appropriate, the time has come for the UGC to be run by professionals who understand the importance of research and are competent in administering competitive research grants that make clear impact. These professionals must be selected competitively after meticulous scrutiny, not "recommended" by government officials or the political brass.

Thereafter, it is important to implement a holistic approach (not just funding) whereby Bangladesh can begin to create the right ecosystem for research and innovation. Fundamentally, however, education at K-12 requires a complete overhaul. Until then, increasing research budgets can make impact only through very selective and well-funded research.

Importantly, research in all sectors must be coordinated for synergy at some appropriate governmental level (the Planning Commission or the PMO) that has the political will and authority to drive innovation and change. For far too long, this important activity with ramifications for nation building has been allowed to drift without a clear purpose and a creative and demanding leadership.

What are we doing wrong in attracting FDI?

AN OPEN DIALOGUE

Dr Abdullah Shibli
n economist and works for Change Healthcare, Inc., information technology company. He also serves as senior research fellow at the US-based International Sustainable Development Institute (ISDI).

ABDULLAH SHIBLI

Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) is the holy grail of this century. Every country seeks to draw FDI and increase its share of this rare commodity. Readers need no reminder that FDI is a limited resource and is traded in a competitive market since all countries, including the significant players—Ireland, India, China, and the USA—are contenders in this chase.

Vietnam, which broke out of the clutches of foreign control only in 1975, has emerged as an economic powerhouse thanks to the influx of FDI. We can learn a lot from the path it charted out for itself since Bangladesh is strategically located in the same region with the potential to leverage not only its domestic market potential but also its proximity to India and China to become the next hub of the international supply chain, including electronics, textiles, IT, and pharmaceuticals. Once they relocate to Bangladesh, these industries could export from here, serving global markets in pharmaceuticals, technology services, medical devices, food and beverages, and financial services.

The question on everyone's mind is whether the recent troubles in our economic front will hurt our chances of attracting FDI. The recent budget has incorporated no new measures to make FDI more attractive to investors. The Fitch ratings downgraded Bangladesh's sovereign credit rating (SCR) to B+ from BB-. That will impact FDI, in addition to driving up the cost of borrowing.

VISUAL: SALMAN SAKIB SHAHRYAR

The SCR downgrade did not surprise anyone, but I wanted to know what factors caused this downgrading. Does it matter to us? And how consistent have the ratings been in identifying the potential risk to investors? I wanted to find out if these credit rating agencies have considered all the information available, including political, social, economic, environmental, and financial issues. As I was exploring, I discovered that a lot of emphasis, or weight as they call it in technical jargon, is assigned to the foreign exchange balance, financial stability, and, of course, the mood of the investors in the country itself. It is also known that building stronger FDI links with the local economy through supplier development programmes and FDI linkage initiatives help decrease information gaps for investors and boosts local business opportunities.

The US Department of State, in its 2023 Investment Climate circular on Bangladesh acknowledges that the country "seeks foreign investment and offers a range of investment incentives under its industrial policy and export-oriented growth strategy." The country has already taken several measures to streamline sanctioning foreign investment. Bangladesh Investment Development Authority (BIDA) has been coordinating reform initiatives to improve Bangladesh's ranking on the World Bank's Ease of Doing Business index. BIDA has been working in collaboration with Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission (BSEC) to host trade shows abroad.

Unfortunately, the US has also raised the issue of anti-union activities in our industrial sector. Our own Centre for Policy Dialogue said the political economy dynamics of Bangladesh have frequently impeded substantial reforms, even when the stakeholders have acknowledged their needs.

International Finance Corporation (IFC) and other international lenders are pushing for a recognition of reforms and the development of a foundational framework to support FDI. There are three main pillars of the investment life cycle. The first pillar is investment attraction and facilitation, aiming at seizing new opportunities; the second pillar is investment retention to decrease the probability of divestment and to foster existing expansion and reinvestment of retained earnings of FDI, and the third pillar is creating FDI links with the local economy to increase the development dividend of FDI. Having said that, we need investment, or rather draw the FDI that is constantly looking for new and fertile territories. Our performance in this regard could be stronger.

"Greenfield" FDI, which involves the establishment of new production facilities and thus the creation of many new jobs, has been in consistent decline as a share of total investment. While annual announcements of new greenfield projects (that is, the future pipeline of investments) averaged more than 100 percent of gross FDI flows to developing countries before the global financial crisis, the ratio had dropped to one-half of gross flows by 2020.

Many factors attract FDI and are well-known. However, it is better said than done. In Bangladesh, several factors are favourable, including cheap labour, a welcoming government, and our well-educated young urban workers. However, last year (FY 22-23), Bangladesh attracted only $3.6 billion in FDI, which was lower than FY 21-22, a 5.5 percent decline. To put it in context, Bangladesh needs $6-10 billion of FDI annually to meet its investment needs.

Growing climate change impacts, rising interest rates, and policy changes in advanced countries—such as incentives for green investments and localisation of supply chains for critical technologies—have also had far-reaching implications for the allocation of investment across the globe.

An IFC report, "Changing Foreign Direct Investment Dynamics and Policy Responses," provides a granular analysis of shifts in FDI flows and policy trends. It suggests policy responses that developing countries may consider to reverse the decline in FDI and enable more private capital to support their development needs.

What can we do better? Why is Vietnam successful and not us? Investors feel encouraged by the political stability of a country. A business's prosperity is based on a government's favourable legislation and political goodwill. This includes having (and maintaining) a good transport and infrastructure network to help transport products and raw materials to marketplaces. The IFC report identifies the proactive initiatives by Vietnam, including a dispute resolution mechanism and other measures to improve the investment climate.

Finally, favourable tax rates will also promote investments as investors look for nations with lower corporate taxes. Ironically, a weak exchange rate is ideal for foreign investors because it is cheaper for investors and companies to buy assets.

Impact of household cleaning products on asthma

Comparing traditional, green, and disinfecting wipes

The Journal of Allergy and Clinical Immunology recently published a study that examined the effects of various household cleaning products on asthma. Previous research had already shown a connection between uncontrolled asthma and the use of harsh cleaning chemicals such as bleach and ammonia. Now, researchers wanted to see if "green" cleaning products and disinfecting wipes had similar effects.

In the study, 37,000 people participated in an online survey. Among them, about 1,700 had their asthma under control, while around 500 struggled with uncontrolled asthma. The researchers found that using cleaning products frequently—between 4 and 7 days a week—was mildly associated with controlled asthma but had a much stronger link to uncontrolled asthma.

The findings revealed that people using green cleaning products were 2.4 times more likely to have uncontrolled asthma. Those who used cleaning sprays were 2.7 times more likely, while those using traditional irritant products like bleach and ammonia were 2.8 times more likely. The risk was highest for disinfecting wipes, with a 3.5 times greater chance of having uncontrolled asthma.

Additionally, the study highlighted that individuals who did all their own cleaning without any household help were particularly vulnerable to these effects.

FOOD SAFETY prepare for the unexpected

STAR HEALTH DESK

On June 7, 2024, World Food Safety Day brought attention to food safety incidents. The theme for this year emphasised the significance of preparedness for food safety incidents, regardless of their severity.

Food safety incidents are situations where there is a potential or confirmed health risk associated with food consumption. A food incident can happen, for example, due to accidents, inadequate controls, food fraud, or natural events. While being ready to manage food safety incidents requires dedicated efforts from policymakers, food safety authorities, farmers, and food business operators, consumers can also play an active role.

Every day, on an average, 1,600,000 people get sick due to unsafe food contaminated with bacteria, viruses, parasites, or chemical substances. It affects all countries.

The United Nations General Assembly established World Food Safety Day in 2018 to raise awareness of the importance of food safety. Food safety incidents that require intervention to protect the health of consumers can range from minor events to major crises. And because hazards have no regard for the lines humans draw on maps, an increasingly interconnected global food supply means that the risks posed by unsafe food have the potential to rapidly evolve from a local problem to an international emergency.

In 2004, FAO and WHO jointly created the International Food Safety Authorities Network (INFOSAN), a global network of national food safety authorities, to facilitate the rapid exchange of information across borders and between members, recording hundreds of food safety incidents every year.

Call for actions:

Governments:

- Develop and regularly update national food safety emergency response plans and use "lessons learned" from food safety events to identify gaps and limitations.
- Ensure a coordinated approach across government agencies and national authorities, including mechanisms for the rapid exchange of information.
- Provide rapid, accurate, and open information to stakeholders during food safety events and report international emergencies to the International Food Safety Authorities Network (INFOSAN).

Food operators:

- Establish and regularly update food safety management plans.
- Know how to avoid food safety incidents by following good hygiene practices.
- Provide regular staff training.

Consumers:

- Practice safe food handling at home and follow the WHO's Five Keys to Safer Food: keep clean, separate raw and cooked foods, cook thoroughly, keep food at safe temperatures, and use safe water and raw materials.
- Know how to keep food safe before, during, and after emergencies, such as floods, fires, natural disasters, or the loss of power.
- Know how to report poor hygiene standards and misleading food labelling.

HAVE A NICE DAY

The impact of nitpicking

DR RUBAIUL MURSHED

A nitpicker is a person who finds faults, however small or unimportant, everywhere they look. After meeting someone, a nitpicker lists every tiny thing s/he did not like about the encounter. When discussing people, they often focus on seemingly minor flaws, even if they are insignificant. This chronic complaining style represents a negative mindset, a lack of gratitude, and a sense of helplessness. It can also damage relationships with others, especially when they criticise people behind their backs, which can be exhausting for those who hear it.

Some nitpickers are just highly arrogant types who think they know what is best for everyone. Others are anxious and troublesome, nitpicking because they need to feel some sense of control. Some are never satisfied. They do not need solutions; instead, they need problems. If someone tries to solve their problems, it undermines their ability to complain, which in turn irritates them.

Nitpickers could be chronic complainers who need listeners, not problem solvers. These chronic complainers tend to ruminate on problems and focus on setbacks over progress. Some research suggests that making a habit of complaining can "re-wire" the brain so that these particular thinking patterns become deeply ingrained.

Complaining can often stem from bad moods or personality traits, but in some cases, it can also be a tool that helps people bond and regulate their emotions. Thus, sometimes people complain with the hope that venting their feelings will lessen the severity of their distressing emotions. However, too much complaining can worsen one's mood, make one feel helpless, and lead to a negative outlook on life.

Frequent complaints weakens the immune system, raising the risk of various illnesses. It even makes people more susceptible to high cholesterol, diabetes, heart disease, obesity, and stroke.

EMPOWERING LIVES

The importance of menstrual hygiene management

DR ROZIA AFROZ RANA

Menstrual hygiene management is one of the most important saviours for women in this century. Saving lives by preventing infection and reducing the cost of hospital stays and medicine expenses, thus reducing mortality rates. If women and girls could get proper sanitation facilities with all the hygiene management needs, their overall lives would be better. On the contrary, productivity in working places would create a positive impact, which would strongly emphasise women's empowerment.

Most of the girls and women do not have access to clean water soap, and they do not even have a private space in a toilet to change and dispose of their used sanitary products in low-income countries. Most of the women in rural areas still cannot afford a sanitary pad or napkin due to high expenses. Understanding the situation with care is a strong mental support that can help a mother's daughter feel comfortable. We should know and remember that menstrual health is a fundamental aspect of human rights, dignity, and public health.

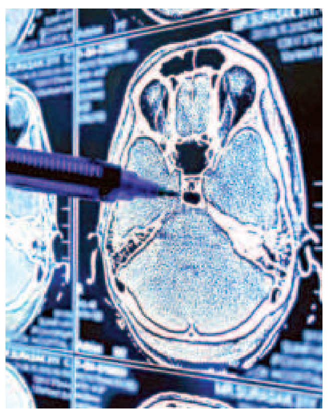
To create awareness and share knowledge to break taboos, May 28 is dedicated to observing World Menstrual Day. Just like other countries, Bangladesh also celebrated this day with full spirit. This year, 2024, the theme was Together for a Period-Friendly World.

In order to promote menstrual health hygiene, women and girls require the following:

- » Appropriate menstrual product materials (pads, clothes)
- » Additional supportive materials, like a soap water bucket or bin, are needed for storage, washing, and drying.
- » Basic menstrual health education
- » Access to safe and private toilet and bathing facilities with water for changing, washing, and drying menstrual products.
- » Disposal options for menstrual waste should be convenient and private.

The illnesses and health issues women typically encounter as a result of inadequate facilities are:

- » Urinary tract infections
- » Bacterial Vaginosis
- » Fungal Infection
- » Pelvic Inflammatory Diseases
- » When women get infected with any of these diseases, their burden on medical expenses increases. Hospital stay, medicine bill, doctor visit, and absence from work are all affected. Health and finances both face a critical crisis. This is also to understand that menstrual hygiene management is not the same from different groups perspectives. Try to follow these steps.
- » Do not forget to wash your hands before and after using a menstrual pad.
- » Remember to change your menstrual product regularly, every 4–6 hours.
- » Always try to wear loose, breathable, clean clothes for comfort.
- » Clean and wash your undergarments with soap and clean water; dry them in sunlight and open air.
- » Keep your private parts clean.
- » If possible, take a shower every day.
- » Eat healthy, fresh food, and keep yourself hydrated.
- » In conclusion, I would like to mention that our government policymakers can think about prioritising these issues.
- » Ensuring quality WASH facilities
- » Subsidising local sanitary pad production
- » Train teachers in a gender-sensitive curriculum
- » Ensure more awareness campaigns through behavioural change communication media, such as poster leaflets



Contribution of AI in diagnosing and treating cancer

Cancer of unknown primary sites often causes pleural and peritoneal effusions, and cytological analysis by pathologists using traditional methods can be inaccurate. Researchers in China used advanced artificial intelligence (AI) methods to study 57,000 cases of fluid buildup in the chest and abdomen, where the origin of the cancer was initially unknown but later identified.

They tested the AI system on nearly 30,000 additional samples to see if it could accurately distinguish between benign (non-cancerous) and malignant (cancerous) cells and determine where the cancer started. They found the AI to be highly accurate, matching the skill level of experienced pathologists and outperforming less experienced ones. When junior pathologists reviewed their diagnoses after seeing the AI's results, their accuracy improved significantly.

Using AI predictions in treatments also showed promising results. Patients whose treatments matched the AI's tumour origin predictions lived longer (27 months on average) compared to those whose treatments did not align with the AI's suggestions (17 months).

In summary, AI technology not only helps pathologists make more accurate diagnoses but also improves patient outcomes by guiding more effective treatments.

PLANNING, EXECUTION, PROCESS coming together for Tigers

Quite a few aspects like planning, execution, and process – things that Bangladesh players resort to while stating their expectations ahead of a game -- came through in their thrilling two-wicket win over Sri Lanka at the Grand Prairie Stadium in Dallas yesterday.

While the bowlers largely took the stage in an impressive display to restrict the Lankans to 124, the batting unit, despite several hiccups, eventually stumbled over the finish line with an over to spare.

The Tigers deservedly have had to endure copious amounts of criticisms in their build-up to their tournament opener but appeared to have brushed it all aside come game time and produced a mighty impressive display, particularly while fielding in the first innings.

A switch seemed to have suddenly turned the Tigers on as they were aggressive in their approach while fielding and rarely put a foot wrong as a unit in the lion hunt in Dallas. Najmul Hossain Shanto's troops were buzzing like bees from the onset and looked like a team hell-bent on pulling off a result in their favour.

PACERS SIZZLE

Bangladesh initially struggled to keep a lid on things despite getting the ball to beat the Lankan batters on several occasions. The Tigers conceded nine fours and a six as the Lankans raced off to 53 for two at the end of the Powerplay, with opener Pathum Nissanka in full groove. But Mustafizur Rahman used his expertise to great effect to dismiss the right-handed opener for a 28-ball 47 with a delivery angled across. That particular wicket pulled things back for the Tigers as it significantly slowed down the rate of scoring. Before that, he got the better off Kamindu Mendis in the Powerplay after Taskin Ahmed had sent back Kusal Mendis in the third over. The Fizz scalped another one at the death to cap off an impressive evening as he returned three for 17.

His pace partners Taskin and Tanzim Hasan Sakib also shone in different phases of play, with the former picking up two for 25 while Sakib showed masterful execution at the death, nailing his yorkers as well as slowers to further merit his inclusion in the eleven.

X-FACTOR RISHAD

One of the aspects that stood out was the faith shown in leg-spinner Rishad Hossain by the team management as well as the captain. He bowled one over in the first 10 and three in the next, including an over in the last five. The leggie is not known for turning the ball, but on the night, managed to give it a rip more than anyone else. The meters displayed that he extracted 3.6 degrees of turn -- the most in that regard in the tournament so far. The 21-year-old played to his strengths, relying on drift and accuracy and when he had the addition of the ability to turn the ball, Rishad turned the match on its head by dismissing Charith Asalanka and Wanindu Hasaranga in the same over, leaving the Lankans five down for 103 after 15. In his final over, the 17th of the innings, he bowled a ripper to outfox Dhananjaya de Silva.

LITON SHOWS COMPOSURE, AND HRIDOY UNLEASHES HIMSELF

A dismal Powerplay may have sent jitters in the Tigers' camp but Liton Das stood tall. His tally, a 38-ball 36, might not reflect the gravity of the knock but it demands appreciation in the context of the game. The right-handed batter tackled Sri Lanka's Pandora's box with graceful ease and held up one end expertly in the chase in a 63-run stand with Towhid Hridoy, who smacked a 20-ball 40. Hridoy conjured up a tornado in the 12th over against Hasaranga as he powered three maximums to potentially seal the match for the Tigers as they required 34 off the last 48 balls. However, he left the job undone, perishing in the same over after which the match swung like a pendulum and turned into a thriller.

MAHMUDULLAH AT IT AGAIN

With the match still in the balance, Mahmudullah was gifted a juicy full toss by Dasun Shanaka in the penultimate over and the veteran batter responded promptly. He had to weather through a turbulent few overs, watching partners at the other end throw it away, and also rode his luck in a run-out situation but held his nerve and got the job done in the end.

A rare 'high-voltage' treat in store

AFP, QUEENS

At the cultural crossroads of the world, New Yorkers will experience a thrilling first on Sunday -- a World Cup cricket match hosted in a US city between Asian powerhouses: rivals India and Pakistan.

However, roughly 10 miles from the Nassau County International Cricket Stadium, a pop-up stadium at Eisenhower Park on Long Island, fans interviewed in the bustling Little India neighborhood of Queens said they won't be able to attend the game in person, as tickets on the resale market are going for at least $800, with the 34,000 seats in the stadium sold out for months.

Beyond the Indian and Pakistani communities, the face-off is eagerly anticipated by immigrants from other South Asian countries where cricket is popular.

Many of the businesses and restaurants in Little India are run by Bangladeshis, many of whom lined up behind Pakistan, from which Bangladesh gained its independence in 1971.

"Even if I am not Indian, not Pakistani, I am going to watch it because this is a high-voltage match," said Faros Ahmed, a 58-year-old restaurant manager of Bangladeshi origin, who supports Pakistan and will broadcast the game for his customers.

Although both countries are cricket powerhouses, head-to-head matches are rare between the nations.

The two sides do not meet outside of official competitions of the ICC, the international cricket federation, and the last test match between them was in 2007.

Sunday's meeting is crucial for Pakistan, who risk elimination in the first round after a surprising loss on Thursday to the United States, ranked 18th in the world.

New York-based Pakistani journalist Wajahat S. Khan said he had "never been more excited or terrified about a cricket match at the same time."

The US win over sixth-ranked Pakistan has boosted interest in cricket in the country, where the sport remains well outside the mainstream.

"India-Pakistan is the game everyone would like to watch, and... it's happening in our backyard," Ajith Shetty, president of two local cricket leagues, told AFP.

This first cricket World Cup hosted in the United States is in the T20 format. Beyond the month-long tournament, Shetty hopes it brings "better infrastructure" for players in the New York area.

In the past eight T20 World Cups, India and Pakistan have faced each other seven times, with India emerging victorious in five of those encounters. One match ended in a tie, which India won through a bowl out in the 2007 inaugural edition.

Overall, in 12 T20 Internationals, India have defeated Pakistan eight times.

Their most recent T20I meeting was at the 2022 T20 World Cup, which witnessed a memorable match-winning innings by Virat Kohli at the packed Melbourne Cricket Ground in Australia.

Alcaraz eyeing history against Zverev

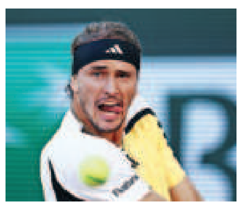
AFP, PARIS

Carlos Alcaraz says he is hoping to join the long list of Spanish French Open champions when he bids to become the youngest man to win Grand Slam titles on all three surfaces in the final against Alexander Zverev on Sunday.

The 21-year-old defeated Novak Djokovic to win Wimbledon last year and also lifted the US Open trophy as a teenager in 2022.

Alcaraz downed incoming world number one Jannik Sinner in five sets in the semi-finals and will be a slight favourite against Zverev, who is still yet to win a Grand Slam tournament.

He is aiming to emulate his childhood hero and 14-time Roland Garros champion Rafael Nadal -- who won his first French Open when Alcaraz was only two years old -- by lifting the trophy, as well as his coach Juan Carlos Ferrero.



Alcaraz has been widely tipped as one of the successors to the reigns of Nadal, Djokovic and Roger Federer at the top of men's tennis since he broke onto the scene as a teenager. He is comfortably living up to that mantle.

Sunday will see the first new winner of the title since Djokovic in 2016, and it will be the first showpiece match in Paris with two first-time finalists since Nadal won his maiden crown against Mariano Puerta in 2005.

RASHID HAILS 'one of the greatest performances'

REUTERS

Afghanistan captain Rashid Khan praised the team's collective display after they claimed an emphatic 84-run victory over New Zealand in the Twenty20 World Cup on Friday.

Openers Rahmanullah Gurbaz (80) and Ibrahim Zadrau (44) combined for 103 runs to power Afghanistan to a total of 159, before Rashid and Fazalhaq Farooqi took four wickets apiece as New Zealand were skittled out for just 75.

"One of the greatest performances from us in T20I cricket against a big team. It is a great team effort," Rashid said after the win at the Providence Stadium in Guyana.

"Great win for Afghanistan and it is a privilege to be leading this side and winning against New Zealand ... It started from the batting, with how Ibrahim and Gurbaz were running.

"We have to give 100% effort, losing or winning does not matter (to me). That is how we prepare. If we don't give 100%, we will be missing something. I don't care about the result a lot but it is about the effort."

Gurbaz, named player of the match, echoed his captain's sentiment, adding: "Nothing is more special.

"We were waiting for this victory for three years. We finally beat them. The trust and the belief was there from the very start. We have the belief that we can beat any team on this surface."

New Zealand captain Kane Williamson admitted that his side had been outplayed "in all facets", but stressed that they could not afford to dwell on the result.

"To get a total like that on a fiddly surface, they kept wickets in hand and played it beautifully," Williamson said.

"Not good enough from us. Quick turnaround, we have to regroup quickly and onto the next challenge. The boys were focussed and were working hard in preparation for this game but it was not our best performance."

New Zealand next face co-hosts West Indies on June 12, a day before Afghanistan take on Papua New Guinea.

Iga Swiatek was over the moon after extending her French Open reign yesterday, sealing a third successive clay court Grand Slam title, as the world No.1 thrashed Jasmine Paolini 6-2, 6-1 in the final which saw only 68 minutes of action at the Roland Garros Complex in Paris.

Will Tigers cash in on lucky break?

ASHFAQ-UL-ALAM

"If I get in the zone, I'll go for it."

The stump microphone caught Mahmudullah Riyad saying this to his partner Shakib Al Hasan in Bangla right before taking stance against off-spinner Dhananjaya De Silva to face the final ball of the 16th over in Bangladesh's chase against Sri Lanka in their ICC Men's T20 World Cup match in Dallas yesterday.

The required rate was below five runs per over at the time and the team was already five wickets down, meaning there was no real need to go for an extravagant shot, but Mahmudullah had already made up his mind.

Mahmudullah, however, could not "go for it" at the time but he finally got one "in the zone" in the first ball of the 19th over, when medium pacer Dasun Shanaka dished out a full toss which he dispatched to the stands,

LEGALISING BLACK MONEY

It encourages corruption

SANEM says

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The opportunity to legalise undisclosed money with no questions asked will discourage compliant taxpayers and encourage corruption, said the South Asian Network on Economic Modeling (SANEM).

The non-profit research organisation made the observation in its analysis of the proposed national budget for 2024-25 fiscal year at a media briefing at the capital's BRAC Centre Inn yesterday.

"The budgetary provision for legalising black money will encourage corruption. We appeal to the lawmakers to oppose the provision proposed in the finance bill," said Selim Raihan, executive director of SANEM.

According to the proposal, taxpayers, including companies and firms, will get the opportunity to legalise their undisclosed income in the next fiscal year without having to face any questions from the authorities concerned about the sources.

No authority will raise questions if a person pays a 15 percent tax on cash, bank deposits, financial securities, or any other forms of wealth. Amnesty will be granted to those who would invest their undisclosed income in properties such as land, buildings and flats. They will have to pay tax at specific rates, depending on the size and location of the properties, according to the Finance Bill-2024.

Raihan, also a professor of economics at Dhaka University, said that there is no reflection of a proper assessment of the economy in the proposed budget.

POST-POLLS INDIA

Rahul nominated as leader of opposition

'BJP allies to get 6 posts in new cabinet'

AGENCIES

Prime Minister Narendra Modi's chief rival Rahul Gandhi was nominated to lead India's opposition in parliament yesterday after an election result that rescued his party from the political wilderness.

Modi will be sworn into office for a third term this weekend following a poll that deprived his ruling Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) of a majority, forcing it to rely on coalition allies to govern.

Gandhi defied analysts' expectations and exit polls to help his Congress party nearly double its parliamentary numbers, its best result since Modi was swept to power a decade ago.

A meeting of the Congress leadership yesterday voted unanimously to recommend Rahul Gandhi's election as India's official opposition leader, a post that had been left vacant since 2014.

"All participants unanimously passed the resolution that Rahul Gandhi should take the position of leader of opposition in the parliament," Congress general secretary KC Venugopal told a news conference afterwards.

The nomination was set to be put before a meeting of lawmakers belonging to a Congress-led opposition alliance later in the day.

Rahul is the scion of the dynasty that dominated Indian politics for decades and is the son, grandson and great-grandson of former prime ministers, beginning with independence leader Jawaharlal Nehru.

If elected, as expected, he will be recognised as India's official opposition leader when the new parliament sits, which local media reports suggest will happen as soon as

Cop shoots another cop dead in Baridhara

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A police constable was shot dead by his colleague near the Palestinian embassy in the capital's Baridhara around 11:45pm last night.

Police detained constable Kawsar Ahmed in connection with shooting constable Monirul dead.

They also cordoned off the area.

Both the policemen were on duty in front of the embassy.

"We are investigating the incident," Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (Detective Branch) of the DMP, told reporters at the spot around 1:00am today.

A passerby and a driver working for an embassy also sustained gunshot wounds and were taken to a nearby hospital for treatment, said, Mazharul Islam, officer-in-charge of Gulshan Police Station.

Hasan Ahmed, a journalist, told The Daily Star, "On our way home from work, we saw a policeman lying on the road near the Palestinian

Israel kills 210 Gazans to rescue 4 hostages

Abbas calls for emergency UNSC session on 'bloody massacre'

REUTERS, Jerusalem/Cairo

Israeli forces rescued four hostages held by Hamas since October in a raid in Gaza yesterday while over 200 Palestinians were killed in airstrikes in the same area, according to Hamas officials, in one of the bloodiest Israeli assaults of the war.

It was not immediately clear if the hostage rescue and the Israeli air assault were part of the same operation but both took place in central Gaza's al-Nuseirat, a densely built-up and often embattled area in the eight-month-old war between Israel and Hamas, the Palestinian territory's ruling Islamist group.

An Israeli military spokesperson said the hostage rescue operation unfolded under fire in the heart of a residential neighbourhood, where he said Hamas had been hiding captives among Gaza civilians under guard by armed militants.

Israeli forces returned fire, including with airstrikes, added the spokesperson, Rear Admiral Daniel Hagari. An Israeli special forces commander was killed during the operation, a police statement said.

Israel named the rescued hostages as Noa Argamani, 26, Almog Meir Jan, 22, Andrey Kozlov, 27, and Shlomi Ziv, 41. They were taken to hospital for medical checks and were in good health, the military said.

- Witnesses say airstrikes targeted marketplace, mosque
- Palestinian death toll in Gaza rises to 36,801
- Israel says rescued hostages all in good health

They were all kidnapped from the Nova music festival during the raid by Hamas-led Palestinian groups on Israeli towns and villages near Gaza on Oct 7.

Since then, Israel's bombardment and invasion of Gaza has killed at least 36,801 Palestinians, according to an updated tally by the territory's health ministry yesterday.

The rescue of the hostages was cheered by all across Israel.

A different picture unfolded back in Gaza, where Palestinian health ministry officials and local medics said that an Israeli military assault in Nuseirat had killed scores of people including women and children.

The ministry did not say how many of the fatalities were Hamas members.

The Hamas-run government media office in Gaza said later the death toll had risen to at least 210 Palestinians with many more wounded, after medics and health officials gave earlier tolls of up to 100 dead. There was no immediate confirmation of the highest figure from Gaza's health ministry.

After the bloodshed, Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas called for an emergency UN Security Council session on "the bloody massacre that was carried out by the Israeli forces" at the al-Nuseirat refugee camp in central Gaza.

Social media footage that Reuters could not immediately verify showed bodies spilling entrails onto bloodstained streets.

Swiatek wins 3rd straight French Open title

AFP, Paris

Poland's Iga Swiatek extended her French Open reign on Saturday as she thrashed Jasmine Paolini 6-2, 6-1 in the final to win her third successive Roland Garros title.

World number one Swiatek dominated Italian 12th seed Paolini, a first-time Grand Slam finalist, needing just 68 minutes to capture a fourth crown in five years in Paris.

Swiatek has now won all five Grand Slam finals she has contested. Her other victory came at the 2022 US Open.

Benazir's resort now under Gopalganj administration

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Gopalganj administration has taken control of Benazir Ahmed and his family's Savanna Eco Resort and Natural Park.

The development comes after Dhaka court on Thursday ordered appointment of administrators to look after the confiscated properties of the former inspector general of police and his family members.

The court asked the Anti-Corruption Commission to take charge of Benazir's four flats.

In Gopalganj, Deputy Commissioner Kazi Mahbubul Alam said the fisheries office was looking after fish enclosures, agriculture office the farm lands and the administration the resort.

Once a copy of the court order reaches Gopalganj administration, officials will form a committee to manage the properties and deposit the proceeds to a bank account, he added.

Meanwhile, the ACC filed a case accusing a Savanna employee of stealing fish from the confiscated park. The accused, Shafiqul Islam, is the fisheries officer of Savanna.

Booking manager of the resort Muhammed Sabbir said the resort had been closed since June 3 at the authorities' direction.

ACC sources said the court had not appointed administrators to look after the Gulshan flats on "humanitarian grounds" as Benazir and his family members live there.

123 illegal Bangladeshis detained in Malaysia

THE STAR/ANN

A total of 214 illegal immigrants, including 123 Bangladeshis, have been arrested by Malaysia's Johor Immigration Department during raids on workers' settlements near Kampung Belokok and Jalan Lingkaran Dalam in Johor Baru.

Immigration Deputy Director-General (Operations) Jafri Embok Taha said 140 officers and department personnel conducted the first raid at 12:45am (Malaysia time) yesterday.

He added that the department has also arrested two local men for harbouring illegal immigrants.

"The raid in Kampung Belokok was based on a public tip-off regarding illegal immigrants in the area. This was followed by two weeks of surveillance

BECOME A MILLIONAIRE

Walton bestows special benefits to customers during every major festival, and this year is no exception. Walton's 'Digital Campaign Season 20' has been running nationwide sinceMarch 1 in preparation for the upcoming Eid. Under this campaign, buyers have the opportunity to become non-stop millionaires.

"So far, 38 buyers from different regions of the country have become millionaires through this campaign, each receiving BDT 10 lakh in cash. Several buyers also received cash vouchers worth BDT 1 lakh. Every purchase of electronics guarantees gifts under this campaign," said Tahasinul Haq, Chief Business Officer, Walton Refrigerator.

SCRATCH TO WIN GOLD

Electromart's 'Ghosha Dilei Gold' presents an opportunity for customers to win prizes, including gold jewellery, TVs, air coolers, and other gifts, by scratching cards.

"The success stories are already rolling in, with 50 lucky winners having secured different types of gold jewellery across the country," shared Zulhaj Zubair from Electromart Electronics. The deal commenced last month and promises to keep the excitement going until June 30, ensuring ample time for customers to benefit from this offer. All models of Haiko and Konka fridges are covered under this offer. Purchasing any model of Konka online or in physical stores will benefit the customer with an additional flat 14% discount along with 'Ghosha Dilei Gold'.

WIN A 'HAMBA'

Minister's offer for the upcoming Eid, 'Fridge Kinun Hamba Jitun,' features a wide array of gifts including cash, gift hampers, home appliances, and even cattle, through scratching a card. As part of the campaign, on June 2, a customer residing in Mirpur won cattle by purchasing a Minister fridge. The prices of fridge products range from BDT 24,000 to over BDT 1 lakh 80 thousand.

"Although the offer started at the end of May, it has gained an immense response across the country. So far, we plan to keep the offer valid until Eid. If the demand persists, it may continue until the end of June," said K M G Kibria, Head of Brand and Communication, Minister - Myone Group.

TRADE UP AND HIT THE JACKPOT

Transcom Digital's 'Dream Exchange Offer' allows people to get a range of advanced-featured refrigerators and freezers from world-renowned brands including Hitachi, Samsung, Whirlpool, Haier, and its own brand Transtec, catering to every segment of customers.

For those looking to upgrade their appliances, Transcom is providing generous discounts of up to Tk. 60,000 through its refrigerator exchange offer. The jackpot offer includes exciting prizes with every purchase through a scratch card. "Customers can enjoy significant cash discounts of up to 45% on selected models," said an expert from Transcom. Customers will receive complimentary gifts with their refrigerator purchase, along with the convenience of free home delivery services.

সময়ের পথ-পরিক্রমায় বিদেশী ব্র্যান্ডকে পিছনে ফেলে যমুনা রেফ্রিজারেটর ক্রেতাদের কাছে একটি শক্তিশালী অবস্থান তৈরি করেছে।

এ বছর ফ্রিজের চাহিদা কেমন ? আপনাদের ব্র্যান্ড কেমন সাড়া পাচ্ছে ?

বছরের এ সময়টা সাধারণত ফ্রিজের চাহিদা বহুলাংশে বৃদ্ধি পায়। সারা বছর দেশে যে পরিমাণ ফ্রিজ বিক্রি হয় তার একটা বড় অংশ এ সময় বিক্রি হয়। রেফ্রিজারেটর বা ফ্রিজ বর্তমানে আমাদের প্রাত্যহিক জীবনের খুবই গুরুত্বপূর্ণ অনুষঙ্গ। শহর থেকে গ্রাম সর্বত্র যমুনা রেফ্রিজারেটরের ক্রেতা রয়েছে। সাশ্রয়ী মূল্য, গুনগতমান ও টেকসই পণ্য, দেশের মানুষের চাহিদা আর এ দেশের আবহাওয়া উপযোগী পন্য হওয়ার কারনে যমুনা রেফ্রিজারেটর আজ কোটি মানুষের আস্থায় ধন্য।

অত্যাধুনিক প্রযুক্তির ইন্টেলিজেন্ট ইনর্ভাটার টেকনোলজির স্মার্ট ডাবল ডোর, টি-ডোর, ক্রস ডোর রেফ্রিজারেটর বাজারে ব্যাপক সাড়া ফেলেছে।

ঈদুল আযহা সামনে রেখে আপনারা কি কি অফার দিচ্ছেন?

ঈদের খুশিকে বেশি বেশি করতে যমুনা ইলেকট্রনিক্স নিয়ে এসেছে ডাবল খুশি অফার। সম্মানিত ক্রেতা সাধারণ এই ঈদে আমাদের যমুনা প্লাজা, ডিলার শপ কিংবা অনলাইনে যমুনা রেফ্রিজারেটর বা অন্যান্য হোম অ্যাপ্লায়েন্স কিনে রেজিস্ট্রেশন করলে জিতে নিতে পারেন মোটরসাইকেল, ফ্রিজ, এসি, স্মার্ট টিভি, মাইক্রোওয়েভ ওভেনসহ অসংখ্য হোম অ্যাপ্লায়েন্স। এছাড়া সর্বোচ্চ ৩০% নগদ ডিসকাউন্ট তো থাকছেই।

কেন যমুনা ফ্রিজ সেরা ?

যমুনা ফ্রিজ সাশ্রয়ী মূল্য, দীর্ঘস্থায়িত্ব, বিদ্যুৎ সাশ্রয়ী, আকর্ষনীয় ডিজাইন, উন্নত কম্প্রেসর, ওয়ারেন্টি, বিক্রয়োত্তর সেবা এবং অত্যাধুনিক প্রযুক্তির পণ্যটি সরবরাহ করছি। সে কারনেই দেশের মানুষের কাছে যমুনা রেফ্রিজারেটর ১ নাম্বার চয়েজ। ৮৫ এমএম ফোমিং ডেনসিটি, ফাইভ ওয়েজ ইভাপোরেটিভ কুলিং সিস্টেম, তাই বিদ্যুৎ বিভ্রাটের এ সময়ে দীর্ঘক্ষণ পর্যন্ত খাবার থাকবে সতেজ ও ফ্রেশ।

আপনার কোম্পানীর ফ্রিজের কী কী বৈশিষ্ট্য এবং সুযোগ-সুবিধা রয়েছে?

আমরা চাই ক্রয়ক্ষমতার মধ্যে জনগণের দোরগোড়ায় সেরা পণ্যটি পৌঁছে দিতে। সে লক্ষ্যে দেশের শীর্ষস্থানীয় শিল্পগোষ্ঠী যমুনা গ্রুপের অঙ্গ প্রতিষ্ঠান যমুনা ইলেকট্রনিক্স এন্ড অটোমোবাইলস লিঃ ২০১৪ সালে বৃহৎ পরিসরে ইলেকট্রনিক্স হোম অ্যাপ্লায়েন্স উৎপাদন শুরু করে। আধুনিক যন্ত্রপাতি, অত্যাধুনিক প্রযুক্তি, দক্ষ জনবল, উন্নত কাঁচামাল ও প্রতিনিয়ত উদ্ভাবনী উৎকর্ষতা সাধনের ফলে যমুনা আজ দেশের ১ নম্বর কোয়ালিটি রেফ্রিজারেটর ব্র্যান্ড।

আমরা সংখ্যাতত্ত্বে বিশ্বাসী নই বরং গুনে ও মানে সেরা হতে চাই। আমাদের রেফ্রিজারেটরগুলোর বিক্রয়োত্তর সার্ভিস প্রায় নেই বললেই চলে (০.০১%)। প্রতি ৫ বছরে কম্প্রেসর পরিবর্তনের হার প্রায় ১%-এর নিচে যা বাজারে প্রচলিত রেফ্রিজারেটর থেকে অনেক কম। সিলিকন জেল মানব দেহের জন্য ক্ষতিকর এবং খাদ্যমান নষ্ট করে। বাংলাদেশে একমাত্র যমুনা রেফ্রিজারেটর-ই তার উৎপাদন প্রক্রিয়ার কোথাও সিলিকন জেল ব্যবহার করে না। আমাদের ফ্রিজগুলোতে R600a গ্যাস ব্যবহৃত হয় যা পরিবেশ বান্ধব ও মানব দেহের ক্ষতি করে না। অত্যাধুনিক প্রযুক্তি ব্যবহারের ফলে খাবারের মান ঠিক থাকে সাথে বিদ্যুৎ খরচ ৭০% কম হয়। আমরা দ্ব্যর্থহীনভাবে বলতে চাই, রেফ্রিজারেটর উৎপাদন প্রক্রিয়ায় যমুনা যে কাঁচামাল, উদ্ভাবন ও অত্যাধুনিক প্রযুক্তি ব্যবহার করে তা দেশের আর কোন প্রতিষ্ঠানের নেই। তাই যমুনা ইলেকট্রনিক্স তার সেরা পণ্যটি গ্রাহকের হাতে তুলে দিচ্ছে।

High-quality refrigerators at an AFFORDABLE PRICE

M A RAZZAK KHAN RAJ CIP
Chairman, Minister-Myone Group

At Minister Electronics, we understand the unique needs of Bangladeshi households. Keeping your food fresh and your electricity bills manageable is our top priority. That's why we design our refrigerators with unwavering dedication to reliability, efficiency, and cutting-edge innovation, providing high-quality refrigerators at a very affordable price.

Every Minister refrigerator undergoes rigorous testing to ensure long-lasting performance and optimal cooling, perfect for our country's warm climate. We use high-quality materials for superior insulation, leading to significant energy savings – up to 66% compared to traditional models! Because we're committed to a greener Bangladesh, we utilize eco-friendly R600a refrigerant gas, and all our refrigerators come with built-in stabilizers. Minister also utilizes high-tempered glass doors, which do not break even under extreme pressure. Additionally, the designs are aesthetically pleasing, making the refrigerators trendy.

We're constantly pushing boundaries, developing features like our industry-leading fast cooling system. We're also exploring the future of food preservation, with features like smart connectivity and intelligent temperature control on the horizon. By focusing on both core functionality and cutting-edge technology, we ensure Minister refrigerators remain reliable, efficient, and at the forefront of keeping your food fresh and your wallet happy. With the high-quality innovation, we are planning to go global as soon as we have received very good responses from local buyers over the years.

But that's not all—beyond the standard discount, customers stand the chance to win exciting prizes such as refrigerators, AC units, Smart TVs, microwave ovens, and a variety of other home appliances.

"Promotions such as the 'Double Khushi Offer' capture the attention of potential buyers and also serve to stimulate purchasing decisions," said Salim Ullah Salim, Director of Marketing, Jamuna Electronics and Automobiles Ltd.

TAILORED PAYMENTS

Easy monthly instalment (EMI) options are available throughout the year, offering a convenient solution for customers to manage their finances. Their popularity soars during the festive season, as they provide a helpful way for jobholders and individuals with lower incomes to comfortably afford larger purchases amidst rising expenses.

Many electronics companies extend discounts for purchases made using credit cards from selected financial institutions with which they partner. Purchasing through credit cards benefits the customer with additional EMI facilities, discounts, and attractive cashback offers. Moreover, to enhance savings, it's worthwhile to explore debit card options as well.

There's an opportunity to avail up to a 15% discount when making payments with bank cards at Transcom Digital, with the facility of 0% interest for up to 36 months. Credit and debit cards from 35 banks can be used to buy Konka fridges. Minister, Walton, and Jamuna also offer EMI facilities through credit cards from various banks.

SHOHOJ KISTI

The Shohoj Kisti instalment option offers a flexible solution for individuals seeking financial assistance without a credit card. With instalment payments spanning from 3 to 12 months, it provides the convenience needed. To qualify for this financing opportunity, the applicant must be employed, whether as a salaried worker, businessperson, landlord, or in any other occupation, subject to terms and conditions with a minimum net income. "It's important to note that not every retail shop offers easy instalment options," said Tahasinul Haq, Chief Business Officer, Walton Refrigerator. Brands such as Transtec, Walton, Jamuna, and Vision provide this offer only in their flagship stores.

A wide array of home appliance manufacturers and distributors, including Transcom Digital, Walton, Electromart, Jamuna, Minister, and Vision, provide EMI options for purchasing fridges. There are two types of EMI currently offered by these companies: one through credit cards and the other via cash, often referred to as 'Shohoj Kisti'.

EMI VIA CARDS

"The flexible payment plans of EMI make it more manageable and affordable by allowing customers to spread the cost of their purchase over several months," said an expert from Transcom Digital.

COOL & CONVENIENT

We aim to enter EUROPEAN AND AMERICAN MARKETS

MD. NURUL AFSER

Deputy Managing Director, Electro Mart Limited Group

We have been selling Konka products in Bangladesh since 1998. Initially, we imported our products from China. When we began, we were the first company to offer a 5-year warranty period for our products. We built a relationship of trust with our customers by ensuring quality products at reasonable prices. In 2004, we commenced assembling our products locally in Bangladesh. By 2015, we initiated a joint effort to establish a factory in Sonargaon, Narayanganj, which became operational in 2018. Local production ensured that our products and designs were compatible with the country's environment. Additionally, we focused on research and development to meet the demands of our consumers and expanded our operations, further strengthening the trust our consumers had in us.

We have already introduced some new technologies and innovations in the field. Konka refrigerators can cool storage quicker, reduce electricity consumption by 71 percent, and maintain the quality of food items. Our products also guarantee that different types of items can be stored together without concerns about odor transfer or bacterial contamination.

> We ensure that our products are environmentally friendly. Our materials are FDI-approved, and we adhere to European standards to preserve food quality.

Furthermore, we ensure that our products are environmentally friendly. Our materials are FDI-approved, and we adhere to European standards to preserve food quality.

We plan to expand and cater to the demands of the entire market, with the eventual goal of exporting our products abroad. We have already begun working towards this goal, starting with neighbouring countries. Ultimately, we aim to enter the markets of Europe and America, branding our products as "Made in Bangladesh".

We conduct over 70 TESTS BEFORE DELIVERY

TAHASINUL HAQUE

Chief Business Officer, Walton Refrigerator

Walton has one of the largest Research & Innovation centres in this industry, with over 800 highly talented and experienced engineers focused on reliability. Over time, we continuously update the design and features of our refrigerators to align with technological advancements and the evolving needs and preferences of customers in both domestic and international markets. We ensure over 70 tests before delivering a single product.

We develop products tailored to the weather patterns and consumer behaviours of our country. This commitment is evident in the innovative features we incorporate into our products. For instance, our wide range of offerings includes features such as wide voltage range support and overvoltage protection technology, catering to the specific needs of our customers. Furthermore, our Research and Innovation (R&I) division is dedicated to continuous research aimed at enhancing the energy efficiency of our products.

We manufacture products according to the standards of Europe and America, making them suitable for developed countries worldwide. As a result, we have successfully exported to more than 40 countries.

Producing energy-efficient and environmentally friendly refrigerators is our top priority. By including eco-friendly design, adopting foaming technology, and using R600a refrigerant, Walton refrigerators use MSO Plus (Matrix Seeped Optimization) inverter technology, which saves up to 75% electricity. This technology, based on the Artificial Intelligence of Things (AIoT), automatically ensures the highest internal cooling performance of the refrigerator at the lowest electricity cost according to the outside temperature. Walton is the first in Bangladesh to manufacture and market refrigerators with a 5-star energy rating from BSTI.

Walton has introduced AIoT refrigerators to Bangladeshi consumers, enabling users to control their appliances remotely via smartphones, providing convenience and flexibility from anywhere in the world. Our cloud-based monitoring system enhances the consumer experience.

DID YOU KNOW?

ANCIENT ICEHOUSES OF PERSIA

In 400 BC, Persia's Dasht-e Lut desert birthed the Yakhchal, a precursor to modern icehouses. Despite the scorching heat, this massive stone marvel kept its interior cool, with a straw-covered pit forming ice for crop preservation.

WARMEST PART OF THE FRIDGE

The warmest spot in a fridge is its door, while the coldest is typically at the bottom shelf towards the back.

FROM REFRIGA TO REFRIGERATOR

'Refrigerator' stems from the Latin 'refriga', meaning "to make cool", aptly reflecting its primary function.

INTRODUCTION OF FREEZER

Originally, refrigerators only had one compartment for storing food. Freezer compartments were later introduced in the 1940s, providing a dedicated space for frozen items.

MOST EXPENSIVE FRIDGE

Meneghini's 'La Cambusa', an Italian luxury fridge, tops the market at over $41,500, boasting features like brass handles, a steam oven, and a Miele coffee system.

EINSTEIN'S FRIDGE BREAKTHROUGH

Albert Einstein and Hungarian Physicist Leo Szilard collaborated in the 1930s to advance refrigerator technology. Their innovation eliminated mechanical pumps, opting for an electromagnetic field to compress refrigerant gas, a breakthrough in fridge engineering.

Intelligent Cooling

Smart Features in Today's Refrigerators

TAZRI MARWA AHMED

In today's world, a refrigerator is more than just a household necessity—it's a hub of innovation. Like other cutting-edge electronics, modern fridges in Bangladesh are now equipped with some smart features that elevate comfort, convenience, and energy efficiency to new heights. Thanks to AI (Artificial Intelligence) and IT (Information Technology) advancements, these smart fridges are designed to serve you seamlessly for years to come.

Join us as we explore how to make the perfect fridge purchase this Eid and beyond and discover the world of smart fridges and the remarkable features they offer to transform your kitchen experience.

One of the latest smart features incorporated into refrigerators called the intelligent Inverter Technology has been adopted by all renowned electronic companies such as Gree, Jamuna, Minister Hi-Tech, Transcom, Walton, and more.

This technology employs a sophisticated process to regulate the refrigerator's speed, ensuring optimal energy efficiency and precise temperature control. By adjusting the compressor speed in response to cooling demands, this technology maintains a constant temperature, reduces energy consumption, and operates more quietly.

Smart features enable users to further minimize energy use by tailoring consumption to their needs, resulting in significant energy savings and longer-lasting freshness for stored food.

Moreover, refrigerator manufacturers have incorporated the environmentally friendly R-600 refrigerant gas in their products, showcasing their commitment to eco-friendliness. This gas boasts zero Ozone Depletion Potential and reduced toxicity, particularly in compressors. This particular eco-friendly attribute underscores the industry's dedication to sustainable practices.

GREE

ACTIVE CARBON DEODORIZER

Different foods stored in the fridge have different smells and flavors. The Active Carbon Deodorizer feature prevents different food odors from blending. It diffuses bacteria that cause smells to mix, keeping food fresh and odor-free for longer.

GARDEN FRESH TECHNOLOGY (VITAMIN FRESH FEATURE)

This feature integrated into the refrigerators keeps vegetables fresh for up to 15-16 days. Typically, veggies wilt within 2-3 days after being placed in the fridge, but Garden Fresh Technology maintains their freshness, ensuring they stay green and crisp. This particular feature is also considered a 'green feature' in refrigerators.

HUMIDITY CONTROLLER MODE

According to Md. Julhak Hossain, National Sales Manager at Electromart Ltd., Gree's refrigerators include a Humidity Controller Mode in the vegetable box. Unlike many other fridges, this feature allows you to adjust the humidity, keeping veggies at the optimal temperature and extending their freshness.

DOOR ALARM

The Door Alarm feature ensures the fridge is properly closed. If the door is left ajar, the alarm will sound, alerting you to close it and preventing the loss of cool air and potential spoilage of food.

One of the latest smart features incorporated into refrigerators called the intelligent Inverter Technology has been adopted by all renowned electronic companies such as Gree, Jamuna, Minister Hi-Tech, Transcom, Walton, and more.

JAMUNA

SMART MUSIC SYSTEM INSIDE (BUILT-IN SPEAKERS)

"Our refrigerators come with a built-in music system that allows you to enjoy your favorite tunes directly from the fridge. Music can be easily played through Bluetooth, enabling a seamless connection with your smartphone or other Bluetooth-enabled devices," said Salim Ullah Salim, Director of Marketing at Jamuna Electronics and Automobiles Ltd.

TOUCH SCREEN CONTROL

Jamuna refrigerators feature touchscreen controls that allow you to easily adjust the temperature settings with a simple touch. This user-friendly interface provides precise control over the cooling environment, ensuring your food stays at the optimal temperature.

APPS CONTROL

The Tuya Smart app, available on the Google Play Store, allows you to control your refrigerator remotely using your Android mobile device. With the help of this app, you can adjust settings, monitor performance, and receive notifications for optimal convenience and efficiency.

MINISTER HI-TECH

BUILT-IN STABILIZER

According to K M G Kibria, Head of Brand and Communication at Minister - Myone Group, Minister was the company that introduced built-in stabilizers inside refrigerators, which is a key smart feature. Previously, users would have to buy stabilizers separately for their fridges, resulting in more hassle.

NANO HEALTH CARE TECHNOLOGY

The Nano Healthcare technology keeps food fresh and nutrient-rich. Every smart fridge currently usually has a NANO Healthcare sticker on it.

"Minister has plans to specifically integrate the Voice Control Mode and smartphone app functionality into future fridge models and is working on them at present, to enhance user experience and become smarter in terms of technology," said K M G Kibria, Head of Brand and Communication at Minister - Myone Group.

TRANSCOM

ECO MONITORING SENSOR

This sensor in the fridge detects whether someone is near the refrigerator and automatically activates or deactivates the energy-saving mode accordingly.

INVERTER X DUAL FAN TECHNOLOGY

Separate cooling fans for both fridge and freezer parts cool separately as per the requirement of each compartment, ensuring energy saving and powerful cooling. The inverter can operate the compressor as per the required cooling demand.

FROST-RECYCLE COOLING SYSTEM

"The Frost-Recycle Cooling System operates when the compressor is in sleep mode, recycling the chilled air produced from the evaporator's frost and distributing it to all compartments. This process not only maintains a consistent cooling effect but also contributes to energy savings," said Saikat Azad, Category Head at Transcom Electronics Ltd.

OTHERS

All components in the Transcom refrigerators are fully free from chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) and hydrofluorocarbons (HFCs), ensuring a sustainable and eco-conscious choice for consumers.

WALTON

METAL & DUO COOLING

Metal Cooling ensures balanced cooling among food preserved in the refrigerator while efficiently retaining the temperature inside the refrigerator. The Duo Cooling+ technology is an innovative way to resist the blending of smells between cabinets by using independent cooling circuits for each cabinet.

E-SAVE MODE

The E-Save mode allows for maintaining the required temperature for the safe preservation of foods while saving a significant amount of energy in Walton refrigerators.

TURBOCOOL MODE

"We conducted extensive research on the requirements of our customers and their usage patterns, and the TURBOCOOL Mode is one of the outcomes of that. This mode accelerates the cooling speed of the refrigerator and allows it to achieve the set temperature in a very short time," said Tahasinul Haq, Chief Business Officer at Walton Refrigerator.

DIGITAL DISPLAY

Walton's Digital Display feature enhances user experience by allowing them to see and set the precise temperature level they desire with only a mild touch. It also consists of features like a child lock and a smart alarm system that activates when the door is kept open for too long. The child lock in it can be activated or deactivated by pressing it for 3 seconds.

WIFI-CONNECTIVITY

The innovative feature is a combination of enhancement of user experience and safe operation of the appliance. It allows the user to monitor, adjust, and control the refrigerator through an app even if they are miles away from home.

OTHERS

In some of Walton's flagship models, multiple modes and features have been implemented, going up to several as 8 - for the users' convenience. To name a couple of them -- the Ultra Fresh Mode allows users to convert the frozen food compartment to a refrigerator cabinet, while the Holiday or Vacation Mode allows users to take a vacation away from home, turning the refrigerator part off while the frozen food compartment remains operational.

When purchasing a refrigerator for your home, it's important to consider several factors to ensure long-lasting satisfaction and a smooth buying process. Consider the fridge's size, capacity, style, energy efficiency, and warranty besides looking into smart features. It's also wise to invest in a high-quality refrigerator, even if it means spending more initially, to avoid the hassle of frequent replacements.

Refrigerator MAINTENANCE

A must for a stress-free Eid-Ul-Adha

Maintaining a clean fridge is crucial for preserving the freshness of your food, preventing the buildup of germs that can cross-contaminate food, and avoiding unsightly mold and messes. As Eid-Ul-Adha approaches, follow these straightforward steps to ensure your refrigerator is clean and ready for a healthy and stress-free celebration.

When preparing for Eid-Ul-Adha, ensuring your refrigerator is in top condition is crucial. An efficient refrigerator is essential for storing meat and delicious food, making it a key element of your celebration. Keeping your fridge in optimal health is vital to maintaining the freshness and nutritional value of your food. Here are some tips to maintain your refrigerator and ensure its efficiency, longevity, and ability to keep your food fresh.

REGULAR CLEANING

It's important to clean your refrigerator monthly to prevent ice build-up, which can reduce the available space and hinder the cooling process. Avoid using harsh chemicals, and instead, opt for soft, cotton cloths soaked in clean water for cleaning the interior. Regular cleaning also helps in maintaining hygiene and preventing food contamination.

RESTING PERIOD AFTER MOVING

When you move your refrigerator, whether to a new house or another room, it's crucial to let it rest before reconnecting to power. After moving, allow the refrigerator to rest for at least three hours; for new purchases, wait for six hours. This resting period allows the internal gases to settle, ensuring efficient cooling when restarted.

POSITIONING AND VENTILATION

Place your refrigerator at least one foot away from the wall to allow proper air circulation. Avoid locations with high humidity or restricted airflow, especially during the rainy season, to prevent sweating and water droplets from forming on the fridge. "To avoid overheating, make sure the refrigerator is not placed under direct sunlight or close to heat sources," adds Salim Ullah Salim, Director, Marketing, Jamuna Electronics and Automobiles Ltd.

ANNUAL MAINTENANCE

Schedule an annual maintenance check with a professional technician. A thorough inspection and tune-up can help in identifying potential issues early and keep your refrigerator running efficiently. Most of the country's renowned companies such as Walton, Transcom, Minister etc. offer great after-sales services which can make this task easier. "We have 300+ service centers all over Bangladesh with dedicated employees who are ever-ready to extend their helping hands to our customers," says K M G Kibria Sohel, Head of Brand and Communication, Minister - Myone Group.

CLEAN THE CONDENSER COILS

The condenser coils, located at the back or bottom of your refrigerator, are responsible for dissipating heat. Over time, these coils can become clogged with dust and debris, reducing the efficiency of your fridge. Use a condenser coil brush or vacuum attachment to clean the coils every six months to a year.

CHECK THE DOOR SEALS

Ensuring a tight seal or gas casket around your refrigerator door is crucial for maintaining optimal temperature and preventing cool air from escaping. "Make sure the gasket is properly aligned, check for damage, and clean it on a regular basis using a mild soap and water solution. If the problem is severe, you might need to think about changing the gasket to keep the seal working well and saving energy," shares Salim Ullah from Jamuna Electronics and Automobiles Ltd.

AVOID OVERLOADING

Do not overload your refrigerator as it can obstruct air circulation, making it difficult for the fridge to maintain the set temperature. Store food in a way that allows air to circulate freely, ensuring even cooling throughout.

PROPER ORGANIZATION

Store food in appropriate compartments according to their type. "Storing foods without a box or container may cause loss of moisture and taste of food. So, it's always the best practice to keep foods in closed containers," shares Tahasinul Haque, Chief Business Officer, Walton Refrigerator.

TEMPERATURE SETTINGS

Set the refrigerator temperature between 2 to 5 degrees Celsius and the deep freezer between -18 to -24 degrees Celsius to keep your food fresh. Regularly check and adjust these settings, especially during summer and winter, to maintain optimal performance.

AVOID FREQUENT DOOR OPENING

Minimize the frequency of opening the refrigerator door to prevent warm air from entering, which can raise the internal temperature and cause condensation. Ensure the door seals properly to maintain the set temperature.

COOLING DOWN FOOD

Allow hot food to cool to room temperature before placing it in the refrigerator. This practice helps in maintaining the internal temperature and reduces the refrigerator's workload, saving energy.

ODOR PREVENTION

Regular cleaning and using odor filters can prevent bad smells. Ensure that any spoiled food is promptly removed to prevent odors from spreading. "Use lukewarm water with lemon drops to remove any bad odors," shares Md. Julhak Hossain, National Sales Manager, Electromart Ltd.

BLOCKED DRAIN LINES

Food residues can occasionally block drain lines, leading to water leakage inside the refrigerator. Regularly check and clean the drain hole to prevent such issues.

By following these guidelines, you can ensure that your refrigerator runs efficiently, keeps your food fresh, and has a longer lifespan. Regular maintenance, proper usage, and careful storage practices are key to optimal refrigerator performance.

HOW TO CLEAN Your Refrigerator

EMPTY THE FRIDGE:
Start by unplugging the refrigerator to avoid electric damages and remove all food items from your fridge. Dispose of any expired or spoiled items to make sure you're only keeping fresh food.

CLEAN SHELVES AND DRAWERS:
Remove all removable parts, such as shelves and drawers. Soak them in warm, soapy water to loosen any grime and make cleaning easier. Scrub the soaked shelves and drawers with a sponge or cloth. Rinse them thoroughly and ensure they are completely dry before reinserting them into the fridge.

CLEAN THE INTERIOR:
Use a mixture of baking soda and water (2 tablespoons of baking soda to 1 quart of water) to wipe down the interior. Focus on corners and crevices for a thorough clean.

WIPE DOWN DOORS AND GASKETS:
Clean the door seals, or gaskets, with warm soapy water to remove any buildup. Wipe the exterior doors with a mild cleaning solution for a polished look.

REPLACE SHELVES AND DRAWERS:
Once dry, replace all the shelves and drawers back into the fridge. Ensure they are securely positioned and properly arranged.

DISINFECT AND DRY:
Mix equal parts water and white vinegar in a spray bottle and spray the interior and exterior of the refrigerator. Allow it to sit for 10-15 minutes to disinfect and deodorize before thoroughly wiping with a microfiber cloth.

ORGANIZE AND RETURN FOOD ITEMS:
Return the food to the fridge, using containers to organize and keep similar items together. This helps maintain order and makes items easier to find.

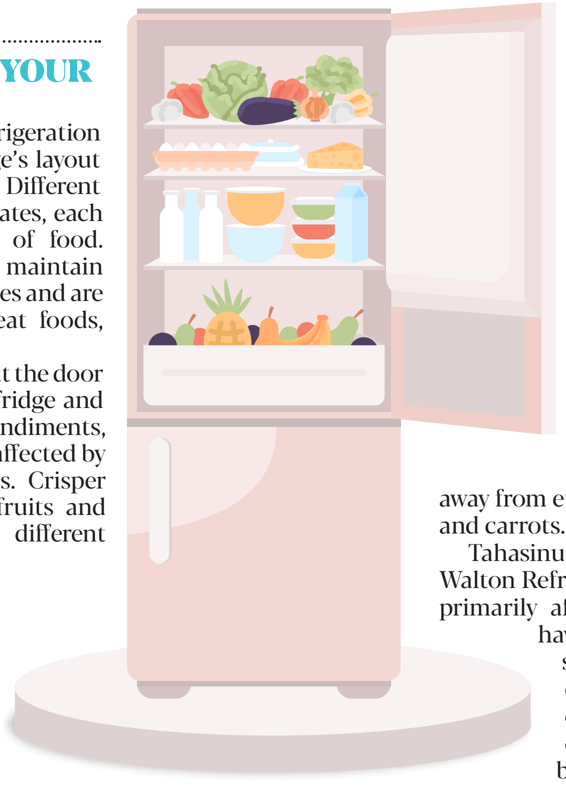
KEEPINGITFRESH

Healthy and effective food preservation in the refrigerator

Imagine returning home after a relaxing weekend getaway, expecting to face the usual post-vacation blues. You open your fridge to find that the produce and leftovers you stored before leaving are still in peak condition, vibrant and fresh as if bought yesterday. Surprisingly, this isn't just a happy coincidence but the result of employing the right techniques for preserving food in your refrigerator. Effective fridge management extends the shelf life of your groceries and ensures they retain their nutritional value and taste.

AYMAN ANIKA



UNDERSTANDING YOUR FRIDGE'S LAYOUT

The first step to effective refrigeration is understanding your fridge's layout and temperature zones. Different sections have different climates, each suitable for various types of food. For example, upper shelves maintain more consistent temperatures and are ideal for drinks, ready-to-eat foods, and herbs.

It is important to note that the door is the warmest part of the fridge and should be reserved for condiments, juices, and other items less affected by slight temperature changes. Crisper drawers are designed for fruits and vegetables and can have different humidity settings.

PROPER AIR CIRCULATION

Good air circulation is vital. Try to avoid overpacking, as overcrowded shelves can block airflow, leading to uneven cooling and increased temperatures, which can affect the food's shelf life. A well-organised fridge not only ensures better air distribution but also helps you keep track of what you have, reducing the chance of overbuying and wastage.

In this regard, Salim Ullah Salim, Director of Marketing at Jamuna Electronics and Automobiles Ltd, adds, "We use food-grade virgin plastic material instead of silicone, which helps keep food fresh. Our refrigerators incorporate Nano Health Care technology to maintain a hygienic environment."

PROPER FOOD PREPARATION

How you prepare your food before storing it can impact its shelf life. Saikat Azad, Category Head - TD Category at Transcom Electronics Ltd., informs, "Our models are equipped with state-of-the-art technology such as the Vacuum Sealed Compartment, Aero-care Vege Compartment, and Moisture-Guard Vegetable Compartment. Each feature is meticulously crafted to maintain optimal conditions within the fridge, ensuring your groceries remain fresh and nutritious for longer periods."

For long-term storage, blanch vegetables by briefly boiling them and then plunging them into ice water. This method kills bacteria and preserves color and texture. Moreover, portion out large quantities of food before storing. This reduces the need to open and close containers frequently, which can lead to contamination and spoilage.

SPECIAL CONSIDERATIONS FOR FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

Handling produce can be tricky due to their diverse storage needs. For example, some fruits, like apples, emit ethylene gas that speeds up ripening in nearby produce. Keep them away from ethylene-sensitive items like lettuce and carrots.

Tahasinul Haque, Chief Business Officer at Walton Refrigerator, highlights that humidity primarily affects fruits and vegetables. "We have included humidity controller sliders in some of our models on the vegetable box cover that can be adjusted based on the contents. Other models feature built-in design elements to prevent excessive moisture accumulation or the drying out of vegetables," he says.

Additionally, specially designed bags for vegetables and fruits help regulate air exposure, extending shelf life. Some items, like potatoes, onions, and tomatoes, fare better outside the fridge, as cold temperatures can change their texture and flavor.

REGULAR MAINTENANCE

Keeping your refrigerator clean and functioning optimally is crucial for maintaining the freshness and safety of your food. Begin by removing all items, which allows you to clean all surfaces thoroughly and check for expired or spoiled foods.

Wipe down shelves and drawers with a mild disinfectant and promptly address spills to prevent bacteria and mold growth. Regularly inspect all food items for signs of spoilage and discard anything that is expired or unsafe to eat.

Mastering your refrigerator's use can dramatically improve how long your food lasts and how nutritious and tasty it remains. By fine-tuning your storage practices – from correct placement to cleanliness and proper food wrapping – you can turn your fridge into a tool of culinary preservation, ensuring that every time you reach for a bite, it's as fresh and healthy as possible.

THEHEARTOF THE HOME

How refrigerators have transformed our daily living experience

NAHALY NAFISA KHAN

Over the last few decades, refrigerators have transcended mere convenience to become an integral part of daily life in Bangladesh. From urban dwellings to remote rural areas, their affordability has ushered them into homes across the country.

Yet, their significance extends beyond their price tag. Refrigerators have emerged as the beating heart of the home, offering not just chilled beverages, but also a promise of convenience, freshness, and food safety.

Indeed, the refrigerator has woven itself seamlessly into the fabric of Bangladeshi life, touching every aspect of daily existence and enhancing our quality of life in ways both subtle and profound. It is a testament to the transformative power of innovation, and a silent yet indispensable companion in our homes, shaping our routines and rituals with every cool breath it exhales.

COOKING MADE EASY!

Imagine coming home after a long day of work and commuting. Cooking your dinner from scratch feels like the biggest burden. This is where a refrigerator has become our everyday companion. With a fridge, our families can buy more groceries for longer periods, store leftovers from meals, and reduce the number of shopping trips.

TRANSFORMING WOMEN'S LIVES

Refrigerators have also helped shape and transform traditional gender roles. A new Université de Montréal study, titled "Household Technology: Was it the Engine of Liberation?", reveals that modern appliances such as washing machines and refrigerators had a profound impact on 20th-century society. Plug-in conveniences transformed women's lives and enabled them to enter the workforce, says Professor Emanuela Cardia from the Department of Economics of the University. Bangladeshi women have similarly reaped the benefits of refrigerator technology.

> A new Université de Montréal study, titled "Household Technology: Was it the Engine of Liberation?", reveals that modern appliances such as washing machines and refrigerators had a profound impact on 20th-century society.

PREVENTING FOOD SPOILAGE

In a place like Bangladesh, where humidity levels are high and temperatures sometimes reach 40 degrees, food spoilage poses a critical issue. The solution came in the form of refrigerators, which help prolong the life of perishable items such as vegetables, fruits, meat, and dairy products. This not only limits food waste but also ensures a steady supply of fresh food.

Additionally, families can now purchase food in bulk at cheaper prices. Refrigerators have also made storing seasonal fruits and vegetables much easier. Thanks to them, some seasonal produce is now available throughout the year, whereas previously it would only be available during certain seasons.

PRESERVING HEALTH AND HAPPINESS

Beyond just keeping food cold, the refrigerator has a profound impact on our health. Fresh produce, dairy, and proteins are kept safe to consume, preserving not just food but also our well-being. With the fridge, we can plan balanced meals that nourish our bodies and keep our immune systems strong.

FEASTS AND FUNCTIONS

As a nation that is always celebrating something, whether it's the countless Eid invitations or the occasional family functions, all food-related planning has been made easier with refrigerators. We can now cook some dishes, mostly desserts, ahead of the actual event and store them in the fridge. We now have the option to store the leftovers from these hefty feasts to save a few days of cooking as well. During Eid-ul-Adha, fridges serve us tremendously in storing the meat for later use or distribution.

KEEPER OF PRECIOUS MEMORIES

A fridge is often the hub of a home, where family members congregate multiple times a day. In a metaphorical sense, fridges are also a keeper of our fondest family memories that get passed on from one generation to the other.

The front is often adorned with children's artwork, magnets from family vacations, and schedules of busy lives. Each time we reach for something inside, we're greeted by a collage of family moments and milestones. It's a gallery of our lives, ever-changing and always growing.

It's amazing how quickly an object can become like family. Indeed, there isn't a day that goes by when we don't need a fridge.

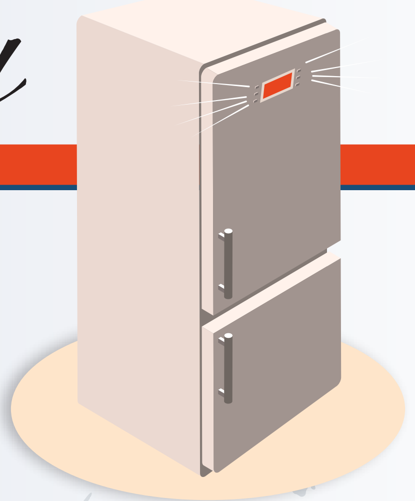
A Journey Through REFRIGERATOR history

ZUBIAN KARIM THAKUR



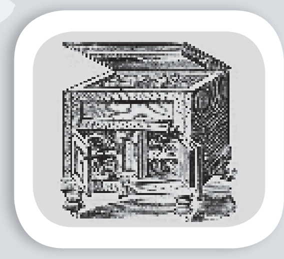
BEFORE THE 1800s

Before mechanical home refrigeration systems became common, people relied on natural underground storage options, such as cold cellars, for refrigeration.

1748

In 1748, Scottish professor and physician William Cullen pioneered one of the earliest forms of artificial refrigeration. While he didn't put his technique into practical use, he demonstrated how rapidly evaporating a liquid into gas could create a cooling effect.

1802

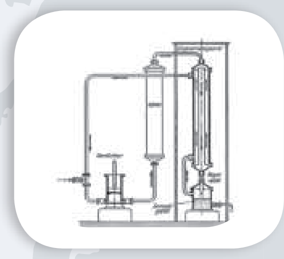


American farmer and cabinetmaker Thomas Moore invented the icebox which is essentially a non-mechanical design consisting of insulated metal or wooden cabinets with a compartment for a big block of ice. Those ice blocks were delivered straight to households along with their ice boxes.

1834

Jacob Perkins, also known as the 'Father of the Refrigerator' invents the first vapor compression system for refrigerators.

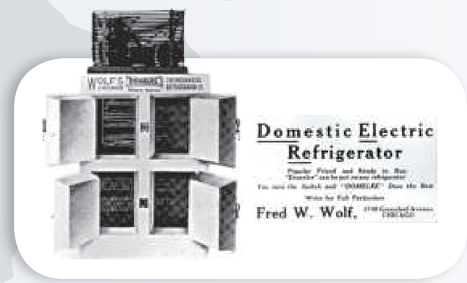
1876



Carl von Linde patents a revolutionary new process for liquefying gases used in artificial refrigeration.

1913

Fred W. Wolf invents the first home electric refrigerator.



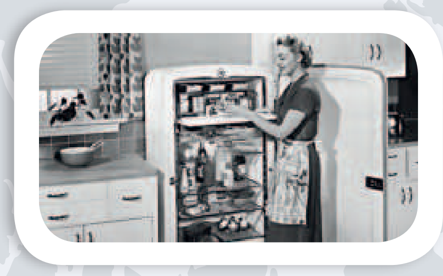
1918

William C. Durant begins mass-producing the first home refrigerator with a self-contained compressor. The initial price of a household refrigeration unit ranged from $500 to $1,000, or around $6,575 to $13,150 in modern currency. Thus, during the early years of its use, household refrigerators were seen as a luxury items.

1927

General Electric introduced the "Monitor-Top" refrigerator, priced at $525, featuring the first all-steel cabinet, designed by Christian Steenstrup.

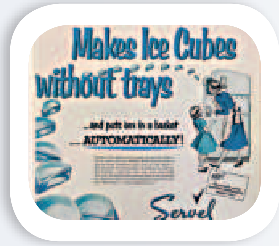
1944



85% of American households owned a refrigerator by 1944. Consumers began using their refrigerators' cold compartments to store frozen food. This era also marked the mass adoption of refrigerators.

1953

Servel Company was an American manufacturer of heating and cooling appliances, who were the first to introduce automatic ice makers.



Makes Ice Cubes without trays
...and puts ice in a basket AUTOMATICALLY!
Servel

1969

General Electric introduced the first through-the-door ice and water dispenser in 1969 in a custom model.

2000

LG introduced the first smart refrigerator, wowing their customers with its Internet connectivity. Nowadays, refrigerator companies continue to modernize fridge designs by adding sleek features such as LEDs, touch-sensitive commands, and smart features that allow users to control their fridge with their phones.

POST 2000

With the new generation, fridges are integrating Artificial Intelligence (AI) into their upcoming models. This, in turn, enhances the service provided by the fridge and improves users' experience. AI implementation in fridges is capable of identifying different food items through AI-image software and providing recipes based on those items.

IMPORT DUTY CUT FOR LDC GRADUATION

Long way to go for readiness

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

The government has proposed removing and reducing import duties and supplementary duties on 282 products in fiscal year 2024-25 as it continues its efforts to prepare the nation for its graduation out of the Least Developed Country grouping.

Experts, however, say the moves are inadequate and the government is leaving a lot to do before the country graduates in 2026.

In the current fiscal year, it withdrew import duties on 191 products and supplementary duties on 234 products.

Next year, it wants to withdraw supplementary duties on 19 more products and reduce supplementary duties on 172 and withdrawal duties on 91 others.

Once Bangladesh graduates in November 2026, it may lose yearly $8 billion worth of exports to erosion of trade preferences.

Mohammad Abdur Razzaque, chairman of Research and Policy Integration for Development (RAPID), said the measures for dealing with the post-graduation challenges were inadequate.

He said the government was cutting supplementary duties, regulatory duties and has recommended further duty cuts on a few products and their number was not big.

Razzaque, however, said the government was not withdrawing or reducing customs duties.

Since Bangladesh's average customs duty is one of the highest in the world, more than 28 percent, many major trading partners would feel discouraged to sign a free-trade agreement with the

An Awami League leader of Jhenidah met one of the killers of lawmaker Anwarul Azim Anar to learn about the details of the abduction and murder, police said.

Kazi Kamal Ahmed Babu, the relief and social welfare affairs secretary of Jhenidah AL, on May 17 met with Amanullah inside a vehicle by Dhaka-Bhanga expressway in Faridpur and viewed photos of the crime scene, and they talked about how much money had changed hands over the assassination.

This was mentioned in a report on the progress of the investigation police submitted to a Dhaka court yesterday.

After realising her five-year-old child was raped by her neighbour in Bagerhat's Brahmankathi area, a mother called the National Emergency Helpline-999 at March 3 noon.

Sub-inspector Mehedi Hasan Mamun received the call and later directed the local police to take immediate lawful actions.

Soon enough, a police team went to the spot and arrested 40-year-old Labu Sheikh on charges of rape.

Since its launch on December 12, 2017, the helpline has gained nationwide popularity for emergency help in cases of accidents, child marriage, fire incidents, trafficking and violence. It also gets calls for help in recovering lost items and rescuing wild animals.

So far, it succeeded in preventing 27,409 child marriages till February this year.

According to the helpline's database, it received around 17,52,826 emergency calls till April 30 this year. Through those calls, people sought assistance from police, firefighters and ambulance services.

In 2018, it received only 49,719 calls for emergency services.

However, within a year, the number of calls rose to 1,34,113, and in 2020, it hit 2,31,205. Since then, it has kept going up.

In the first quarter of this year, the helpline already received 1,82,226 calls.

On March 24 this year, the helpline got a call from Patuakhali to recover a fishing cat stuck in the locality. The caller requested immediate rescue so that people do not get the chance to harm the animal.

On information, local police rushed there, rescued the cat and then handed it over to the forest department.

Close-circuit television camera footage revealed details of an on-duty police constable killing another cop near the Palestinian embassy in the capital's Baridhara Saturday night.

The footage shows Constable Kawsar Ahmed, 41, and his colleague Monirul, 27, engaging in an altercation. At one stage, Monirul appears to show Kawsar a duty notebook. Almost instantly, Kawsar is seen shooting Monirul.

Monirul immediately fell on the road from the pavement. Then Kawsar was seen firing several more shots, almost at point-blank.

Kawsar did not try to flee. At first, he did not allow anyone to get close to

Modi sworn in as India PM for third term

Faces coalition challenges; top ministers in previous govt also sworn in

OUR CORRESPONDENT, New Delhi

Narendra Modi was yesterday sworn in as India's prime minister for a record-equalling third consecutive term. He will lead the 71-member BJP-led National Democratic Alliance (NDA) government.

President Droupadi Murmu administered the oath of office to Modi at a grand ceremony at the Rashtrapati Bhavan in New Delhi.

The event was attended by an estimated 8,000 dignitaries, including Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, accompanied by her daughter Saima Wazed, and other top leaders of seven South Asian countries, Bollywood star Shah Rukh Khan and billionaire industrialists Gautam Adani and Mukesh Ambani.

Modi, 73, is only the second person after India's independence leader Jawaharlal Nehru to serve a third straight term as the prime minister.

Main opposition Congress party President Mallikarjun Kharge was present at the ceremony, but its key INDIA bloc constituent Trinamool Congress stayed away from the event.

Modi secured his third term in elections that concluded on June 1 with the support of 14 regional parties in his BJP-led alliance.

Benazir's family skips ACC quizzing

Commission reschedules it for June 24

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission has rescheduled the interrogation of former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed's wife Jissan Mirza and two daughters in connection with allegations of amassing wealth illegally.

The new date is June 24 after the trio sought 15 days' time to appear before the commission, said ACC Public Relations Officer Akhtarul Islam.

They were supposed to appear yesterday, but the interrogation could not happen as they did not show up, he said, adding that they had written to the ACC seeking time.

ACC lawyer Khurshid Alam Khan told The Daily Star that Benazir's family sought 15 days for appearing before the commission.

Ex-army chief Aziz's 2 brothers to face EC probe

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR

The Election Commission is going to investigate the allegations that the two brothers of former army chief General (retd) Aziz Ahmed obtained national identity cards "using false information".

The commission's NID wing yesterday got approval to form a three-member committee to see how Haris Ahmed and Tofael Ahmed, who goes by the alias Joseph, got NID cards using false information.

Anisur Rahman, an election commissioner, yesterday confirmed the development.

Haris

The US on May 21 imposed sanctions on Aziz Ahmed and his immediate family members for what it said was his involvement in significant corruption.

Aziz was the chief of army staff between June 2018 and June 2021. He led Border Guard Bangladesh between 2012 and 2016.

Aziz is the eldest of five brothers. His brothers Tofael, Haris and Anis Ahmed hogged headlines during the 1990s and the 2000s for murder, extortion, and possession of illegal firearms.

LETTERPRESS PRINTING near death of a trade

RBR

The sound of printing in a letterpress machine has a certain rhythm to it. The ink, which is evenly spread on the platen or the flat platform of the press; the wheels running while copies of an image are produced by repeated direct impression -- all have a nostalgic pull to this near obsolete technology.

Halim Hossain's "Ekota Letter Press" on the dark, dingy ground floor of Banija Bitan Super Market in Nilkhet, is probably one of the last few letterpress machines in operation.

Hossain has been in the printing business since 1989. He initially worked in a similar press at Lalbagh. When he decided to start his own business, the machine he works with now was bought some 20 years ago from a second-hand dealer with an investment of Tk 70,000.

In the dimly lit small room that houses the old letterpress, there is hardly any space to manoeuvre and Hossain is the only man working. He learned all the nuances of the printing trade when he came to the capital as a teen. Today, he is so skilled that the printer even does all his maintaining and repairing work himself!

"The business of letterpress printing was booming up until there came a point where skilled printers like myself became redundant and were replaced by people -- no matter how unskilled -- who could run automated photographic and offset press," Halim says.

His primary clients were banks and NGOs but the pandemic made him lose big contracts. He could not recover fully.

"I do print money receipts, visiting cards, question papers, and warranty cards but orders are few and far in between. At one point I was printing not only books but also cigarette labels, election posters, and more."

For me letterpress means posters for liberation from the British or the Pakistanis; it means posters of Ekushey February. Right now, Halim needs to be recognised as an artisanal printer because letterpress printing is more of a utilitarian art, trade, or craft.

Such prints do add an old-world charm and people who can afford and lean towards the retro feel can make unique wedding/gaye holud cards; fine handmade, limited-edition books; artists' books; high-end greeting cards and single-sheet publications.

Giving Halim Hossain a few such work orders can keep his old trade going and keep the old machine running.

St Martin's Island cut off from mainland

Multiple trawlers were shot at by criminals from Myanmar

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

All types of water transport have been halted between Saint Martin's Island and Teknaf upazila of Cox's Bazar for the last three days since Friday due to several firing incidents on boats by Myanmar criminals, triggering a food crisis on the island.

Abdur Rashid, president of the Trawler Owners' Association on this route, said multiple trawlers were shot at on Thursday and Friday.

"On Friday, criminals from Myanmar fired at my boat. The crew narrowly escaped unharmed."

He could not confirm whether it was the Border Guard Police of Myanmar or the rebel Arakan Army shooting at them.

The incidents took place at the estuary of the Naf River, and this is the only way to St Martin's Island, he said, adding that the other way would be through the sea, which is rough and perilous.

134 Myanmar troops sent back

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

A total of 134 members of the Border Guard Police (BGP) and the junta of Myanmar who crossed the border and took shelter in Bangladesh to escape the fighting between the junta and the Arakan Army, were sent back to their homeland yesterday.

In exchange, 45 Bangladeshis imprisoned in Myanmar have returned home from the neighbouring country.

Around 12:30pm, Bangladeshi ship Karnaphuli Tug-1 carrying the 134 Myanmar nationals left the BIWTA jetty in Nunyarchhara in Cox's Bazar town.

They would return on a Myanmar Navy ship stationed in Myanmar waters in the Bay of Bengal.

Earlier around 7:00am, they were brought to BIWTA jetty under tight security of BGB in four buses.

Later, around 9:50am, 45 Bangladeshis returned home from Myanmar after serving a long time in prison. The Bangladeshis were brought back by the same Bangladeshi ship from Myanmar Navy ships stationed in Myanmar waters.

Confirming the matter, Cox's Bazar Additional District Magistrate (ADM) Yamin Hossain, said that the process of handing over Myanmar citizens who have taken refuge in Bangladesh and Bangladeshis imprisoned in Myanmar has been completed.

Ex-army chief

Joseph alone was accused in 10 cases filed in connection with extortion and possession of illegal firearms. Joseph was sentenced to death and Haris and Anis to life in prison in a murder case in 2004.

Aziz got media attention after Joseph got clemency in the murder case in 2018 and Haris and Anis in 2019.

Al-Jazeera on February 1, 2021, aired a documentary titled "All the Prime Minister's Men" in which it claimed that Aziz exerted influence to help his three convicted brothers get various contracts.

The army headquarters and the foreign ministry refuted the allegations made by Al-Jazeera, labelling it "false" and "slanderous".

Both Haris and Joseph are now believed to be abroad.

EC sources said several media reported that in Joseph's mother's application for remission of his sentence, she mentioned Abdul Wadud and Renuja Begum as the parents of Joseph.

But Haris took a NID (national ID) card under the name Mohammad Hasan using the names Suleman Sarkar and Rahela Begum as his parents. He also changed his photo in the NID card in 2019. The then army chief General (retd) Aziz Ahmed made the recommendations for changing the photo.

Tofael Ahmed alias Joseph, another brother of Aziz Ahmed, has two NIDs. Tofael had an NID card with names of parents as Abdul Wadud and Renuja Begum and another NID card using his name as Tanvir Ahmed Tanjeel, with names of parents as Suleman Sarkar and Rahela Begum.

According to the National Identity Registration Act-2010, a person can be punished with one year in jail or slapped a fine of Tk 20,000 or both for providing false or distorted information or concealing information to get an NID card.

A person can be sentenced up to seven years in prison or fined up to Tk 1,00,000 for forging an NID card or carrying a forged one knowingly. If any person helps in forging NID cards, he or she will also face the same punishment.

On May 28, the anti-graft body wrote to Benazir, requesting his presence at the ACC headquarters on June 6. Benazir's wife, Jissan Mirza, and their daughters Farheen Rishta Binte Benazir and Tahseen Raisa Binte Benazir were asked to appear on June 9 and make statements regarding the graft allegations.

Benazir also failed to show up for the interrogation on June 6 and sought time. His quizzing was deferred to June 23.

On April 18, the ACC initiated an enquiry into Benazir and his family members in connection with allegation of amassing wealth illegally.

country, he said.

The global average customs tariff hovers around 7.5 percent. India's average is 14 percent, the USA's 2.5 percent, and the EU's 4 percent, said Razzaque.

For instance, Bangladesh is negotiating with Japan for an Economic Partnership Agreement (EPA) to retain the duty-benefits after it graduates. If the EPA goes through, Bangladesh will have to cut duty on 90 percent of the products being considered.

The duty could be gradually cut like over a 10-year period, but it has to be done for a trade deal and the products in question for Bangladesh is nearly 14,000, he said.

The government in its budget said it was trying to sign free-trade agreements with major trading partners like Japan, India, and China to retain duty benefits after it graduates.

But so far, it has signed only a preferential trade agreement (PTA) with Bhutan.

Currently, the customs department fixes a minimum import price on products. Since Bangladesh is in LDC, developed and developing countries do not argue over the matter in the World Trade Organisation.

But after the graduation, the government would not be able to fix the minimum price under the WTO rules.

The government has now decided to gradually abolish the system of minimum import price by 2026.

To prepare for the graduation, the government formed a committee to deal with the challenges. The committee is led by the principal secretary to the prime minister. The committee has seven sub-committees.

Since businesses won't be able to have direct cash subsidies after the country graduates from LDC, the government has come up with some alternatives to improve competitiveness of local exporters.

A senior official at the customs department, requesting anonymity, said the duty cuts were not adequate but the process has started. The process is slow as the government needs to generate revenue and consider the interest of the local industries. So far, duties on more than 400 products have either been cut or have been recommended for cuts.

Mustafizur Rahman, distinguished fellow at the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD), echoed Razzaque.

He said the government has at least used a sub-section in the proposed budget on LDC graduation. In the next budget, a major chapter might be dedicated to the graduation and there might be big challenges to address.

He acknowledged that the government had taken a lot of major measures to make the local business competitive in the global market when Bangladesh graduates.

and tickets inside while traveling to Dhaka on Dhumketu Express from Bangabandhu Bridge East Railway Station.

Once the information reached 999, the call tracker informed the railway police control room and Tangail railway police outpost. A woman named Hazera Begum, 40, found the bag, and informed the police, who then handed it over to Momin.

Inspector Anwar Sattar, spokesperson for the helpline, told The Daily Star, "People now have confidence in 999, and that's why we are getting calls more than ever before. For instance, few would complain about loud noises late at night because they would have to go to a police station. Now anyone can report it just by calling this toll-free number.

"We also have an enquiry feedback section where people can file complaints if they are not satisfied with our service."

He added that so far, they have received 40,59,604 calls in the feedback section. "Based on the validity of the complaints, we take appropriate actions."

6 SERVICES SOUGHT MOST

According to recent data from the helpline, there has been a significant rise in calls across six service categories: sound pollution, fire incidents, medical emergencies, physical violence or fights, violence against women and accidents.

Most of the calls were related to fights over land disputes, money lending and other social feuds, mainly from rural areas.

In 2023 alone, the helpline received 94,135 calls regarding such disputes. In 2022, the number was 73,084. The trend continues with 37,273 such calls already logged in the first quarter of this year.

Medical emergencies and ambulance services follow closely behind, with 30,285 calls recorded in 2023; 27,624 in 2022, and 11,872 calls in the first quarter of this year.

Fire emergencies rank third with 30,160 reported calls in 2023, up from 24,460 the year before. The first quarter of this year received 14,311 such calls.

Sound pollution complaints, especially during festive seasons and wedding celebrations, garnered the fourth-highest volume of calls, totaling 30,021 in 2023 and 20,561 in 2022.

Instances of various forms of violence against women, including dowry-related issues, domestic abuse, sexual or other kinds of harassment, also remain high, with 25,090 calls reported in 2023, reflecting an increase from 20,251 the year before.

The first quarter of this year witnessed 9,287 calls.

Meanwhile, calls to report accidents finished the list with 22,604 reported incidents in 2023 and 22,125 in 2022. The first quarter of this year saw 8,649 accident-related calls.

IMPROVING SERVICES, INCREASING CAPACITY

At present, the 999 helpline has 100 workstations and can receive 120 calls at a time.

"We've already gotten the approval to set up another 100 workstations in Purbachal and received an allocation from the home ministry," Mohammad Tabarak Ullah, additional deputy inspector general of police, also the chief of the national emergency helpline, told The Daily Star.

"We are hopeful about completing the setup within the next fiscal year, and then we will be able to provide services to more people."

Additionally, separate phones were installed in 294 police stations as part of improving services and increasing capacity. "This way, we can reach local police stations without delay. We'll gradually install the phone line in all the 600 police stations across the country."

Tabark Ullah further said the government recently approved 999 as a separate unit of Bangladesh Police with a manpower of 549.

"The public administration ministry already approved the helpline as a separate unit. We now await the final approval from the finance ministry. Once approved, we will have our separate force, place and administration with a deputy inspector general as the chief."

He said the helpline will become more efficient with updated software soon after becoming a separate unit, and will be able to provide up-to-date services to the people.

him. He was later arrested by Gulshan police from the scene.

SM Jahangir Hasan, additional deputy commissioner of police, said, "Kawsar has not disclosed anything yet. He is acting like a mentally distressed person. But we are hoping to learn everything in later interrogations."

"In primary interrogation, we did not find any previous conflict between the two constables. We quizzed Kawsar, who was punctual in his duty as per the record of the last couple of months," said Kh Mahid Uddin, additional commissioner (crime and operations).

"We are yet to ascertain what initiated their altercation," he added.

The police officer said they would be able to know more by interrogating the suspect within a day or two after he settled down mentally.

Asked whether the constable was overworked or not getting leave for the Eid holidays, Mahid Uddin replied in the negative.

"He was not stressed or overworked, as there was no pressure on duty... Besides, our force members now get adequate leaves," he said.

Meanwhile, the victim's elder brother, Mahbubul Haque, also a police constable, filed a case with the Gulshan Police Station.

Kawsar was shown arrested in the case and produced before a Dhaka court, which placed him on a seven-day remand.

Mahbubul told this newspaper, "My brother was very gentle, and had no enmity with anyone."

Monirul got married after he joined the force in 2018. He has a 19-month-old boy.

"I did not know how to console his wife and my parents as they broke down after learning about the incident," he added.

His body is expected to be buried at his family graveyard in Netrakona today.

The incident happened at 11:41pm on Saturday near the Palestine Embassy in Dhaka.

A driver of an embassy vehicle, Sajjad Hossain, was also injured in the shooting and is now at United Hospital.

According to police reports, 22 bullets and 34 bullet casings were recovered from the spot. The shots were fired from Kawsar's service weapon -- an SMT9 sub-machine gun.

Monirul's body bore some 18 bullet wounds (including entry and exit wounds) on his head, chest, and stomach, said sources at Shaheed Suhrawardy Medical College Hospital's morgue.

AL leader Babu

also had a WhatsApp conversation with Amanullah, who goes by the alias Shimul Bhuiyan, around 10:30pm the previous day, said the report by Senior Assistant Commissioner (DB) Mahfuzur Rahman, who is investigating the case.

Police arrested Babu in the capital's Sayedabad area on Saturday, taking the number of arrestees in the case to four. A court yesterday placed him on a 7-day remand.

Babu is also a cousin of Aktaruzzaman, one of the masterminds behind the murder.

Amanullah earlier admitted before a court that he was the coordinator among the people who took part in the killing of the Jhenaidah-4 lawmaker.

A top officer of DB, requesting anonymity, said, "Babu deleted most of the online conversation he had with Aktaruzzaman and Amanullah. We have evidence suggesting that he was involved with the planning of the abduction and murder."

Three other arrestees, Celesty Rahman, Amanullah, and Tanvir Bhuiyan, have made confessional statements and are in jail.

West Bengal CID arrested Jihad Howlader and Siam Hossain.

But Aktaruzzaman, who used to run a gold and narcotics smuggling racket with Azim, is believed to be in the US.

Azim went to Kolkata on May 12 and stayed at his friend Gopal Biswas' house for a night. He left the following day, saying that he would visit a doctor. On May 22, India and Bangladesh police said the lawmaker was murdered.

Meanwhile, the West Bengal CID yesterday recovered bones, suspected to be of the lawmaker, from the bank of a canal in the Kashipur area of South 24 Parganas district.

The recovery was made after CID officers interrogated Siam, who is now on a 14-day remand. Siam was brought to Kolkata after he was arrested in Nepal.

"We have recovered some bones. Prima facie, it appears to be human bones. We are sending them for forensic analysis," said A K Chaturvedi, inspector general of police (IG), West Bengal CID.

"The bones appear to be that of the human rib cage and arms. The skull was yet to be recovered."

West Bengal CID officials said that the spot from where the bones were recovered on the bank of the canal is about 15km away from the New Town apartment where the MP was killed and his body was dismembered.

"We have been searching this area for over two weeks based on the information provided by another accused Jihad Hawaldar, a butcher, arrested on May 23. Siam gave the specific location during interrogation," said another CID officer.

Earlier on May 28, some remains were recovered from a septic tank of the New Town apartment.

DRAIN OF DEATH

How many Saiduls will die before Ctg drains are fixed?

SIFAYET ULLAH

Life throws its fair share of curveballs. Apart from death, there is not much one can consider as inevitable in this world.

But for residents of Chattogram, there's another grim reality -- the ever-present threat of disappearing into the city's open drains.

One such open drain of Chattogram claimed its latest victim on Saturday, a 7-year-old boy named Saidul Islam.

Saidul vanished while playing near an uncovered drain right outside his home at Goshaildanga of Agrabad in the port city.

After a desperate search, his body was recovered yesterday from the Nasir Canal. Locals claimed he fell into the drain.

Saidul's death is just the latest in a string of such tragedies. In the past four years alone, at least 11 people have met their demise in a similar way -- children, university students, even the elderly -- all swallowed by the city's neglected infrastructure.

The Daily Star, on April 3 this year, published a report titled "Deaths in unprotected Ctg drains: Who is next?"

It seems yesterday, we received the answer. It was Saidul.

Nasima Akter, Saidul's speech-impaired mother, sat wailing in front of her house, surrounded by neighbours who tried in vain to console her.

Tears streamed down her face as she couldn't express her grief in words.

"Nasima's entire world revolved around her son," said Soheli Begum, a neighbour.

Saidul's sister, Akhi Akter Mim, said she and her brother live with their mother and grandmother.

DU students protest quota reinstatement

HC verdict to remain effective till July 4

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka University students yesterday staged a protest against a High Court verdict to reinstate a 30 percent quota for the freedom fighters' children in recruitment for first and second class government jobs.

Several hundreds of students, including some alumni, brought out a procession from the university's central library around 11:00am and assembled at the base of the Raju Sculpture, demanding the cancellation of the quota system.

They warned of going for an all-out movement if the quota was not removed by the end of June.

"We demand cancellation of all quotas in government jobs. If the government resumes the quota system, we will go for a tougher movement," Asaduzzaman, a master's student, told The Daily Star.

Moajjam Hossain, a job seeker, said, "The prime minister cancelled quotas in government jobs following our demands for reforming the quota system in 2018. If

Private univs to be allowed to offer PhD

UGC forms committee to draft policy

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Following much debate and discussion, the University Grants Commission (UGC) is planning to allow private universities to introduce PhD programmes.

The university regulatory body has already formed a committee to draft a policy to facilitate the initiative, Prof Muhammed Alamgir, UGC's acting chairman, told The Daily Star.

"The plan is still in the primary stage. The committee has already been assigned to work on it. But to finalise the draft policy, we will discuss it with relevant stakeholders," he added.

According to UGC, currently, only the 56 approved public universities in the country offer PhD programmes, while none of the 114 private universities is permitted to offer the degree.

In recent years, some private universities in the country have shown their qualities in education and research through their placements in the QS World University Rankings.

According to the latest UGC report, private university authorities have been spending a lot in the research sector, as 84 of them allocated an average of Tk 1.53 crore of their budget only for research.

For instance, University of Liberal Arts Bangladesh allocated Tk 96 crore, BRAC University allocated Tk 58.83 crore, Daffodil International University Tk 15 crore, United International University Tk 11 crore, American International University-Bangladesh Tk 10.57 crore, and North South University allocated Tk 8.85 crore on research.

On the other hand, Dhaka University had allocated the highest Tk 15 crore for research among public universities.

In this context, there has been a long-standing demand to introduce PhD programmes at capable private universities.

Monitor gender budget: speakers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A strong monitoring system is needed to evaluate the effectiveness of the gender budget across 44 ministries of the government, in order to eradicate gender inequality, speakers said at a discussion yesterday.

They also stressed that child marriage prevention and female student dropout rate received attention in this year's budget, but needs more investments moving forward.

The remarks were made at an event titled "Investing in Gender Equality: Proposed Budget 2024-25", organised by Bangladesh Mahila Parishad at Dhaka Reporters Unity.

Sharmind Neelormi, professor of Department of Economics at Jahangirnagar University, said the gender budget has acknowledged that girls are falling behind in secondary and higher education. It has identified child marriage, displacement, and poor school sanitation as key reasons. While some ministries have taken steps to address these issues, many challenges still exist.

Bangladesh second in freshwater fish production

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh has risen from third to second place in the world for freshwater fish production, surpassing China, which has now dropped to third. India remains at the top of the list.

This information comes from the "The State of World Fisheries and Aquaculture" report published on Saturday by the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO).

The country held the fifth position consecutively for five times before 2020.

The report, which is released every two years, used data from 2022.

The ranking is based on fish harvested from open waterbodies such as rivers, lakes, and wetlands. However, Bangladesh has dropped from third to fifth place in terms of fish harvested from ponds and other enclosed waterbodies.

In 2023, Bangladesh produced a total of 48 lakh tonnes of fish, including 32 lakh tonnes from fish farming and 13 lakh tonnes from open water bodies. Half of the fish from open water bodies were hilsa, with a total production of 6.5 lakh tonnes of hilsa in 2023.

Dr Md Zulfiqar Ali, director general of Bangladesh Fisheries Research Institute, said the country's efforts to conserve open waterbodies and ban fishing during the hilsa breeding season have led to increased fish production.

BFRI scientists have developed artificial breeding and advanced farming techniques for 40 out of the 261 fish species found in Bangladesh's open waterbodies. These methods are helping increase fish production in ponds, lakes, and rivers.

Meanwhile, Bangladesh is 14th in marine fish production and ninth in crab farming.

Around two crore people in the country are involved in fish farming and related businesses. The per capita fish consumption has risen from 7.5kg in 1990 to 30kg now.

FAO's report shows that Bangladesh produces 13.22 lakh tonnes of freshwater fish, accounting for 11.7 percent of the global total, up from 11 percent in the previous report.

India leads with 18.9 lakh tonnes while China comes after Bangladesh with 11.66 lakh tonnes.

Myanmar, Indonesia, and Uganda are next on the list.

Dengue claims another life

UNB, Dhaka

One more death was reported from dengue in 24 hours till yesterday morning, raising the number of fatalities from the mosquito-borne disease in Bangladesh to 38 this year.

During the period, 25 more patients were hospitalised with viral fever, according to the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS).

Of them, seven patients were hospitalised in Dhaka.

Currently, 141 patients are receiving treatment at several hospitals.

11:00pm yesterday and arrested an accused named Mozammel.

Shakila Soltana, deputy commissioner (port zone) of Chattogram Metropolitan Police (CMP), told reporters that when police arrested the suspect, the ruling party activists interrupted them. At that time, Anwara Upazila Chairman Kazi Mozammel Hoque appeared at the scene. Due to his presence, the activists snatched the suspect from police custody.

The DC said OCs of Anwara and Karnaphuli police stations and some others were injured in the attack. OC Jahir sustained serious injuries to his hand and several parts of his body from the brick attacks.

To control the situation, police fired five to six blank shots, the DC added.

However, the correspondent could not reach Kazi Mozammel for his comments, despite repeated phone calls.

Monitor gender budget

Parishad, said the gender budget is not a separate budget, but part of the overall budget. This year's budget has promised to form a monitoring committee involving civil society to assess the impact of the gender budget in eliminating inequality.

Mahila Parishad President Dr Fauzia Moslem said since 2009, the position of the government and the women's movement has been clarified. Emphasis has been placed on working together in the proposed gender budget. However, if the goals of the women's movement are not consistent with the goals of the gender budget, there will be no expected progress.

100 hectares of arable land waterlogged for 10 years

SAHIDUL ISLAM NIRAB, Jamalpur

For over a decade, nearly 100 hectares of fertile land in Jamalpur municipality have been submerged in water, rendered useless and overgrown with water hyacinths and other aquatic plants.

The root of the problem lies in the gradual disappearance of the Goba and Baniabazar canals, which once served as vital drainage channels. Encroachment upon these canals has significantly reduced their capacity to carry excess water away.

The unchecked filling of the canals has led to a vicious cycle: rainwater cannot be effectively drained, leading to waterlogging that worsens with each monsoon.

Villages like Sheikhervita, Chandra, Bogabait, Monirajpur, Kazirag, Shantinagar, Khupibari, Hatchadra, Dewpara, and Jogirkhupa, once known for their bountiful harvests, now face a bleak agricultural future. The waterlogged land is unsuitable for cultivation, leaving farmers with barren fields and lost income.

The problem worsened after the Roads and Highways Department constructed a bypass road to ease the town's traffic movement between BSCIC intersection and Mirza Azam intersection, said locals.

The bypass road passes through crop lands in an unplanned way instead of being connected with a bridge over the canal, thereby causing waterlogging in the adjacent areas as it is acting as an embankment and preventing excess water from receding through the canal.

Also, a culvert built in Sheikhervita area is unable to drain off receding water from the area as some locals blocked it by filling up with soil to construct structures on the culvert, without permission from the municipality authorities.

"Before the bypass road was constructed, at least some lands were arable and produced crops regularly. Now all lands have turned into enclosed waterbodies," said Delowar Hossain, a local farmer.

Abdul Khalek, a farmer from Monirajpur village, said, "Once I used to cultivate paddy, jute, sugarcane and vegetables in my lands here. Now I can no longer cultivate anything for past 10 years due to waterlogging."

Many others echoed them.

Kamrul Hasan, a resident of Shantinagar area, said, "Every time it rains, knee-deep water enters our houses and inundates the surrounding areas."

Jahangir Salim, president of Poribesh Rokkha Andolon, said, "We urged the municipality mayor to take steps to mitigate the waterlogging problem, but in vain. With most of the culvert being blocked, the whole town may face severe waterlogging in coming monsoon."

Rafiqul Islam, executive engineer of Water Development Board in Jamalpur, said they are planning to send a proposal to the authorities concerned to excavate Goba canal.

Sultan Mahmud, executive engineer of the Department of Public Health Engineering in Jamalpur, could not be reached over phone for his comment.

Zakia Sultana, deputy director of the Department of Agricultural Extension in Jamalpur, said, "If the existing situation cannot be resolved, the around 100-hectare waterlogged lands may be brought under fisheries projects if the landowners show interest."

Faisal Ahmed, assistant engineer of Jamalpur Municipality, said they are now working with a master plan to address waterlogging issues and have submitted a proposal for a Tk 6 crore project.

Jamalpur Mayor Sanowar Hossain Sanu said they are taking steps against illegal encroachers.

Drains of death

On Saturday, around 6:00pm, Saidul left the house. He didn't return. She said she heard from the neighbours that Saidul had fallen into a drain.

This correspondent did not see any slab covering the drain where Saidul fell when visiting the spot yesterday.

Even the canal where Saidul was found was left unguarded.

"Several children have fallen into the canal over the last two years," claimed Mohammed Ali, a local.

Similarly, there are no slabs or retaining walls in numerous drains and canals throughout the port city.

A Chattogram City Corporation survey in 2021 identified 5,527 spots in drains, canals and footpaths as risky.

The situation worsened when the Chattogram Development Authority began renovating the city's drains and canals in 2017.

In that year, Shilbrata Barua, a retired government officer, fell into an open drain while heading to a wedding in Bakalia. His body was found near a canal the next day.

Saleh Ahmed, a vegetable vendor, fell into a canal in the Muradpur area in 2021 and is still missing after nearly three years.

His family, now without its main provider, struggles to make ends meet and remains in grief and despair.

Sadek Ullah Mahin, Saleh Ahmed's only son, described the accident as a tragedy that shattered their dreams and forced him to abandon his studies.

Both CDA and CCC, the main authorities responsible for alleviating public suffering, said they lack funds required to install protective slabs or retaining walls.

However, The Daily Star published a report on May 22 titled "Deadline extends, cost rises, but suffering continues", highlighting how despite four ongoing projects worth Tk 14,389 crore, waterlogging and the nightmare of open drains still persist.

Lt Col Ferdous Ahmed, the project director of the CDA mega project, said the installation of slabs on drains and building retaining walls by the canals was not part of the project. "However, we are constructing retaining walls along many canals on humanitarian grounds."

OC Monjur Quader of Bandar Police Station said locals rescued the body and informed police. "His body has been kept at the morgue for autopsy. The real reason of the death can be confirmed only after an investigation."

About the proposed national budget for the fiscal year 2024-25, he said there are no directions in the budget to address the problems being faced by people.

There is no measure in the budget to reduce inflation and taxes have been imposed on all imported goods and machinery that could have increased production.

Fakhrul said the education system has collapsed as a direct result of politicisation and the biased appointment of teachers based on their allegiance to the ruling party.

In Patuakhali, 312 hectares of betel leaf plantations were damaged, causing total losses of around Tk 6 crore to 3,284 farmers, said Nazrul Islam, deputy director of DAE in Patuakhali.

A list of the affected farmers has been sent to the higher authorities for assistance, he added.

Meanwhile, the price of betel leaves has gone up in the local market by 20 to 25 percent amid a shortage of supply following damages caused by the cyclone, said Asim Sarkar, a wholesale trader of betel leaves in New Market area of Patuakhali.

The cost of one choli (38 pieces) of betel leaves has gone up from Tk 15 to Tk 20 in the retail market as well, he added.

DU students protest quota the quotas are reinstated, a tougher movement will be announced after June 30."

Rakib Al Hasan, a former DU student who also participated in the protest, said, "We strongly protest the new order of quota reinstatement, as it's discriminatory."

A team of representatives of the protesters submitted a memorandum to the Attorney General's office, attaching their demands. They urged the government not to resume the quota system, said Hasnat Abudllah, a representative.

Meanwhile, the Supreme Court yesterday upheld the HC verdict till July 4.

Justice M Enayetur Rahim, chamber judge of the Appellate Division of the SC, sent a petition -- filed by the government challenging the HC judgement -- to its full bench for hearing on the matter on July 4.

Following a writ petition, the HC on June 5 declared illegal the government decision that in 2018 cancelled the 30 percent quota system for the freedom fighters' children in the civil service of the ninth to 13th grades.

On June 4, UGC formed the six-member committee, headed by Prof Bishwajit Chanda, to produce a draft policy on it. The committee also includes other UGC members, officials, and private university teachers.

Talking to The Daily Star, Prof Biswajit, the committee's convener and in-charge of private university division at UGC, said they were told to develop PhD coursework or research-related modules appropriate for different academic disciplines or clusters through a panel of experts.

"We already had internal meetings regarding the matter. Hopefully, soon we'll have official meetings to produce a draft policy on introducing PhD programmes at private universities. Before that, we can't discuss any further," he added.

Only institutions that meet specific standards should be permitted to run these programmes, said UGC sources.

Two cops hurt as AL men snatch accused from custody in Ctg

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

At least 10 people, including two officers-in-charge (OCs), were injured yesterday when a group of ruling party men attacked police personnel and vandalised their vehicles to snatch an accused in a case filed over a factional clash of Awami League in Anwara upazila of Chattogram on Saturday night.

Of the injured, Karnaphuli Police Station OC Jahir Uddin and Anwara Police Station OC Sohel Ahmed received treatment at Chattogram Medical College Hospital.

On Friday, a clash ensued between the followers of former land minister Saifuzzaman Chowdhury Javed and current State Minister for Finance Waseqa Ayesha Khan when the two groups brought out separate processions at the same place, welcoming the FY 2024-25 national budget in Anwara Center.

A case was later filed with Karnaphuli Police Station in connection with the incident.

OC Jahir told The Daily Star that the law enforcers from Karnaphuli and Anwara police stations launched a joint drive in the Chaturi-Chowmuhuni area around Around 44 percent votes were cast in yesterday's upazila parishad elections, said Chief Election Commissioner Kazi Habibul Awal.

"We have got statistics from 235 out of 1,180 polling stations. Around 43.91 percent votes have been cast in these 235 polling stations," he said at the Election Commission secretariat yesterday.

Elections to 19 upazilas were held in the fifth phase yesterday. The first phase of this year's upazila election was held on May 8.

A total of 469 upazilas out of 495 have had elections over the five phases, said the CEC.

"Tenure for some of the remaining 26 upazilas are yet to mature, while elections in a few have been suspended due to court order. We will hold elections to these upazilas on time," he added.

"Six people have been arrested on charges of their involvement with electoral irregularities. Two of them are polling officers," said the CEC.

Four were injured in polling violence, but overall atmosphere was peaceful, he added.

Asked about the turnout, he said, "It is the responsibility of candidates to bring voters to polling stations. We are here to hold the election peacefully and fairly. We emphasised on that," the CEC added.

"Voting was held peacefully. We are happy for that. But

6,000 more doctors to be appointed

Health minister tells JS

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Health Minister Dr Samanta Lal Sen told parliament yesterday that 6,000 more doctors will be appointed to fill vacant posts in different health institutions across the country.

Besides, the proposal for appointing 2,000 doctors in the first phase has already been sent to the Directorate General of Health Services, he said.

The health minister gave this information in a written statement in response to the notice given by multiple MPs in the Jatiya Sangsad.

Awami League MP from Barguna-2, Sultana Nadira, reserved seat MP Parveen Zaman and independent MP Sanowar Hossain gave notice to the health minister regarding the recruitment of manpower in the health complex of their respective constituencies.

Meanwhile, in a written statement, Environment Minister Saber Hossain Chowdhury said the Department of Environment (DoE) conducted 2,338 drives against brick kilns from January 2019 to April this year.

During the drives, DoE filed a total of 4,436 cases and sentenced 98 people to jail for various terms. It also collected Tk 111.50 crore as fine.

JOURNOS SHOULDN'T BE TREATED BADLY AT DMCH

Meanwhile, while talking to reporters at a programme yesterday, the health minister said there should be no discrimination against journalists at Dhaka Medical College Hospital.

On June 4, the DMCH authorities asked its officials and employees not to talk to journalists without prior permission from the hospital authorities.

Signed by DMCH Director Brig Gen Md Asaduzzaman, the notice said, "All on-duty officials and employees of DMCH are requested not to give interviews or statements to any correspondents of print and electronic media without the permission from the authorities concerned."

Regarding the notice, the minister said, "I called the director this morning and talked to him about it. I told him not to treat journalists badly there."

CYCLONE REMAL

1,873km of roads damaged in Pirojpur

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Pirojpur

Cyclone Remal caused damage to at least 1,873 kilometres of road network and around 1,600 bridges and culverts in seven upazilas under Pirojpur district.

Of the paved roads, at least 68km were completely damaged while 449km sustained partial damage, according to sources at the Local Government Engineering Department in Pirojpur.

Also, 596km of earthen and brick roads were completely damaged while 760km of similar roads were partially damaged.

Besides, 417 bridges were completely and 302 were partially damaged. Moreover, the cyclone left 234 culverts completely damaged and 647 partially damaged.

The extensive damage has wrought havoc on residents of the area.

"The Indurkani-Bagolerhat road got damaged at different spots and has become unfit for commute," said Kabir Hossain from Indurkani upazila.

Abdul Khaleq Khan of Balipara village in the same upazila said, "The roads in our area washed away due to tidal water at different places, thereby becoming unusable."

Contacted, Pirojpur Sadar Upazila Engineer Harashit Sarkar said they are working to keep the roads usable by dumping earth on an emergency basis. "After getting funds, we will work on repairs and renovations properly," he added.

496 hectares of betel leaf plantations destroyed

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakhali

Cyclone Remal caused extensive damage to 496 hectares of betel leaf plantations in Patuakhali and Barguna districts.

More than 6,700 farmers are now facing massive losses in the two districts, according to the Department of Agricultural Extension.

"I had invested Tk 4 lakh after taking a bank loan. The yield was good and I was expecting a profitable harvest. However, the cyclone damaged two of my three betel leaf plantations. How am I going to pay back the debt now?" said Md Tipu Sultan of Barguna Sadar upazila.

"Betel leaves in my 30 decimals of land got damaged due to cyclone and tidal surge. I am at a loss," said Shusen Sarkar of Patuakhali Sadar upazila.

Several other farmers echoed them.

Abu Syed Md Jobaidul Alam, deputy director of DAE in Barguna, said betel leaves on 184 hectares of land in the district were damaged, resulting in a total loss of approximately Tk 11.5 crore to about 3,500 farmers.

AL made us dependent on foreign nations

Says Fakhrul

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday alleged that the Awami League government has made Bangladesh "dependent" on foreign countries by destroying its economy.

"Look at how they [govt] are selling the country for their own interests and staying in power. They have made it dependent on others. Everything is getting exposed from their statements," he said.

Speaking at a discussion, the BNP leader also said the government has completely destroyed the economy for the sake of foreigners. "They have turned a self-reliant nation into a dependent one."

AL won't spare anyone involved in corruption

Says Quader

UNB, Dhaka

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday said AL will not spare anyone regardless of party affiliations for involvement in corruption.

He said this at a joint meeting of the party at Bangabandhu Avenue in Dhaka.

"Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has saved the country from the reign of looting that was created during the BNP regime... No one will get away with looting now. BNP does not dare to punish its own people," he said.

"We must hold peace rallies to protect the lives and properties of people against the culture of arson terrorism introduced by BNP. You have to resist it. You have to be ready on the streets," he told party leaders.

Man hacked to death in Bogura

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bogura

A man accused in 29 cases was hacked to death by miscreants in Bogura's Kahaloo upazila on Saturday night.

The deceased was identified as Md Brazil Islam, 34, from the Palsha area of Bogura. The attack occurred in the Porapara area of Muril Union around 11:00pm.

Officer-in-Charge Selim Reza of Kahaloo Police Station said, "Assailants pursued him on a motorcycle, attacked him with sharp weapons, and left ensuring he was dead."

"We still don't know why or who killed Brazil," OC Reza stated.

"While no formal complaint has been filed yet, the police are trying to identify the perpetrators," he said.

Brazil had 29 cases in different police stations against him in Bogura, including charges of arms, acid attack, and murder. These cases were under trial.

When asked about his bail status, OC responded that he was uncertain.

For the past few years, Brazil lived at his father-in-law's house in the Porapara area of Kahaloo upazila.

Sources said he was involved in Jubo Dal politics in Bogura for a long time. Recently, he was trying to join Awami League and was seen at various processions and meetings of the party.

'COP' SABILA stoked for her new role

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

> As a co-actor, Apurba bhaiya is always good. He is excellent both as an actor and as a person. Moreover, he provided tremendous support to me in the 'Golam Mamun' series.

In the world of Bangladeshi drama, the dynamic duo of Sabila Nur and Ziaul Faruq Apurba has consistently captivated audiences with their performances in a variety of roles, particularly in romantic narratives. However, their latest venture marks a significant departure from their usual fare. For the first time, the pair are teaming up for a murder mystery, titled Golam Mamun, directed by Shihab Shaheen.

Set to premiere on Hoichoi on June 13, this series is a spin-off of the much-acclaimed series Buker Moddhye Agun, directed by Taneem Rahman Angshu.

Reflecting on this new experience, Sabila Nur shared, "I have done many dramas with Apurba bhaiya, and the audience has always received them well. However, this is the first time we have acted together in a web-series."

This collaboration offers a fresh dynamic as the actors explore the OTT platform, expanding their reach to a global audience.

Speaking about her co-star, Sabila praised Apurba, saying, "As a co-actor, Apurba bhaiya is always good. He is excellent both as an actor and as a person. Moreover, he provided tremendous support to me in the Golam Mamun series."

Having worked extensively with director Shihab Shaheen, Sabila Nur holds him in high regard. "There is nothing new to say about Shihab Shaheen. Everyone knows how good of a director he is. His directed web-series and web-films have been widely discussed," she noted.

"I have done many dramas under Shihab Shaheen bhai's direction. This time, the three of us worked together on an OTT project. He is an incredibly good creator. I also received a lot of support from him."

In Golam Mamun, Sabila Nur takes on a role unlike any she has portrayed before—that of a female police officer. This character is a significant departure from her previous roles and represents a bold new challenge in her acting career. "Audiences have seen me in various roles in my acting career. However, this is the first time I have acted as a female police officer," she remarked.

Playing a female police officer required extensive preparation and dedication. The actress shared her experience, stating, "I felt great playing the role of a female police officer. I prepared for a long time before shooting. And during the shoot, I received full support from the director."

When asked about her expectations for the series, the U-Turn famed actress expressed optimism, "Look, any work by Shihab Shaheen bhai is bound to be widely discussed. He does flawless work. I believe the series will also be widely talked about, and the audience will watch it. I am confident about that."

Despite the excitement surrounding the web-series, Sabila acknowledged the challenges of the role. "The role of the female police officer was quite challenging. I prepared for it accordingly. The rest will be judged by the audience after its release," she said.

Apart from the web-series, Sabila Nur is currently busy with the shooting of Eid dramas. "I will be seen in a few dramas during Eid. I am working less than before but focusing more on quality work. I now prioritise quality dramas, ones that will mesmerise the audience," she revealed.

As for her plans for the upcoming Eid-ul-Azha holiday, the actress has decided to stay in Dhaka. "I will be celebrating this Eid in Dhaka," she confirmed, indicating a break from her hectic schedule to enjoy the festive season at home.

Abul Hayat honoured with Raj Razzak Lifetime Achievement Award

Celebrated Bangladeshi actor Abul Hayat, Kolkata's theatre luminary Manoj Mitra, filmmaker Prabhat Roy, and producer Purnima Dutta have recently been honoured in a grand ceremony in Kolkata on June 8.

At a Bengal Film and Television Chamber of Commerce event, Abul Hayat received the Raj Razzak Lifetime Achievement Award, Manoj Mitra the Hiralal Sen Lifetime Achievement Award, Prabhat Roy the Debaki Bose Lifetime Achievement Award, and Purnima Dutta the BN Sarkar Lifetime Achievement Award.

The awards were presented at Kolkata's Spring Club, in the presence of Bangladesh Disaster Management and Relief State Minister Mohibur Rahman as the chief guest.

'Dark World' joins Eid release race

Mustafizur Rahman Manik's Dark World is set to release on Eid-ul-Azha. The production house confirmed the release date by unveiling a poster of the film on June 8.

Dark World is a crime thriller. The plot revolves around a gang spreading pornographic footage on social media, with the cops striving to dismantle the group.

The movie stars Munna Khan, Koushani Mukherjee, Deepa Khandakar, and Misha Sawdagar, among others. In addition to acting, Munna Khan also produced the film.

This Eid-ul-Azha, four movies have been announced: Dark World, Raihan Rafi's Toofan, Rashid Polash's Moyurakkhi, and Mohammad Iqbal's Revenge.

UZ chairmen saw higher growth candidates and the assets mentioned in their income tax returns.

About 84 percent of the candidates' affidavits differed from their income tax returns in terms of assets.

Wealth of 191 people, who have been elected chairmen in the sixth upazila polls, rose by 100 percent or more compared to 2019.

TIB's analysis said 30.41 percent of the elected chairmen have assets worth at least Tk 1 crore.

Around 40 percent of the candidates mentioned their income below Tk 3.5 lakh, meaning they do not have taxable income.

Immovable assets of 51 aspirants have gone up above Tk 1 crore over the last five years.

Addressing the event, TIB Executive Director Iftekharuzzaman said public representation should be based on public interest, but it is absent in reality.

"Now it is a power-centric public representation. One gets the scope to increase their wealth if they stay in power," he said.

Iftekharuzzaman added that it seems unbelievable that the candidates have no taxable income.

BUSINESSPEOPLE DOMINATE THE SHOW

According to the TIB, the number of businesspeople contesting the polls rose by eight percent compared to the fourth upazila parishad elections.

Around 57.36 percent of candidates in the first four phases of the upazila polls are involved in business, the report said.

Around 69 percent of chairman aspirants are businesspeople. About 68.16 percent of the vice-chairman candidates and 28 percent of female vice-chairman contestants have mentioned business as their profession.

Of the elected, the rate of businessperson increased by 6.5 percent over the last five years. About 79 percent of the elected chairmen are businesspersons by profession.

LAND BEYOND LIMIT

According to the law, an individual can have more than 33 acres of land. Twenty-five candidates were found to have land beyond this limit.

Seven elected candidates have land beyond legal limits.

Owning 280 acres, Dewan Ashid Raza Chowdhury, chairman candidate of Sunamganj's Dowarabazar upazila, tops the list.

At least 930 are new faces among the 1,210 newly elected chairman, vice-chairmen, and female vice-chairmen in the recently concluded upazila polls.

Seventy-six female candidates ran for chairman post in this upazila elections. Fourteen won, the TIB report said.

Of the total elected representatives, 28.63 percent have bank loans, while nearly half (44 percent) chairman-elect have bank loans.

to resume his duties in the same position in Moulvibazar.

On March 18, he filed an appeal with the Prime Minister's Office. In it, he pleaded for withdrawal of his dismissal, the gazette notification said.

Contacted, Iftekharuzzaman, executive director of Transparency International Bangladesh, said that if the reinstatement is not supported by concrete evidence that the corruption allegations, based on which he was dismissed earlier, have been found in due process to be invalid and unjustified, it will be regarded as a highly controversial action "to say the least".

He added that such a decision contradicts the government's repeated commitments to zero tolerance against corruption.

"Questions will be asked whether this is an example of protection and promotion of corruption, which will only encourage further corruption in public institutions with unrestricted impunity."

Several officials of the ministry concerned, speaking on condition of anonymity, expressed their disappointment over the reinstatement.

"His restoration sends a wrong message to junior officials that despite being found guilty, he did not have to face punishment," an official said.

Another official said, "Officials of the ministry investigated this officer; everyone knew he was involved in the corruption, but he got back his job instead."

with 105 of them currently holding classes. Among these universities, there are vacancies in the positions for vice-chancellors (29), pro-vice chancellors (80), and treasurers (35)," Mohibul said.

In response to another question from MP Abdul Latif, the minister said a total of 4,613 educational institutions are currently not under the coverage of Monthly Payment Order (MPO).

Responding to Opposition Whip Mujibul Haque, the minister said that an agreement had been reached with BUET's ICT institute to identify fake Bangladesh Technical Education Board certificates and that the process was already being carried out by institute experts.

"Upon detection, all forged certificates will be revoked, and any additional measures deemed necessary will be taken based on the information provided by the certificate holders."

In response to MP Pankaj Nath, State Minister for Primary and Mass Education Rumana Ali said the country has 944 primary schools with fewer than 50 students.

Alcaraz wins maiden French Open

Garros crown to the Wimbledon title he won against Novak Djokovic last year and the 2022 US Open.

He will head to the Australian Open next year with the chance to become the youngest man to complete the career Grand Slam.

Fourth seed Zverev, who settled a court case in Germany two days ago over domestic abuse allegations, is still waiting for a maiden major title.

He had also lost his only previous Slam final in five sets, when he blew a two-set lead against Dominic Thiem at the 2020 US Open.

Zverev had high hopes of finally getting over the line -- he has also lost six Slam semifinals -- but Alcaraz was too strong in the key moments as he levelled their head-to-head record at 5-5.

Alcaraz said before the final he wanted to join the list of men's players from his country, including his idol Rafael Nadal, to win the Roland Garros title, and he celebrated becoming the eighth Spanish champion by falling to the clay with his head in his hands in disbelief.

Zverev endured a miserable start, double-faulting on the first two points of the match en route to being broken in the opening game.

But Alcaraz was not immune to the nerves of a maiden French Open final, framing a regulation forehand into the stands and then also double-faulting as he gifted the break straight back.

The Spaniard did not take too long to find his groove, though, breaking to love in the fifth game on his way to pocketing the opener.

Having steadied himself, Alcaraz was serving for the third set at 5-3 before another dip allowed Zverev to take the lead in the contest, but the Spaniard raced through the next set despite a thigh issue and raised his game to prevail in the decider.

Modi sworn in as India PM for third term

This is the first time Modi is leading a coalition government after having been the PM for a decade when BJP enjoyed a commanding majority. Modi became the premier for the first time in May 2014 and returned with a bigger mandate in 2019.

Modi's council of ministers consists of 30 cabinet ministers, five ministers of state with independent charge and 36 ministers of state. It has representation from most parts of the country as well as social groups. It has 27 ministers from Other Backward Classes, 10 from Scheduled Castes, five from Scheduled Tribes and an equal number from minorities.

A record 18 senior ministers will be heading ministries, indicating that Modi has blended continuity and change to pick his new council of ministers.

Given BJP's critical dependence on its allies this time in the absence of majority on its own in the 543-member Lok Sabha where half-way mark is 272, the party's NDA partners got 11 ministerial berths -- five cabinet and six ministers of state in the third term of Modi.

Modi's previous council of ministers had two ministers of state from BJP's small-time allies Apna Dal (S) and Republican Party of India, but this time, there are two ministers of state with independent charge and four ministers of state.

Besides Hasina, the Maldives President Md Muizzu, Mauritius Prime Minister Pravind Kumar Jugnauth, his Bhutanese counterpart Tshering Tobgay and Vice-President of the Seychelles Ahmed Afif attended the oath-taking ceremony.

In addition to political leaders and eminent persons from different walks of life, members from the transgender community as well as sanitation workers and labourers, who were involved in the construction of India's new parliament building constructed in Modi's second stint as PM, joined the event.

HASINA MEETS MODI

Hasina met her Indian counterpart Modi at the Rashtrapati Bhavan in the first interaction between them since their victories in general elections.

Hasina and Modi, both smiling, had a brief exchange of pleasantries after the former gestured "adaab" before the Indian PM went for a handshake, which was warmly reciprocated by Hasina.

The meeting between the two PMs took place on the podium after Modi and his 71 council of ministers took oath of office and secrecy at the Rashtrapati Bhavan.

The two premiers proceeded to the banquet hosted by the Indian president. Hasina was led into the banquet hall by President Murmu.

Missing UK journo found dead on Greek island: police

AFP, Athens

British diet guru and TV personality Michael Mosley was found dead yesterday on the Greek island of Symi where he went missing this week, police said.

"People on a boat saw a body close to the rocky coast," said Petros Vassilakis, police chief for the southern Aegean region.

The lifeless body was spotted by a television crew from Greece's ERT public channel out filming in the area where the 67-year-old disappeared.

A cameraman "saw something strange near the fence, 50 metres from the sea", ERT reporter Aristides Miaoulis said on air.

"We discovered it was this man... he was lying down (on his back)."

Symi's mayor Lefteris Papakalodoukas was also with the crew and confirmed they had found Mosley, who had been vacationing on the island.

"It's the body of the journalist that we have been looking for over several days," he told ERT.

The authorities had on Friday announced they were stepping up the search after the Briton was last seen alive on Wednesday.

YEMEN'S COAST

Houthi rebels attack three ships

AFP, Sanaa

Yemen's Houthi rebels said yesterday they targeted three ships off the country's coast with missiles and drones after maritime security firms said two vessels had caught fire after being hit by projectiles.

The strikes are the latest in a flurry of attacks by the Iran-backed rebels who have been harassing ships in the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden since November in a campaign they say is in solidarity with Palestinians amid the Gaza offensive.

In a statement on social media platform X, Houthi military spokesperson Yahya Saree said the rebels attacked "two ships belonging to companies that violated" directives by the group not to enter Israeli ports.

He identified the vessels as the Liberia-flagged MSC Tavvishi and the Norderney, which sails under the flag of Antigua and Barbuda.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION

Iran approves six candidates for June 28 vote

AFP, Tehran

Iran yesterday announced the six candidates, mostly conservatives, approved for the June 28 election to replace president Ebrahim Raisi, who was killed in a helicopter crash.

The candidates announced by the interior ministry were selected from 80 registered hopefuls by the Guardian Council, which oversees elections in the Islamic republic.

Among those approved are the conservative speaker of parliament Mohammad Bagher Ghalibaf and the ultraconservative former nuclear negotiator Saeed Jalili.

Just one reformist candidate, Massoud Pezeshkian, who is a lawmaker representing Tabriz in Iran's parliament, has been approved.

The conservative former interior minister Mostafa Pourmohammadi has also been authorised to run.

Others on the list include conservative Tehran mayor Alireza Zakaani and incumbent vice president Amirhossein Ghazizadeh-Hashemi, the ultraconservative head of the Martyrs' Foundation.

ISRAEL'S DEADLY ATTACK ON GAZA REFUGEE CAMP

UN official blasts West's double standards

AGENCIES

The UN's special rapporteur on the right to housing has rebuked countries he accused of bias on Israel's offensive on Gaza following a deadly attack by Tel Aviv on the Nuseirat refugee camp in the enclave.

"Countries that celebrate the release of four Israeli hostages without saying a word about the hundreds of Palestinians killed and thousands held in arbitrary detention by Israel, have lost moral credibility for generations and don't deserve to be on any UN human rights body," Balakrishnan Rajagopal said on X about the attack that took place on Saturday.

Earlier, the Israeli army announced that it had launched attacks on various locations in the central part of the Gaza Strip and had successfully rescued four captives alive from two different areas.

Citing a US official, CNN reported that an American unit in Israel aided the efforts to rescue the hostages.

US President Joe Biden, French President Emmanuel Macron and German Chancellor Olaf Scholz were among leaders who greeting their release even as they have also called for a truce.

EU foreign policy chief Josep Borrell welcomed the hostage release and said reports "of another massacre of civilians are appalling... the bloodbath must end immediately".

The Gaza-based Government Media Office said that at least 274 Palestinians were killed and more than 400 injured on Saturday in severe Israeli airstrikes targeting Nuseirat refugee camp, areas east of Deir al-Balah, and al-Bureij and al-Maghazi camps in central Gaza, coinciding with a sudden incursion of vehicles east and northwest of Nuseirat.

More than 37,000 Palestinians have been killed in Gaza since the offensive began on October 7, according to local health authorities.

Eight months into the Israeli offensive, vast tracts of Gaza lay in ruins amid a crippling blockade of food, clean water, and medicine, reports Middle East Monitor Online.

Israel stands accused of genocide at the International Court of Justice, whose latest ruling ordered Tel Aviv to immediately halt its operation in the southern city of Rafah, where over a million Palestinians had sought refuge.

"My child was crying, afraid of the sound of the plane firing at us," said one Gaza woman, Hadeel Radwan, 32, recounting how they fled the intense combat as she carried her seven-month-old daughter.

"We all felt that we wouldn't survive," she told AFP. Israel's top diplomat rejected unspecified accusations "of war crimes" in the operation.

Ukraine hits Russian Su-57 jet for first time

Says military intel

REUTERS, Kyiv

Ukrainian forces have for the first time hit a latest-generation Russian Sukhoi Su-57 fighter jet at an air base inside Russia, Kyiv's GUR defense intelligence agency said yesterday, showing satellite pictures which it said confirmed the strike.

In a Telegram post, the GUR did not specify how the Su-57 was hit or by which unit of Ukrainian military.

A popular Russian pro-war military blogger who calls himself Fighterbomber and focuses on aviation said the report of the strike on the Su-57 was correct and that it had been hit by a drone.

The GUR said the aircraft was parked at the Akhtubinsk airfield, which it said was 589 km from front lines in Ukraine between Ukrainian and Russian invasion forces.

"The pictures show that on June 7, the Su-57 was standing intact, and on (June 8th), there were craters from the explosion and characteristic spots of fire caused by fire damage near it," the GUR said.

Ukraine has been fighting a full-scale Russian invasion since February 2022.

Challenges for Modi in his third term as India PM

REUTERS

India's Narendra Modi was sworn in as prime minister yesterday for a third straight term, a rare feat that will also come with new challenges as the populist leader is forced to rely on allies to form a government. Here are some key issues Modi will need to tackle in office.

FUNDS, SPECIAL STATUS FOR ALLIES

In the third term, Modi's government may need to spend more to meet the demands of allies that helped him secure a majority in parliament, testing the government's purse.

Regional parties in Modi's alliance have already demanded more funds for their states and federal cabinet positions during negotiations on forming a new coalition government.

ECONOMIC DISPARITY

India's economy grew by 8.2 percent in the last fiscal year, one of the fastest rates among major economies, but voters have pointed to disparities on the ground, with growth more visible in cities than in the vast hinterland.

The economy has jumped five places to be the fifth-largest in the world in the past decade under Modi's rule and he has said he will lift it to the third position. But the country's per capita income still remains the lowest among G20 nations.

INFLATION ABOVE C BANK TARGET

Annual retail inflationINCPIY=ECI in April stood at 4.83 percent, slightly lower than March, but still above the central bank's 4 percent target. Food inflation, which accounts for nearly half of the overall consumer price basket, was an annual 8.70 percent in April, compared with a 8.52 percent rise in the previous month. Food inflation has been at more than 8 percent year-on-year since November 2023. Modi has banned exports of wheat and rice to contain domestic inflation.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Unemployment in India has also been one of the main issues in the election campaign with Congress accusing the Modi government of doing little to provide jobs for the youth.

Modi's Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) lost a third of the seats it held in rural constituencies, an analysis of voting data showed, reflecting discontent in the countryside over lack of jobs and inflation.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

India's rising world stature and assertive foreign policy have been touted as major recent achievements by Modi's administration.

A key diplomatic strain, however, remains with China which was spurred by a 2020 border clash that left 20 Indian and four Chinese soldiers dead. Modi said last month the countries should address the "prolonged situation" on their border.

Modi's government has been trying to attract foreign companies to diversify supply chains beyond China.

Relations with Canada have also been strained after Ottawa and Washington accused an Indian official of directing the plot in the attempted murder of Gurpatwant Singh Pannun, a Sikh separatist and dual citizen of the United States and Canada.

FARMERS

Stagnant farm income is a major sign of widening inequality between urban and rural India that has led to widespread protests. The BJP had promised to double farm income by 2022 in its manifesto for the last election, but has failed to do so.

LAND, LABOUR REFORMS

In February, a BJP spokesperson said Modi could make labour reforms a priority if he wins the general election. But with the pressures of a coalition government and a stronger opposition, Modi may have to delay such reforms.

9 killed as gunmen attack Hindu pilgrim bus: police

NDTV ONLINE

At least nine pilgrims have been killed and 33 others have been injured when their bus, reportedly attacked by terrorists, plunged into a gorge in Jammu & Kashmir's Reasi district.

It is not yet known how many have received bullet injuries, Reasi's District Magistrate Vishesh Mahajan told NDTV. The pilgrims were on their way to the cave temple of Shivkhodi.

The bus was severely damaged from impact and bodies lay strewn at the accident site. Several empty bullet casings were also found at the site.

Visuals from the spot showed locals helping in rescue operations as ambulances stood on the side of the road for immediate assistance.

Reinforcements from the police, army, and paramilitary forces were rushed to the spot, the police said, reported news agency PTI.

Kashmir has been divided between India and Pakistan since their independence in 1947, and both claim the high-altitude territory in full.

Rebel groups have waged an insurgency since 1989, demanding independence or a merger with Pakistan.

The conflict has left tens of thousands of civilians, soldiers, and rebels dead.

Violence and anti-India protests have drastically fallen since 2019, when Prime Minister Narendra Modi's government cancelled the region's limited autonomy.

Oceanic 'peace' pact signed in Costa Rica

AFP, San José

Over two dozen countries signed a wishful "declaration of peace with the ocean" on Saturday in Costa Rica, as a multi-day meeting to prepare for a major UN conference next year wrapped up.

Among the signatories were Germany, Spain, Sweden, Canada, Chile and South Korea, as well as Costa Rica and France, co-hosts of third UN Ocean Conference to be held next June in the French city of Nice.

"We are committed to scaling up transformative ocean actions to support nature-positive economies based on the best available science and scientific information, traditional knowledge and innovation," the document said.

About a year out from the major meeting, representatives gathered this week in San Jose for two days of discussions to prepare for the conference.

Who gets the subsidies in power sector?

Squandering of funds in the name of capacity charges must stop

In a frustrating if predictable move, the government has once again allocated a third of the budget for subsidies to the power sector, an overwhelming majority of which will be used to pay off capacity charges. It seems no amount of expert logic, public outrage, or even IMF prescriptions can discourage the government from wasting public funds on paying private power plants to sit idle. It has already spent more than Tk 1 lakh crore in capacity charges over the last 14 years. Research by the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD) reveals that capacity payments have skyrocketed from Tk 5,600 crore in 2017-18 to a staggering Tk 32,000 crore in the outgoing fiscal year, accounting for a whopping 81 percent of total subsidies in the power sector.

Instead of bringing down capacity charges as a matter of priority, the government is constructing an additional 27 power plants, which can only translate to a further increase in capacity charges in the coming year(s). What's more outrageous is that the government has decided to raise power tariffs three to four times a year apparently to lower subsidies over the next three years. Electricity prices were raised by 8.5 percent in February this year, and thrice by 5 percent each last year. Why is the public being asked to pay higher prices in the name of reducing subsidies when, in fact, the government is increasing subsidy allocation in the power sector—from 32 percent of the total allocation last year to 37 percent in the proposed budget?

As always, it is the people who are being unfairly tasked with absorbing the burden of chronic mismanagement, collusion, and corruption in the power sector. This is simply unacceptable, particularly given that the government does not seem to be taking any visible steps to address the root causes of high production costs—a lack of transparency and accountability in awarding contracts, overreliance on expensive imported fuels, and neglecting domestic gas exploration and renewable energy sources. Subsidies make sense when they ensure cheaper and more accessible services and amenities to the public, not when they prop up big business groups at enormous cost to the country and ordinary citizens.

As we have argued time and time again, the power sector needs an overhaul. At the very least, and on an immediate basis, the government needs to renegotiate power purchase agreements with the private power plants, replace outdated plants with efficient ones to reduce overall power generation costs, and diversify its fuel sources. The energy sector has been allowed to remain unaccountable for far too long. Such looting of public funds must stop.

Fragile embankments must be fortified

Five unions in Khulna at risk of serious flooding

We are worried about the constant threat of displacement facing the residents of five unions at the Koyra upazila of Khulna. Flooding is a seasonal occurrence in this part of the land where embankments are often breached leading to the inundation of homes and croplands. However, the situation seems particularly bleak this year after Cyclone Remal has battered most of the embankments, leaving many areas already submerged and eroded. Come monsoon, residents fear they may have no choice but to relocate unless the embankments are urgently repaired and reinforced.

The question is, why are these structures so fragile? They are meant to be a critical line of defence; what's the point of having them if they cannot withstand the pressure of water for long? Experts attribute their delicate state to poor planning and use of substandard construction materials. As per a report, many embankments and sluice gates along key rivers in this area are presently in a dilapidated state. Local officials at Bangladesh Water Development Board (BWDB) have also acknowledged the poor state of a significant portion of the embankments. In fact, some 73 kilometres out of 2,006 kilometres of embankments in the Khulna, Bagerhat, and Satkhira districts are reported to be in a dilapidated condition.

Over the last few years, we have repeatedly talked about the importance of durable and well-planned embankments. We have seen how fragile embankments in many parts of the country were frequently, and rather too easily, damaged leading to the loss of homes, croplands and livelihoods. Many thousands were forced to leave their homes permanently, their villages swallowed by tidal surges. As the effects of climate change intensify, it is vital that the authorities also intensify their efforts to fortify existing safeguards against natural disasters. That means that there must be strict quality control in any project related to embankments so that those tasked with building/repairing them cannot get away with poor designs or use of low-quality materials. Officials in charge of the projects must also be made accountable for their negligence.

BUDGET FOR UNIVERSAL HEALTH COVERAGE

What can we learn from global experiences?

Allocation of resources to the health sector and proper utilisation of that allocation are crucial for achieving universal health coverage (UHC) as well as the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). Many countries are moving towards health sector reforms by customising their healthcare financing mechanisms and healthcare provider payment methods. Global experiences show that more resources for the health sector aligned with increasing efficiency in spending, appropriate healthcare provider reimbursement, purchaser-provider split, and supply-side cost sharing are leading the countries towards achieving UHC. In 2021, Thailand spent 13.5 percent of its total government spending on health, while Turkey spent 11.5 percent, Sri Lanka 9.5 percent, and Vietnam nine percent. The same year, the out-of-pocket (OOP) health expenditure was nine percent of the total health expenditure in Thailand, 16.2 percent in Turkey, 49.6 percent in Sri Lanka, and 40.0 percent in Vietnam. These countries reduced OOP expenditure and increased efficiency in health service delivery by adopting different provider payment mechanisms and pro-poor strategies. Many countries are implementing a blended approach of input-based and outcome-based financing to tackle inefficiency, information asymmetry and moral hazards in health service delivery.

Bangladesh has allocated 5.19 percent of the proposed national budget—Tk 41,407 crore—to the health sector in FY2024-25. The share of the health sector has been more or less five percent of the budget for more than a decade. In 2020, Bangladesh's current health expenditure per capita was $50.66, and the government health expenditure per capita was $9.1, according to World Bank. The share of health in the budget and the per capita health expenditure in the country are low compared to other Asian countries. It has produced relatively good outcomes in achieving some of the MDGs at a low cost, but the issue of financial protection in healthcare and achieving the SDG targets remains a crucial challenge.

The low share of public financing is echoed in the relatively lower use of public health facilities in Bangladesh. Only around 12 percent of total health services were sought from public health facilities and about 29 percent from formal private healthcare providers in 2022. Informal healthcare providers dominated by providing 59 percent of the total health services. The large share of informal healthcare providers is also reflected in access to and utilisation of medical goods in the country. Patients receive 93 percent of their medicines from private pharmacies. Expenditure on medical goods from private providers was more than 60 percent of the total OOP expenditure in 2020. The OOP health expenditure was 68.5 percent of total health expenditure in 2020.

Budget preparation in Bangladesh is not backed by economic evaluation as it is in many other countries. And budget spending does not always ensure implementation of cost-effective interventions either; in 2022, the health budget utilisation rate was only about 78 percent. Lengthy procurement process, limited capacity of health managers in budget execution, rigid public financial management rules, frequent transfer of health managers, inadequate monitoring and supervision and lack of financial autonomy of public health facilities might be the causes of the low absorption capacity.

Bangladesh prepared the first Health Care Financing Strategy (2012-32) in 2012. The strategy described a pathway to achieve UHC in the country by identifying key interventions such as increasing budgetary allocation along with improving efficiency in financial management and health service delivery, establishing a health protection scheme, piloting and scaling up of Shasthya Surakhsha Karmasuchi (SSK), and initiating mandatory health insurance for the population employed in the formal sector. The recent review of the strategy also emphasised increasing public financing, revisiting public financial management rules, purchaser-provider split, strategic purchasing, and accreditation of the private sector.

VISUAL: REHNUMA PROSHOON

Sri Lanka has successfully lowered catastrophic health spending (5.33 percent) in a health system funded by general taxes and input-based financing. Thailand, Philippines, Indonesia, Turkey, and India, on the other hand, increased coverage by transitioning from input-based to outcome-based payment approaches. There is no one-size-fits-all solution. Bangladesh needs to emphasise the area of provider payment immediately. Designing proper healthcare financing mechanisms and provider payment methods will help to redirect this huge OOP expenditure in the private sector through a third party, increase financing coverage, and ensure the quality of health services. The government may allocate additional funds for medical goods and increase the availability of medicines in public health facilities with effective monitoring and supervision. This could be a crucial intervention for reducing OOP expenditure in Bangladesh. India and Nepal recently increased the availability of medicines in public healthcare facilities with an increase in financial coverage.

As mentioned earlier, Bangladesh has produced "good outcomes at a low cost." There are other contributing factors outside the health sector, such as increased literacy rates, poverty reduction, social safety nets and other social determinants of health. These factors helped in reducing child mortality and achieving some of the MDG targets. Investment in public health and other social and environmental determinants of health is sometimes very cost-effective. Planned investment in health is required not only in the health sector, but also in other sectors. Different ministries should work together with better coordination to attain the SDGs by 2030 and the goals of the Perspective Plan by 2041.

Increasing efficiency in the public sector is a prerequisite for increasing budget allocation and enhancing healthcare financing coverage. However, global experiences show that an increase in efficiency alone is not sufficient to achieve UHC. Rather, countries improved efficiency while simultaneously increasing allocation in the public sector. The health sector's share in the national budget must be increased substantially in Bangladesh along with drastic measures to improve efficiency. It is essential to gradually introduce outcome-based payment in the health sector and strategic purchasing in the private sector. A master plan for health should be prepared with a holistic approach, including future allocation for the health sector, spending modalities, the needed health sector reforms, and of course, integrating health into other policies. We expect to see its reflection in the national budget in the coming years.

Cyclone Remal gives a stark reminder of our crisis protection gap

Cyclone Remal has once again underscored the critical importance of disaster risk finance followed by anticipatory action in climate-induced disaster management. For the past five decades, Bangladesh has been a global leader in implementing anticipatory measures to mitigate the devastating impacts of cyclones. Both the government and non-government actors have employed measures related to anticipatory actions, which have proven to be effective. The global experience of insurance has been revealed as an area of consideration to minimise economic loss and appropriate measures to be taken to address non-economic losses.

Cyclone Remal has affected more than 37 lakh people in Bangladesh's coastal regions. Preliminary reports indicate that 35,000 homes have been destroyed, and nearly 150,000 homes have been damaged. Beyond the immediate destruction, long-term impacts such as waterlogged homes, damaged livelihoods, and impaired infrastructure will continue to affect the lives of those affected.

The visible damage is just the tip of the iceberg. Behind the shattered homes and ruined infrastructure lies a profound human suffering that is often overlooked. Families are displaced, livelihoods and education disrupted, injuries and health hazards increased, and their futures uncertain. The psychological toll of such a disaster, coupled with the physical destruction, makes recovery long and arduous.

Despite these successes, the ultimate goal remains bringing the death toll down to zero. The deaths that did occur during Remal highlight a critical area for improvement. Some of those who perished were elderly individuals who died on their way to the shelters. This tragic outcome points to the need for targeted strategies to assist the most vulnerable populations.

Bangladesh must intensify its anticipatory actions to address the evolving challenges posed by climate change and increasing cyclone intensity. This includes: 1. Intensify early warning systems with their interpretations to provide more accurate and timely information; 2. Building more robust and resilient infrastructure within communities to withstand severe weather conditions; 3. Collaborate with communities in disaster preparedness and response planning to ensure localised and culturally appropriate interventions; and 4. Develop specific strategies and facilities to protect the elderly, disabled, and other vulnerable groups during evacuations.

Rehabilitation efforts must consider the specific needs of vulnerable populations, especially the elderly and those living in coastal regions. Cyclone-resilient houses built using local materials such as sand and much less cement offer a promising solution. These houses, built with community participation, are designed to withstand strong winds and heavy rain with the provision of manual escalators and rainwater harvesting. Expanding this model could provide a sustainable solution for coastal housing.

This is high time for the banking sector to extend and accelerate green debt as part of its climate-responsive finance mechanism that could incentivise well-off individuals and entrepreneurs to invest in organic farming, climate-smart agriculture, resilient housing, environmentally friendly building materials, and water treatment plants.

Another lesson learnt from Cyclone Remal is that the Sundarbans, a vital natural safeguard against cyclones, are not as resilient as the forest once was. It struggled significantly during this cyclone, with reports indicating that it was submerged under five to seven feet of water. This submersion has destroyed the sweet water reserves within the Sundarbans, leading to a shortage of potable water in the region. Additionally, its wildlife has suffered, with reports that hundreds of deer and other animals were swept away by the waters. The shrimp farms have also been devastated by the cyclone. This has severely disrupted the livelihoods of yet another group of local people.

The Sundarbans has continued to provide some safety, and local NGOs have initiated mangrove planting projects in the area. The effectiveness of these initiatives is becoming evident, as the mangrove trees help fortify the forest and offer additional protection to the locals. Beyond their protective function, these trees can serve as a source of livelihood.

Remal disconnected three crore people across the country from electricity. This disruption posed significant risks on multiple fronts. The immense damage, amounting to nearly Tk 10 crore in the coastal region, raises the idea of whether it is time to shift these areas to solar energy and decentralise its management.

A crucial element in Bangladesh's disaster management strategy is the Cyclone Preparedness Programme (CPP). These volunteers have been providing first response services for the past 50 years and have been lauded worldwide for their dedication and effectiveness. To continue this success, it is imperative not only to motivate and train these volunteers in a multi-hazard approach, but also to introduce them to modern technology.

Cyclone Remal brought new insights into the widespread concern it generated across the country. Not only were coastal regions affected, but the capital city Dhaka and the port city of Chattogram also faced severe disruptions. Landslides posed real threats in various areas, highlighting that cyclones can have a far-reaching impact beyond traditional high-risk zones. Given the widespread impact of climate-induced disasters, a holistic approach is necessary across the country. This includes: 1. Developing urban resilience planning across the country; 2. Establishing integration of disaster risk finance and anticipatory action into the systems; and 3. Unfold climate change, disaster management, supply chain, and responsiveness to the people nationwide using local language and local references.

When will the US gain ‘independence’ from Israel?

Md Mahmudul Hasan, PhD

MD MAHMUDUL HASAN

In a video recorded in 2001, Israel’s Benjamin Netanyahu reportedly said, “The main thing, first of all, is to hit them [Palestinians]. Not just one blow, but blows that are so painful that the price will be too heavy to be borne.” Dismissing the possibility that the United States would be an obstacle to the perpetration of such gruesome crimes, he added, “I know what America is. America is a thing you can move very easily, move it in the right direction. They won’t get in the way.”

When the above statement was first reported in various media outlets in 2010, Netanyahu’s claim of Israeli influence over the US was met with disbelief and, in some quarters, with ridicule. Many thought it was inconceivable. How could Israel exercise such control over a country like the US?

More than a decade on, if we unpack the intricacies of US-Israel relations, we may not characterise Netanyahu’s statements as hyperbolic or counterintuitive. Those who have eyes to see and ears to hear understand that the US-Israel relationship is asymmetrical and lopsided in favour of the latter’s interests. Successive US governments have been acting against the stated values and principles of their country in order to offer unconditional support for inhuman Israeli policies against Palestinians. US governments—both Democratic and Republican—have been routinely ignoring their own human rights stance by using the veto power at the UN Security Council to protect the Israeli state from criticism of its gross violations of human rights and international laws.

The US’s acquiescent submission to Israeli authorities has become more conspicuous, and the magnitude of its catastrophic consequences more evident, since early October 2023 when Israel launched its ongoing genocide against Palestinians. At the expense of its domestic and international interests as well as its global standing, the US has been providing Israel with economic incentives and military munitions, which the latter has been using to slaughter innocent Palestinian children, women, and men and to demolish educational institutions and other critical facilities—all designed to trigger a mass exodus of the surviving Palestinians from their land.

There are instances when the US government treated its own citizens’ lives as less valuable than the interests of Israel.

In March 2003, Israelis went on their routine killing and demolition spree in the Palestinian town of Rafah. At that time, Rachel Corrie, the 23-year old US citizen and an alum of Evergreen State College in the state of Washington, was part of a team of peace activists who went to Palestine to prevent Israelis from bulldozing indigenous homes. On March 16, 2003, an Israeli bulldozer was approaching to flatten a house where a Palestinian pharmacist named Samir Nasrallah lived with his wife and three children. It “stood alone in a sea of sand and debris,” as Israelis had levelled most other Palestinian houses in the area.

Rachel Corrie stood in the path of the bulldozer, urged the operator to stop, and acted as a human shield to protect the property. Her urgings fell on deaf ears. Manufactured by the US company Caterpillar, Inc, the bulldozer ran over Corrie, fracturing her skull, shattering her ribs, and puncturing her lungs; she was crushed to death on the spot. Later, an Israeli court acquitted the IDF soldier who “deliberately” ran the bulldozer over Corrie, and the US government didn’t protest.

Emails that Rachel Corrie sent from Palestine before her death included the following:

“It is most difficult for me to think about what’s going on here when I sit down to write back to the United States... I don’t know if many of the children here have ever existed without tank-shell holes in their walls and the towers of an occupying army surveying them constantly from the near horizons. I think, although I’m not entirely sure, that even the smallest of these children understand that life is not like this everywhere.”

I hope commentators who attempt to insult our intelligence by saying that the problem between Israel and Palestine started on October 7, 2023 take note of Rachel’s words and consider the history of Palestine at least since the 1917 Balfour Declaration.

About 21 years after Rachel Corrie’s death, 25-year-old US Air Force serviceman Aaron Bushnell couldn’t take the mass murder that Israel has been committing in Palestine since October 7. On February 25, 2024, he walked to the Israeli embassy in Washington, DC, “poured a flammable liquid atop his buzz-cut head, [and] lit himself on fire.” Before immolating himself, Bushnell declared in a calm and clear voice:

“I’m about to engage in an extreme act of protest but, compared to what people have been experiencing in Palestine at the hands of their colonisers, it’s not extreme at all. This is what our ruling class has decided will be normal.”

Perhaps in his righteous passion for justice, Bushnell’s pure heart anticipated that his “extreme act” would bring the US government to its senses. Sadly, he was wrong. What’s more, his statement didn’t even receive adequate media coverage.

The seven World Central Kitchen aid workers that Israel killed in Gaza in April 2024 included a US citizen. Unsurprisingly, that didn’t shake US loyalty to Israel.

For a very long time, the US has prided itself as a land of freedom, free speech, and freedom of movement. Unfortunately, acting in the interests of Israel, it has flouted such core principles.

Prof Ilan Pappé of the University of Exeter is a British-Israeli citizen of Jewish background. He is the author of The Ethnic Cleansing of Palestine (2006) and a known critic of Israeli apartheid and genocidal policies. He was travelling from the UK to the US to deliver a talk in Michigan. Upon his arrival at Detroit airport on May 13, 2024, he was detained and questioned by security personnel for two hours about his views on Israel-Palestine issues. He was allowed to leave the airport only after the agents “copied the contents of his phone.”

At the expense of its domestic and international interests as well as its global standing, the US has been providing Israel with economic incentives and military munitions, which the latter has been using to slaughter innocent Palestinian children, women, and men and to demolish educational institutions and other critical facilities—all designed to trigger a mass exodus of the surviving Palestinians from their land.

The US government regularly lectures the rest of the world on intellectual and political freedom and castigates other nations for their lack of free speech. It is very unfortunate that, guided by its loyalty to Israel, it let this incident take place. What’s more, we are shocked to have seen university authorities in the US stifle free speech and crack down on peaceful demonstrations and encampments that students set up at campuses to promote justice for Palestinians.

All these suggest that (electoral) democracy is not the only system that is under attack in the US, and Donald Trump is not the only politician to blame. Authorities in the US are eroding long-established principles and values in order to support Israel’s apartheid rule. This has harmed US reputation in the world and embarrassed its conscientious citizens. The extent to which the US has contravened its own principles and international laws to show allegiance to Israel does not suggest that it has acted independently.

It is time for the US to realise how it has subverted its own interests and prestige, and follow its own interests as a sovereign country. With students’ encampments at US universities, the movement for US “independence” from Israel has started. The sooner it materialises, the better for the US and for the rest of the world. Importantly, the freedom of Palestine from Israeli occupation is dependent on US “independence” from Israel.

Must students learn studentship before they learn to learn?

Dr Mohammad Shamsuzzaman is associate professor at the Department of English and Modern Languages in North South University (NSU).

MOHAMMAD SHAMSUZZAMAN

Ideally, no teacher thinks of punishing or surveilling his students. Neither do I. I often tell my students that I’m not a police officer or an administrator. I’m an educator, and my job is to help them learn. As well, I believe firmly that the problem with learning is a problem with teaching. If I teach effectively, they learn easily. Their failure is my fault. I’m, ironically, not consumed with a guilty feeling as I notice my students struggling to learn these days. I become more nostalgic than regretful as a teacher. I seem to have become a victim of “illusions of the good-old-days,” as Steven Pinker mentions in The Sense of Style. I’m tempted to think with every passing year that I was a better teacher in the past, for I used to have better students. However much I want to think that that’s a delusion, sometimes I can’t help feeling like a dinosaur amid some zombies. Students look confused. Communication seems disrupted. Learning apparently dwindles. These generalisations, unfortunately, are not without a grain of truth in them.

VISUAL: SALMAN SAKIB SHAHRYAR

Universities are unlike schools and colleges. Most students don’t seem to have intellectual and social capital to cope with the culture in which universities operate, as they enter universities fresh out of colleges. Universities are not teaching entities, per se. Universities are, instead, transformative sanctuaries. Students are meant to be more inspired than taught to discover their intellectual and professional pursuits. Students are not acolytes who listen and learn. They are disciples who think critically to question ideas and ideologies they come across. They no longer need to hone their rote learning skills to ace exams. Nor should they expect their teachers to admonish them for falling short of diligence and discipline. These default virtues of a university education presuppose academic and behavioural traits students hardly acquire while at schools and colleges. Students must first invent the university, as David Bartholomae suggests in his article “Inventing the University,” so they learn what it means to be a university student. When they finally invent the university, some of them carry over the consequences of initial disorientation. This is a transitional crisis that universities are ill-equipped to address. Students are the victims. Teachers, sometimes, are the victims of victims.

Such a situation disrupts the rapport between students and teachers. Add technology to this pickle. Technology sceptic Clifford Stoll claims in Silicon Snake Oil that the internet and educational technologies lead us away from sound educational practices. Stoll sounds anachronistic these days in that the internet and technologies offer infinite options and opportunities to facilitate education. Nonetheless, a reflective teacher perhaps would regret sometimes that technologies have somewhat compromised his authority as a teacher. Teaching is no longer time- and space-bound. And a particular teacher is disposable, because there’s a cadre of better teachers—ahem!—prowling somewhere online, available at any time, from anywhere. Consequently, the separation between teachers and students widens. Students are distracted from learning. Teachers are demotivated to teach. Technologies apparently devour the earnest engagement that teaching and learning ideally warrant. Teachers seem less effective these days, for students have emerged anew worldwide because of technological advances and affordances. As a result, students are missing out on the basics they must embody.

And that’s the concern that Emily J Isaacs raises in her pitch, “It’s Time to Start Teaching Your Students How to Be a Student,” in The Chronicle of Higher Education. She implies that learning is not altogether a cognitive endeavour. A brilliant individual is not necessarily a successful student, unless s/he has already acquired the “studenting” skills. Learning is largely a behavioural virtue. Students must cultivate some habits, skills, and behaviours to succeed in university-level courses. Students, for example, must learn to attend classes regularly, meet deadlines, pay attention, manage time, resist digital distractions, take care of their health, and seek help. She argues that most students who come to campus are unfamiliar with these basics of studentship. She urges that these skills be taught explicitly to undergraduate students in particular. Such an approach to teaching dislodges a professor from the hallowed pulpit he professes or pontificates from. He initially becomes a coach to help students embark on the long journey to maturity that a university education is. While this role of a teacher relegates him to a lesser light position, nowhere is it mentioned in the teaching manual (if that exists!) that he can’t assume such a responsibility. Will it make teaching smooth and unsnagged?

I doubt it! Hyperbole aside, education is apparently a commodity worldwide these days. Whoever can afford to buy it possesses it. And every “human animal” (I’m tempted to borrow this from Roy Scranton’s Learning to Die in the Anthropocene), whoever intends to possess it, is not a student. Some of them are either cuckoos or counts, who are unaffected by the intellectual, ethical, and aesthetic potential of education. Education is a conventional value for them. They are incorrigible for this dangerous misconception of education. They are impervious to instruction. They have false expectations and undue demands about a faculty’s teaching, grading, and behaviour. Nothing—and nobody—stops them until they are catered to what they want. However minuscule this group of students is, they exist, and because of them, the Pareto Principle, which posits that for many outcomes, roughly 80 percent of consequences come from 20 percent of causes, appears implausible for a teacher. These days, roughly 99 percent of consequences come from one percent of students for a teacher. While teaching studentship is an excellent idea, unless the system is purged of non-students, it’s a problematic option. And the problem is structural, not pedagogical. Teachers yet can be useful agents to turn the tide in their favour.

Teaching is a learned skill. It’s not a gift, although we supposedly have gifted teachers. Opportunities for teachers to learn about teaching are inadequate. Graduate programmes, besides the North American ones, mint scholars and researchers, not teachers or educators.

Fixing students might not fix the problem with studentship altogether. Teachers are part of the problem, too. Teaching is a learned skill. It’s not a gift, although we supposedly have gifted teachers. Opportunities for teachers to learn about teaching are inadequate. Graduate programmes, besides the North American ones, mint scholars and researchers, not teachers or educators. They are deluded into thinking that teaching is not their work; research is. They apparently excel as researchers following graduate schools. When, however, they embark on teaching, they are often caught flatfooted. John Loughran and Ian Menter claim in the article “The essence of being a teacher educator and why it matters” that the teaching of teaching is sophisticated work, although it is often viewed simplistically. Sceptics might argue that teaching is a heritage profession immune to innovation and intervention. It’s stuck in a perennial status quo. The profession totters under its own weight. We must not waffle to confess that some of us lack teachership, too. So, who is going to teach teachers teaching?

Superior teachers, of course! However idealistic I might sound, I would aver that teaching is an inspirational endeavour. Mark Edmundson claims in Why Teach? that a “corporate university” has abdicated its mission to inspire passions and talents. Inspiration is in short supply on campus these days, Edmundson reminds us. Teaching has been reduced to dealing with content. Teachers (have to) frantically teach what would make students job-ready. In this dispensation, a successful education provides a return on investment. Education, then, is an economic ticket to a better life.

Unfortunately, that is the end of education, because it’s the beginning of egocentrism. Education is altruistic. An ideal education civilises us to think about and work for others. Unless students are inspired to be creative, curious, and reflective, those affective faculties remain untapped. And the teachers who cultivate these faculties are an endangered species in the academic ecosystem, Edmundson bemoans. As well, Edmundson worries that too many professors have lost the courage of their own passions, depriving their students of the fire of inspiration. As long as we strive not to become one of those professors ourselves, we add to the repertoire of teachership. When we find and emulate our colleagues practising the idealistic virtues of teaching, we excel as educators in dealing with the deficiency of studentship.

Teaching is a solemn engagement, as is learning. A commitment to teaching must be complemented with a commitment to learning. If the enterprise of teaching is based on power dynamics that somewhat signal to some students that the whole system is stacked against teachers, they know that falling short of studentship isn’t a consequential lapse. Indifference to learning is already endemic. Questioning teachers’ authority is alarmingly on the rise. Education seems redefined as it veers away from scholarship and ideals into grades, graduation, jobs, and salaries. I’m not convinced that education has been this way because students are influenced by the insightful sarcasm of Oscar Wilde, who said in his essay “The Critic As Artist,” “Nothing that is worth knowing can ever be taught.” They apparently slight learning, for learning has become an optional luxury. It’s no longer a civic necessity. So, what would place students back on the right track? The acquisition of studentship, I assume. And who can be more effective agents than empowered teachers to help students acquire studentship?

BENGALI AND NON-BENGALI RIOTS at Karnaphuli Paper Mills

State, Class, and Ethnicity in East Pakistan

AZIZUL RASEL

From the mid-1950s, the relationship between Bengali and non-Bengali workers began to deteriorate to such an extent that the East Bengal mills witnessed two serious riots in the same year. The first riot between Bengali and non-Bengali workers occurred at Karnaphuli Paper Mills, Chandraghona, on March 22, 1954. In less than two months, Adamjee Jute Mills, then one of the largest jute mills in the world, experienced violent riots between Bengali and non-Bengali workers, resulting in the deaths of more than 600 people.

> The Bengali workers were indeed aggrieved with the management and the labour policies. However, I argue that the mill authority and the state systematically used these grievances to fragment class solidarities between Bengali and non-Bengali workers. As the Pakistani state frantically sought capitalist industrial development, it aimed to thwart any powerful concerted labour action in the industrial spaces.

This essay attempts to understand why, within a few years of the creation of Pakistan, serious riots occurred between workers of two linguistic groups: the Bengalis (almost all of whom were Muslims) and the Urdu-speaking Muslims. The Urdu-speaking groups, who migrated to East Pakistan, are commonly perceived as Biharis. Although an overwhelming number of them were Biharis, not all Urdu-speaking Muslim refugees to East Pakistan were Biharis. In official papers, they are treated as upcountry Muslims, non-Bengali Muslims, and Mohajirs or holy migrants. This essay examines whether they were able to forge significant labour solidarities and whether Bengali and non-Bengali industrial workers in East Pakistan were able to produce powerful concerted industrial actions. If the workers failed to produce such solidarity and concerted industrial action, what hindered them from doing so? Was it because of the workers' ethnic and linguistic differences? Some historians suggest that the riots between Bengali and non-Bengali workers in East Pakistan, which occurred shortly after the general election in 1954, were provoked by the central government to undermine the victory of the newly formed United Front's coalition government in East Pakistan. Layli Uddin, however, argues that the riots were mainly the outcome of a severe crisis in labour-management relations.

To explain the relationship between class, ethnicity, and the role of the state, this essay explores the riots between Bengali and non-Bengali workers at the Karnaphuli Paper Mills.

The morning of March 22, 1954, was a busy day as usual for the Karnaphuli Paper Mills. However, discontent and grievances permeated the air of the mills and the working-class neighbourhood of Dobashi Bazar, where most Bengali workers gathered for leisure time adda and daily groceries. M.H. Shah, the deputy commissioner of the Chittagong Hill Tracts, mentioned in his letter to the commissioner of the Chittagong Division, that he received news of the 'disturbance' at Chandraghona at about 1 PM while he was busy counting votes for the Chittagong Hill Tracts Buddhist constituency."

S.M. Hasan, C.S.P., the commissioner of the Chittagong Division, arrived at Chandraghona camp on March 23, a day after the horrific riots occurred. His letter to the chief secretary of the government of East Bengal provided a detailed description of how the riots at Karnaphuli Paper Mills began. Hasan met with S.S. Nohri, a senior technical assistant in charge of the process section of the mills, who narrated to him how the riots started. Nohri informed him that initially, the riots began over a simple matter. On March 18, Nohri sent some workers to M. Ekhlas, the Bengali senior technical assistant (chemical). However, unhappy with the management's treatment of him, Ekhlas sent the workers back, stating that he was not aware of his position in the mills. Upon learning of this, Khurshid Ali, the non-Bengali chief operating director of the mills, summoned Ekhlas to his office. Khurshid and Ekhlas had a heated debate there, during which Ali asked Ekhlas to return to his former government job. This concluded the events for that day, and Ekhlas returned to work. However, news of the heated debate between Khurshid Ali and M. Ekhlas spread throughout the mills.

According to Nohri, the Bengali workers of the mills organised a meeting at Dobashi Bazar, Chandraghona, on March 21. Some members of the Majdur Union were also present at the meeting. Following the meeting, the Bengali workers, along with the members of the Majdur Union, held a procession and paraded at the Dobashi Bazar and the workers' colony. They were heard chanting slogans such as "Hindustani chai na [we don't want Hindustani], Khurshed Ali murdabad [Down with Khurshed Ali], Majdur dabi mantey hobe [workers' demands have to be met], Ekhlas Saheb zindabad" [long live Ekhlas Saheb], etc.

On March 22, the fateful day, Khurshed Ali went to the 1st floor of the Soda Recovery Bailer House of the mills, the working station of Ekhlas. There, Khurshid Ali and Ekhlas again had a heated debate. Agitated, Khurshid asked Ekhlas to leave the building, which Ekhlas quietly observed, and he went back home. The news had already spread around the mills and the workers' colony. Soon, the agitated Bengali workers gathered adjacent to the turbine house. To his misfortune, Khurshid Ali went there to calm the aggrieved workers. Ali was subsequently mobbed by the workers, resulting in injuries and bleeding. However, with the help of some workers and officers, Khurshid Ali was able to escape major injuries at that time. Unfortunately, luck was not on his side, as a mob of 800 people chased him again at the main gate of the mills. After a while, Ali was found missing. The agitated workers also chased H.M. Shirazee, a labour officer, who jumped into the river. Eleven injured workers, of whom 5 were Bengali and 6 were non-Bengali, were admitted to the hospital.

So, why did the Bengali workers become so aggrieved, leading them to engage in serious riots at the Karnaphuli Paper Mills? Scholars argue that the riots between Bengali and non-Bengali workers, which occurred shortly after the victory of the United Front in East Bengal, were instigated by the central government mainly to sabotage the provincial government formed by the Front. Some scholars assert that the riots were, to some extent, a manifestation of the excitement created by the victory and the formation of the government by the United Front. For them, these new developments signalled a new promise.

The March 24, 1954 issue of The Azad containing news about the riot at Chandraghona.

However, Layli Uddin recently refuted these assumptions in her excellent essay. For her, although the riots in East Bengal were 'ostensibly' between Bengalis and non-Bengalis, they mainly stemmed from an inner tension within the labour situation, which she describes as 'a severe crisis in labour management'.

She suggests that workers' grievances were primarily against the highest management and those in authoritative positions. However, riots between Bengali and non-Bengali workers at the Karnaphuli Paper Mills, the Adamjee Jute Mills, and other industrial spaces indicate that lower-echelon Bengali and non-Bengali workers were actively involved in the riots. In the Chandraghona riots, too, most of the workers killed and injured were lower-echelon workers. Among the 10 workers killed in the riots were watchmen, contractors, camp jamaders, foremen, and an orderly. Only three of them were high-ranking officers. In the Adamjee riots in May 1954, most of the rioting workers were lower-grade workers.

The Bengali workers were indeed aggrieved with the management and the labour policies. However, I argue that the mill authority and the state systematically used these grievances to fragment class solidarities between Bengali and non-Bengali workers. As the Pakistani state frantically sought capitalist industrial development, it aimed to thwart any powerful concerted labour action in the industrial spaces. The state's concern to thwart any concerted powerful industrial action by the labourers is evident in official correspondences. Labour commissioners were instructed to observe daily labour situations and report on developments to the concerned state agencies.

From the Pakistan government's secret documents and statistical publications, it appears that the government rigorously and elaborately maintained statistical data on the population regarding ethnicity, race, gender, and class. In its labour policy, the state clearly showed a bias towards non-Bengali Muslim refugees. They were given preference in the employment of industrial workers. However, there were multiple complex reasons behind this. Indeed, among the non-Bengali refugees, there were more skilled individuals. The state implemented various support programmes to assist these refugees. Consequently, the state's labour policy created a kind of labour aristocracy in East Bengal's mills, where non-Bengali workers enjoyed more benefits than Bengali workers. This conscious government policy, over time, created an inviolable rift between Bengali and non-Bengali workers in the factory spaces.

A memorandum by Zahur Ahmed Chowdhury, then assistant secretary of the East Pakistan Federation of Labour, dated April 21, 1953, just around a year before the Chandraghona riots, details the discrimination in wages and benefits between Bengali and non-Bengali workers at the Karnaphuli Paper Mills. The memorandum also expressed the grievances of the Bengali workers. Chowdhury highlighted the grievances of the Bengali labourers of the mills. In his letter to the commissioner of the Chittagong Hill Tracts, he pointed out, in his words, the 'nepotism' and 'provincialism' of the non-Bengali top-ranking officers, whom he referred to as outsiders. As he wrote, "the history of the Chandraghona Paper Mills Projects under Khurshid Ali, operative director for the last three years, has been a dismal story of provincialism, jobbery, nepotism, and corruption. The outstanding feature of the entire administration has been a systematic policy of persecuting the poor local employees."

In the memorandum, Zahur Ahmed Chowdhury highlighted the wage discrimination between Bengali and non-Bengali workers. Chowdhury stated, "the disparity of pay and service conditions between the local workers and workers (non-Bengali workers, he forgot to use the word) must shock the conscience of every civilized man. Not to speak of the upper hierarchy of officers, the ratio of pay between a section of clerks and another section of clerks is 2:1. With microscopic exception, the pay of a Bengali clerk ranges from Rs 90/- to Rs 150/- whereas that of an outsider clerk ranges from Rs 150/- to 300/-."

Historians Raj Narayan Chandavarkar, Nandini Gooptu, and Subho Basu have emphasized the importance of the neighbourhood in working-class culture, politics, and everyday life. Workers' consciousness, politics, and activism are not only shaped in the shop floors, but the neighbourhood also plays a crucial role. For the workers of the Karnaphuli Paper Mills, Dobashi Bazar served this crucial function. As we have seen, prior to the Chandraghona riots, workers gathered at Dobashi Bazar, held meetings, paraded, and chanted slogans. Dobashi Bazar was where Bengali workers encountered emerging Bengali nationalist leaders, such as Zahur Ahmed Chowdhury, and nationalist ideas and rhetoric.

Subaltern historians highlight the autonomy of subaltern domain. However, I argue that the consciousness of subaltern people, whether peasants or workers, is not always immune to ideas from the outside world. At Dobashi Bazar or in the neighbourhoods of other mills in East Bengal, Bengali workers were exposed to the teachings and excitement of newly emerging nationalist enthusiasm and the idea of autonomy. The growing distance and strained relationship between Bengali and non-Bengali workers were, in many ways, engineered by the state. This vitriolic relationship hindered their ability to organise powerful concerted labour action. Consequently, in the 1960s, Bengali workers gravitated towards the flourishing democratic and nationalist mobilizations in East Bengal led by middle-class leadership. In turn, Bengali nationalist leaders pledged support for various labour actions organised by Bengali workers and promised to incorporate workers' demands into their agendas. Thus, throughout the 1950s and 1960s, solidarity between Bengali and non-Bengali workers was marked by a significant rift.

Upbeat Tigers look to carry momentum

SPORTS REPORTER

Conditions have been far from the norm at the Nassau County International Stadium, the venue for Bangladesh's second group game in the T20 World Cup against South Africa today.

Bangladesh players, who reached New York on Sunday, are breathing easy after a two-wicket win in their opening match against Sri Lanka and would look to carry momentum going into their last game in the USA. However, the Tigers have never beaten South Africa in the T20I format, having played eight matches, and there are big question marks on the conditions on offer.

At a press conference ahead of their clash against Pakistan at the same venue where Bangladesh would take on South Africa, India skipper Rohit Sharma had commented about the unpredictability of the wickets at the venue and it would likely be a similar case for the Tigers.

"These wickets are challenging, even the curator was confused about how they will behave," Rohit had told reporters.

So far in the three World Cup games played there, Rohit was the only player to hit a half-century, against Ireland. The invariable bounce on offer was accompanied by swing and seam movement. Batters were getting hit by deliveries that rose sharply from a length too.

The outfield conditions also did not allow scoring opportunities as usually is seen in the T20I format and it led to the ICC making a statement on working hard to improve the conditions.

Tigers will definitely be taking notes from the high-voltage India-Pakistan game on Sunday before their game against the Proteas.

Bangladesh skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto had said that the Sri Lanka fixture was the most tense game of his career but winning a pressure game of that level would help the Tigers regain the belief in themselves, especially following dismal performances in their World Cup build-up series in which they lost to co-hosts USA in Houston.

The pressure was telling when Sri Lanka got off to a moderately good start and were carrying on with momentum. The Bangladesh bowling unit mustered the required skill and experience, and above all, the courage to hold Sri Lanka back.

The batting unit, however, stuttered as usual but the contributions of Liton Das, Towhid Hridoy, and Mahmudullah Riyad at the death allowed the team to get over the line in a very tight game.

"As we managed to win this game, everyone will have extra confidence. And if we can go into the second game with this confidence then it will help. I hope something good will happen in the second game," Shanto hoped.

Bangladesh have crossed the first hurdle of their World Cup campaign and a mental barrier has been crossed which would allow them to settle in against a superior South Africa.

Shanto, however, was not taking anything for granted after their plans came to fruition against the Lankans.

"We will have to come back with a new strategy [against South Africa]. There is no other way than to play good cricket. If the batters can contribute we will have something good," he said, knowing that batters would need to pull their socks up and be counted in another vital game.

Double whammy for Paolini

REUTERS, Paris

Coco Gauff and Katerina Siniakova claimed the French Open women's doubles title on Sunday with a 7-6(5), 6-3 victory over Italians Sara Errani and Jasmine Paolini - a day after the latter's crushing loss in the singles final.

The win was Siniakova's eighth women's Grand Slam doubles crown and Gauff's first. Paolini, who suffered a 6-2 6-1 defeat to Iga Swiatek on Saturday, was left looking dejected.

The first hour of the match was largely dictated by Errani and Siniakova's struggles on serve, as both were broken twice each, with the first set going into a tiebreaker.

A quick start there gave Paolini and Errani a 5-3 lead, but Siniakova raised her game to win some key points that turned the tide in her and Gauff's favour.

The Italians began the second set with real intensity, earning four break points in the first game, but Gauff and Siniakova battled back for a crucial hold before going up a break to take a 2-0 lead.

That appeared to take the wind out of Errani and Paolini's sails, and though they were able to twice bring the second set back on serve, Gauff and Siniakova broke to take a 5-3 lead.

Gauff, who has often struggled with her revamped serve in recent months, showed no nerves when it mattered most and comfortably held on to clinch the win.

Luciano Spalletti has said that his side must "aspire" to retain their European Championship crown, even if it seems a longshot. That victory proved to be an exception to Italy's recent form, though, given the Azzurri failed to qualify for either the 2018 or 2022 World Cups.

Booters battle Qatar heat ahead of Lebanon tie

SPORTS REPORTER

The Bangladesh football team are trying to acclimatise to the scorching heat in Qatar, where they are set to take on Lebanon in their final match in the FIFA World Cup qualifiers at the Khalifa International Stadium in Al Rayyan on Tuesday.

Th charges of Javier Cabrera arrived in Al Rayyan on Saturday, fresh off their spirited performance against Australia, where they suffered a 2-0 defeat at the Bashundhara Kings Arena on Thursday.

The booters are charged up after the stern resistance they showed against the Socceroos but for now, adapting to the sweltering heat in Qatar is the biggest challenge for Cabrera's charges.

"The visiting team usually struggles to adapt to the weather so soon after arrival. The temperature in Qatar is about 45 to 48 degrees in the day, but it comes down to 36 degrees after the sun goes down.

"Adaptation is a challenge for the boys, but we are hopeful that the boys will adapt to the weather before the match against Lebanon," said assistant coach Hasan Al Mamun in an audio message sent by Bangladesh Football Federation.

Bishwanath Ghosh, who missed the tie against Australia due to suspension, is also optimistic about both adaptation and the outcome of the match.

"Very recently we had the similar weather in Bangladesh. I don't see much difference between the weather in Bangladesh and Qatar. We also don't want to focus on this issue, rather we have to start the work in a bid to realise our objective in Qatar," Bishwanath said.

"Our preparation is good because we came here after playing a big match against Australia. We might have lost the match but we are hopeful with the positive things we did in the Australia match. If we can repeat the performance against Australia, we can return home with something good from Qatar."

Bangladesh are currently at the bottom of Group I with just one point in five matches, which came from a draw against Lebanon in the first leg at the Bashundhara Kings arena last year.

The booters are targeting to secure at least one point in the second leg against Lebanon to end their campaign on a positive note.

"We want a win. Lebanon will also be wanting to win but our objective is to secure either full three points or at least one point in our last match of the World Cup Qualifiers," said Mamun.

Carlos Alcaraz outlasted German Alexander Zverev to win a maiden French Open, becoming the youngest man to capture Grand Slam titles on all three surfaces with a 6-3, 2-6, 5-7, 6-1, and 6-2 victory in a nail-biting final on Sunday. While the 21-year-old has won all of his three major finals, the defeat prolonged Zverev's frustration at Grand Slams, with the German still chasing a first title despite reaching the last four eight times. UZ chairmen saw higher growth in wealth than MPs

Says TIB citing last five years' data

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The incumbent upazila chairmen are outdoing lawmakers in terms of increasing movable assets over the last five years, says a report of Transparency International Bangladesh.

Citing examples of wealth growth, the TIB said during the period, the highest growth of a lawmaker's movable wealth was reported at 3,065 percent, while the wealth of Khan Arifur Rahman, Jhalakathi Sadar upazila chairman, surged by 11,666 percent.

At a press conference in Dhanmondi's Midas Centre yesterday, the graft watchdog revealed this after analysing affidavits of all candidates and newly elected representatives taking part in the sixth upazila parishad polls.

According to the TIB, the number of candidates who have moveable or liquid assets worth at least Tk 1 crore each has tripled over the last five years.

Most of the candidates, whose average income and immovable property have gone up, were from Gazipur and Mymensingh regions.

According to the TIB's analysis, the average income and movable assets of candidates in Cumilla, Feni, and Khulna regions rose significantly.

A total of 5, 472 aspirants vied for three posts in the upazila polls. Of them, 1,864 contested for chairmanship, 2,095 for the office of vice-chairman, and 1,513 for vice-chairman in reserved posts for women.

TIB says that there is also a discrepancy between the affidavits of the Official linked to embezzlement of Tk 11.52 crore reinstated

BAHARAM KHAN and SAJJAD HOSSAIN

The youth and sports ministry has reinstated an official who, along with three others, was earlier dismissed on charges of embezzling Tk 11.52 crore.

Farhat Noor

The reinstatement, done through a gazette notification on June 5, has raised concerns among many who said the move would call into question the government's commitment to fighting corruption.

A three-member committee formed by the ministry investigated Farhat Noor, who was the deputy director (training) at the Directorate General of Youth Development, and three other officials in connection with the embezzlement.

The committee found proof that all four had involvement in embezzling the money. They disbursed the money, which was meant for beneficiaries, to the subordinate offices under the directorate illegally.

Bangladesh Public Service Commission endorsed the ministry's decision to terminate them, after which Farhat and the three others were dismissed under Rule 3(b) of the Government Servants (Continuation and Appeal) Rules, 2018, on February 12.

The Anti-Corruption Commission also approved filing a case against the four following an investigation.

However, in the June 5 order, the ministry asked Farhat

UPDF supporter shot dead

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Rangamati

A supporter of the United People's Democratic Front (UPDF) was shot dead by unidentified criminals in Khagrachhari's Panchari upazila Saturday night.

The deceased is Barun Bikash Chakma, 55, of Kamol Krishno Karbari Para in the upazila.

The UPDF's spokesperson Aongya Marma said, a group of armed criminals attacked Barun at his house and shot him, leaving him dead on the spot around 9:30pm.

He accused members of Parbatya Chattagram Jana Samhati Samiti (PCJSS) of being involved in the killing.

This correspondent was unable to provide a comment from the PCJSS as the party does not have a committee in the Panchari upazila.

Panchari Police Station Officer-in-Charge (OC) Shafiul Azam said they could not recover the body immediately as the incident took place in a remote area.

"We are yet to identify the criminals," he added.

Israel keeps pounding eastern, southern Gaza

Outrage grows as Palestinian death toll in Saturday's hostage rescue raid on Nuseirat camp rises to 274

AGENCIES

Israeli forces pounded eastern and southern Gaza anew yesterday, a day after killing 274 Palestinians during a hostage rescue raid, and tanks advanced into further areas of Rafah in a bid to seal off part of the southern city, residents and Hamas media said.

Palestinians remained in shock over Saturday's death toll, the worst over a 24-hour period of the Gaza offensive for months and including many women and children, Palestinian medics said.

In an update yesterday, Gaza's health ministry said 274 Palestinians were killed - up from 210 it reported on Saturday - and 698 were injured when Israeli special force commandos stormed into the densely populated Al-Nuseirat camp to rescue four hostages held since October by Hamas.

Doctors described the scenes inside Al-Aqsa Hospital in central Gaza as a "complete bloodbath", with one medic saying the inside of the hospital "looks like a slaughterhouse". Doctors Without Borders (MSF) said Al-Aqsa and Nasser hospitals are "overwhelmed".

The EU's top diplomat, Josep Borrell, called it a "massacre", while the UN's aid chief described in graphic detail scenes of "shredded bodies on the ground".

- Tanks advance into further areas of Rafah
- US resumes aid deliveries to Gaza from temporary pier
- Israel's offensive in enclave killed 37,084 since Oct 7

"Nuseirat refugee camp is the epicentre of the seismic trauma that civilians in Gaza continue to suffer," Martin Griffiths said in a post on X, calling for a ceasefire and the release of all hostages.

Israel's military said a special forces officer was killed in exchanges of fire with Hamas fighters emerging from cover in residential blocks, and that it knew of "under 100" Palestinians killed, though not how many of them were Hamas members or civilians.

Yesterday, three Palestinians were killed and several hurt in an Israeli airstrike on a house in Al-Bureij in the central Gaza Strip, while tanks shelled parts of nearby Al-Maghazi and Al-Nuseirat, reports Reuters.

The Israeli military said in a statement its forces were continuing operations east of Bureij and the city of Deir al-Balah in the centre of the coastal enclave, killing several gunmen and destroying Hamas infrastructure.

Israel's military offensive in the Gaza Strip has killed at least 37,084 Palestinians and wounded 84,494 since October 7, the Hamas-run Gaza ministry said in a statement.

Meanwhile, the United States has resumed aid deliveries to Gaza from a temporary pier, the country's military said Saturday, after the structure suffered storm damage and underwent repairs in a nearby port, reports AFP.

Free edn up to 8th grade on the cards

Bangladeshi killed in BSF firing

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Cumilla

A Bangladeshi man was shot dead by the Indian Border Security Force (BSF) along the Jamtala border in Cumilla's Burichang upazila yesterday morning.

The deceased is Md Anwar Hossain, 50, of Mirpur village in the upazila.

Abul Hasnat Khandaker, officer-in-charge of Burichang Police Station, told The Daily Star that BSF troops opened fire on Anwar around 8:00am.

His body is still inside the Indian territory and it will be handed over to his family members once BSF returns it, he added.

According to local sources, Anwar trespassed into Indian territory to smuggle sugar into Bangladesh.

Killings along the Bangladesh-India border have risen over the last three years despite repeated state-level commitments to bring such killings down to zero.

WWII veteran, 100, weds 96-yr-old bride on D-Day anniversary

AFP, Carentan

It might have been the longest wait but on Saturday 100-year-old American World War II veteran Harold Terens married his 96-year-old fiancee in Normandy, just days after being honoured on the 80th anniversary of the D-Day landings in northwestern France.

To the sounds of "I will always love you", "Ave Maria" and bagpipes, Terens and his sweetheart Jeanne Swerlin said "I do" in the town of Carentan-les-Marais at a ceremony attended by dozens of guests, some wearing military uniforms.

To top off an extraordinary day, the newly wedded couple then attended the state banquet at the Elysee Palace in Paris thrown by President Emmanuel Macron in honour of visiting US leader Joe Biden.

"I waited 96 years to find the right man and now I have a wedding like only a queen and king can have," Swerlin told AFP before the ceremony in Normandy. "I feel young again," Terens said. "It's the best time of my entire life."

Terens and Swerlin, who live in Boca Raton, Florida, tied the knot after commemorations of the 80th anniversary of the June 6, 1944 Normandy landings.

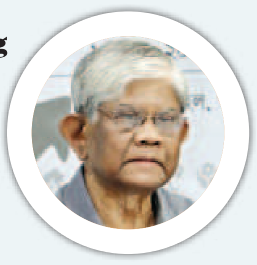
Economic immorality called out

Economists paint a grim picture for Bangladesh at discussion

"In an economy devoid of moral values, the resource distribution becomes unequal, economic discipline breaks down, business climate deteriorates and honest taxpayers become disheartened."

WAHIDUDDIN MAHMUD, eminent economist



"Already, our banking sector is suffering due to the huge amount of bad loans. Some people are taking out loans but are not repaying them. It seems that the loan default has become a business model."

SALEHUDDIN AHMED, former BB governor

"The banking sector is becoming weaker and weaker. And many depositors complaining that they cannot withdraw their money."

Bangladesh is heading towards an economic system devoid of moral values, which is causing a breakdown in financial discipline, spoiling the business climate, and discouraging honest taxpayers, said noted economist Wahiduddin Mahmud.

He was one of the speakers who took part in a discussion on the proposed budget for the fiscal year 2024-25 at a city hotel yesterday.

The Editors' Council and the Newspaper Owners' Association of Bangladesh (Noab) organised the event.

Wahiduddin observed, "We are talking about being a Smart Bangladesh. If smart people have no values, it becomes horrifying.

"How we can restore the values in the economy should be analysed and focused on."

Citizens too have a responsibility, as many engage in corruption to evade taxes or get benefits by bypassing rules and procedures, he added.

Wahiduddin, also a former finance adviser to a caretaker government, said the main source of this economy devoid of values is the political power system. When the power illegally goes to the loyal people and vested groups, it is used for immoral activities.

In the interest of the economy, the government must keep some sectors free from corruption and irregularities, he said.

The administration lacks accountability, and corruption is deeply rooted there, which wastes public funds, said Wahiduddin, also a former professor of economics at Dhaka University.

He said the Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU) has failed to play its due role in curbing money laundering. "Recently, we have seen that a former government official kept hundreds of crores of taka in banks

Hold one-to-one meeting in Delhi; Hasina invites Indian PM to visit Bangladesh

OUR CORRESPONDENT, New Delhi

In a first since the general elections in the two countries, prime ministers Sheikh Hasina and Narendra Modi held a one-to-one at the Rashtrapati Bhavan in New Delhi on Sunday night.

The meeting was held soon after the banquet hosted by the Indian president that followed Modi's swearing-in ceremony, said Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud.

At the meeting, Hasina once again felicitated Modi and the NDA on their victory in the parliamentary election and expressed her desire to work with the new Indian government to further strengthen the bilateral ties, Hasan Mahmud told reporters early yesterday at the ITC Maurya Sheraton Hotel, where Hasina stayed during her visit.

Hasina also invited Modi to visit Bangladesh at his convenience, he said.

The foreign minister also said the ties between Bangladesh and India have reached "a new height under the prudent leadership of Sheikh Hasina and Narendra Modi".

He added that Bangladesh and India have multifaceted relations, and several issues are shared between the two countries. "Both countries have benefitted from working together.

"As neighbours, we have many opportunities to strengthen our people-to-people contacts. The people from the two countries are benefitting in terms of enhanced connectivity between them. We have to work more because connectivity gives mutual benefits."

As the Hasina-Modi meeting set the tone for carrying forward the relations, Indian Cabinet Minister Subrahmanyam Jaishankar yesterday called on Hasina

GAS CRISIS hits consumers hard

ASIFUR RAHMAN

A two-week-long gas crisis has been affecting homes, factories, and vehicles that run on compressed natural gas, thanks to a dip in supply following the shutdown of an LNG regasification terminal in Cox's Bazar on May 29.

People in many areas in the capital are finding it difficult to cook at home. Some factories have closed as they could not operate due to low gas pressure. Almost all city CNG filling stations had long queues of vehicles.

Power supply to rural areas worsened as many plants use gas to generate electricity.

The government had planned to produce 17,800 megawatts of power a day during this summer, but it could generate the highest only on April 30--16,477MW.

The average production was between 13,000MW and 15,000MW in April-May, according to data of Bangladesh Power Development Board.

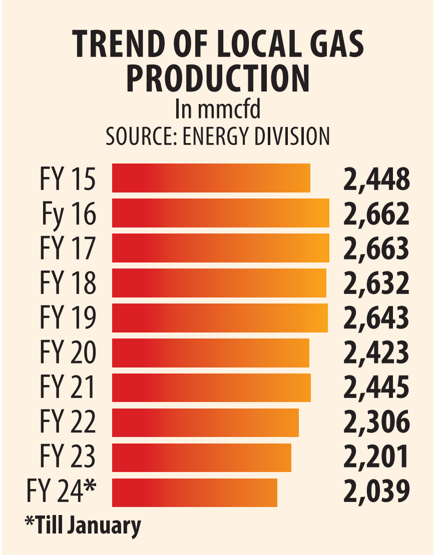
Officials attributed this production dearth to a shortage of fuel, which stems from the dollar crunch.

Bangladesh Rural Electrification Board (REB), responsible for supplying electricity to rural areas, had to conduct up to 1,100MW of load shedding a day since May 27. The districts of Mymensingh, Tangail, Dhaka, Narayanganj, Narshingdi, and Noakhali experienced the highest power cuts, according to REB.

During Cyclone Remal on May 27, the LNG regasification unit in Moheshkhali of Cox's Bazar was damaged. The unit, operated by Summit Group, was taken to a dry dock abroad last week for repairs, said Summit in a statement on June 5.

The LNG terminal is expected to be brought back in about three weeks, added the statement.

The country gets LNG from two floating storage regasification units (FSRU) having a total capacity to process 1,100 million cubic feet of gas a day (mmcfd). The incident reduced the supply to 600 mmcfd.



Petrobangla can currently supply around 2,600 mmcfd against a demand of 3,800 mmcfd.

The country's local gas production has dropped to 2,039 mmcfd from the yearly average of 2,448 mmcfd in 2016, according to data from January.

The Summit's FSRU only resumed operations in mid-April after undergoing

Heartbreak for Tigers in agonising SA defeat

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh came agonisingly close to taking a major step towards securing a Super Eight spot in the ongoing T20 World Cup as the Tigers fell short by just four runs in their Group D game against South Africa in New York on Monday.

It seemed like a victory was only a matter of putting the finishing touches to a regular job while in chase of a 114-run target. However, the hordes of Bangladesh fans who had turned the Nassau County International Cricket Stadium into a mini-Mirpur were left with hands on their heads, much like the dejected players who will now have to pick themselves up and ensure they progress to

So near and yet so far as Bangladesh suffered a heartbreaking four-run defeat to South Africa in a nail-biting ICC Men's T20 World Cup fixture at Nassau County in New York yesterday. In a tricky chase of 114 where the boundaries dried up near the back end, the Tigers were eventually left to rue the mistimed shots off a few full tosses bowled by spinner Keshav Maharaj in the last over, especially when Mahmudullah Riyad's shot in the penultimate delivery, seemingly a winning six over long-on, found the fielder agonisingly short of boundary ropes. Murder witness stabbed to death

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narsingdi

Police yesterday recovered the body of a man, who was a witness in a murder case, in Narsingdi's Shibpur upazila.

Ahmedul Kabir, 37, of Chakradha union was found dead in the field of Baroigaon Government Primary School in the morning.

Md Farid Uddin, officer-in-charge of Shibpur Police Station, said Ahmedul was a witness of a case filed over the murder of two people -- Jalal Mia, 35, and his brother Khurshed Alam, 30, in 2014.

Kabir's brother, Lelin Mia, said his death is likely linked to his testimony in the case. "A few men came to our house on Sunday at 11:55pm. They wanted to talk to Kabir so he went out with them. Later in the morning, we found his body near the school."

Multiple stab wounds were found on the victim's body, said Mohammad Mahmudul Kabir Bashar, residential medical officer at Narsingdi Sadar Hospital.

An investigation is underway to determine the motive behind the murder, said OC Farid Uddin said.

AC land torches bales of maize stored in union office yard

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Thakurgaon

The Assistant Commissioner (Land) in Thakurgaon's Haripur upazila yesterday torched several piles of maize plants stored by farmers in the yard of Bhaturia Union Land Office.

Earlier, AC Abdullah-Al-Noman Sarkar had ordered the farmers to move their crops and free up space at the yard, said Bhaturia Union Chairman Md Shahjahan.

"In response, the farmers had requested the official for some time. But AC Noman did not listen to the farmers and set fire to their crops without notice Monday evening."

Victims Shahidul, Johurul, Biplob, and Solim of Chapshar cluster village said they had picked the maize plants and stacked them in four piles in the yard away from the office building like every year as they have no space to harvest crops in their village. Of the four piles, two still had crops that were to be harvested.

The union chairman also said AC Noman threatened him with dire consequences when he came to the spot and stood by the people.

AC Noman, however, could not be contacted as he didn't pick up calls from this correspondent.

Upazila Nirbahi Officer Md Arifuzzaman said he would notify the higher authorities.

According to media reports, AC Noman was recently transferred to Thakurgaon from Lalmonirhat for harassing local journalists.

Economic immorality called out and then withdrew it too. But nobody was caught."

He said if Tk 10 lakh is transferred via banks, the BFIU notices it and is supposed to detect the source.

"The atmosphere for confidence has not been created. We see unbridled circulation of black money in the economy and capital flight."

Wahiduddin said when the economic indicators were strong, the irregularities, mismanagement, and waste were covered up. "It [the economy] had the capacity to absorb those. At present, it has no capacity to absorb this mismanagement."

The current economic crisis is not temporary, and mid- and long-term strategies are needed, he warned.

Citing mega projects, the economist said those were built with loans. He said some of them could have been built with equity sharing. "Then, it might have eased the pressure of debt repayment."

Wahiduddin said the economy is facing the challenges of stubborn inflation; erosion of foreign exchange reserves; lower revenue collection; lukewarm growth in remittance and export earnings; capital flight; indiscipline in the banking sector; massive corruption; and waste of public funds.

"In this situation, the budget was as usual ... which can be termed a sacrificial lamb that has no significant scope to do the many things that are required."

Due to lower revenue earnings, there is no scope for a budget with high expenditure, which the country requires. Considering the high inflation, the government had to contain the deficit too, he said.

In overall macroeconomic management, some basic weaknesses have been exposed.

He said low revenue collection was a big weakness, but the government has not taken any strong corrective measures.

Another weakness is the huge loans taken from internal and external sources. "If the government continues to borrow, the budget may fall into a debt trap."

Wahiduddin said the banking sector is the most sensitive to the economy. "But it is today left uncontrolled and unprotected.

"A massive qualitative change and reforms are necessary to get rid of these weaknesses. The question is whether the government's top level makes the promises and conducts the reforms. It will be clear in the coming days."

Hossain Zillur Rahman, executive chairman of the Power and Participation Research Centre, said, "The budget has been framed following the recommendations of the International Monetary Fund, the oligarchs, and bureaucrats.

"It was framed ignoring the concerns of the hardworking entrepreneurs and other real actors in the economy."

Following the IMF's recommendations, the budget's growth has been contained. It is focused on the preparation for graduation from the LDC group, he said.

The government has not taken any measures to reform the banking and revenue sectors. Instead, it allowed amnesty for legalising undisclosed money.

"This is an unjust step," he said, adding that such a measure was taken to please the oligarchs.

A former adviser to a caretaker government, Zillur said the government did not take steps to improve the business climate.

He said the tax-free income remains unchanged despite high inflationary pressure, and the target to raise more revenues through value-added tax impacts people irrespective of their incomes.

He listed five major challenges confronting the country: unfavourable macroeconomic conditions; the cost-of-living crisis; the joblessness of young people; the unfriendly business climate; and the moral value crisis.

Zillur termed the targets for curbing inflation and raising private investment "unrealistic" as there was no indication how these would be reached.

"If the government cannot reduce inefficient loans for budget implementation, control corruption that has already become institutionalised, and make the bureaucracy service-oriented, the economy will be in a huge crisis in the coming days."

He said an administrative reform commission was necessary. The bureaucrats' attitudes seem colonial, and the people face challenges in getting services from public agencies, he added.

"The government has to think seriously about the banking sector.. it should prepare a white paper on this sector. The failure of this sector will hold us back... We have destroyed the banking sector."

AHSAN H MANSUR, executive director of PRI

"There is no [government] effort to reduce costs ... An administrative reform commission is long overdue."

MOHAMMAD MUSLIM CHOWDHURY, former comptroller and auditor general

Mohammad Muslim Chowdhury, a former comptroller and auditor general, said there was no effort in cost saving, and operating expenditure eats up the lion's share of the budget.

He too said a commission for administrative reforms was long overdue.

Muslim, also a former finance secretary, said the volume of soured loans would be between Tk 4,00,000 crore and Tk 5,00,000 crore, which is huge considering the size of the budget.

Default loans amounted to Tk 1,82,295 crore at the end of March this year, according to the latest data from the Bangladesh Bank.

Former Bangladesh Bank governor Salehuddin Ahmed said the government should reduce the size of the ADP (annual development programme) by Tk 1,00,000 crore to Tk 1,50,000 crore so that the budget deficit drops massively and so does the need for bank borrowing.

"The operating expenditure should also be reduced. If such bold decisions are made, banks will be able to lend more to the private sector. Otherwise, the government will borrow hugely from banks, squeezing out the private sector and hurting job creation."

He said the government's debt is rising at a high rate, and there could be a situation where it would have to take out loans to repay loans.

"Already, our banking sector is suffering due to the huge amount of non-performing loans. Some people are taking out loans but are not repaying them. It seems the loan default has become a business model."

The former governor said the government changes the tax structure almost every year. There should be a long-term plan so that businesspeople can assume what the tax structure would be.

"It is changing the tax structure at will."

Salehuddin said there was no accountability in public spending.

Ahsan H Mansur, executive director at the Policy Research Institute, said fixing the interest rate to a single digit, keeping the exchange rate the same, and inefficiency in financial management, especially the banking sector, have created the macroeconomic problems.

He expects inflation to come down after a few months if the government can continue the contractionary monetary policy and supportive exchange rate management.

"If the central bank does not intervene in the banking interest rate, the exchange rate will remain at the existing stage. Then, inflation will be tamed."

Ahsan said the budget has some inconsistencies.

For example, the government has targeted to raise private investment to GDP ratio to 27 percent from the existing 23 percent. He questioned how the investment would be financed.

This is because the banking sector is already in a liquidity crunch due to the huge default loans. Moreover, the government will take 76 percent of new deposits, around Tk 1,70,000 crore, to finance its budget deficit.

If the rest is to go to the private sector, investment cannot be raised to the targeted level, he added. "The banking sector is not in a position to lend a huge amount."

He urged the government to publish a white paper on how the banking sector got into the current situation.

Mansur suggested that the private sector borrow from abroad if the exchange rate remains stable for a few months.

"If they take up loans from external sources, they will get financing at a lower rate, and it will boost the foreign exchange reserves."

According to Mansur, the government has not cut its spending in the budget; rather, it only squeezed its growth of spending.

"If it cuts expenditures by a significant amount, the private sector can get financing."

The government spends around 42 percent of its total expenditure on operations, which is a lot higher considering its service quality.

He said the US is run by 11 ministries, but Bangladesh has ministries manifold of that.

"Bangladesh does not need so many ministries, and the government should cut spending on the bureaucracy."

About the huge spending in the power sector, he said the government should renegotiate and revisit the power-related agreements to reduce costs, be it with Adani Power or local companies.

"The government needs to raise revenue by expanding the tax net. Due to the failure of this sector, the government has been forced to make its budget loan-dependent."

With the existing low revenue collections, it cannot be a developed nation, Mansur said, adding that easy government services have to be ensured so that people feel encouraged to pay taxes.

On the newspaper sector, Salma Islam, editor and publisher of the Daily Jugantor, said the industry is facing myriad challenges. "The government should announce this as an industry."

She proposed reducing duties and taxes on the raw materials used in publishing newspapers.

Fahmida Khatun, executive director of the Centre for Policy Dialogue, said, "The banking sector is becoming weaker and weaker. And many depositors complaining that they cannot withdraw their money."

She said the Banking Company Act has been amended to serve the interests of vested quarters and new formulas have been devised to reschedule loans.

Mahfuz Anam, editor and publisher of The Daily Star, AK Azad, publisher of the Samakal, and Dewan Hanif Mahmud, editor of the Bonik Barta, also spoke at the event.

at her hotel in New Delhi to discuss the entire canvass of the bilateral ties.

Hasina congratulated him on becoming the cabinet minister again and invited him to visit Bangladesh, Hasan Mahmud said.

"We, the two countries, have been working to elevate and further expand our relations," Hasan Mahmud, quoted Jaishankar as saying.

Bangladesh Foreign Secretary Masud Bin Momen and PM Hasina's Press Secretary Nayeemul Islam Khan were also present during the press briefing.

Jaishankar in a post on X, formerly Twitter, said, "Honoured to call on Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina of Bangladesh today [yesterday]. The India-Bangladesh Maitri continues to advance."

Jaishankar was given charge of external affairs later in the day.

Hasina also held a meeting with Congress Parliamentary Party Chairperson Sonia Gandhi, her son Rahul Gandhi, and daughter Priyanka Gandhi Vadra at the hotel.

"CPP Chairperson Smt Sonia Gandhi ji, former Congress President Shri Rahul Gandhi, and Congress General Secretary Smt Priyanka Gandhi Vadra ji greeted Bangladesh Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina Wazed ji and met other delegates in New Delhi today [yesterday]," Congress posted on X with a video of the meeting.

"They discussed a wide range of topics to strengthen the India-Bangladesh bond based on trust, cooperation, and a commitment to mutual growth," it added.

Hasina and Sonia embraced each other as the Bangladesh PM welcomed the Congress leader into her room. Right behind Sonia was Rahul wearing kurta-pyjama instead of his usual T-shirt and trousers, ready with a "namaste" followed by a hug. Priyanka Gandhi then entered and was also welcomed with a hug.

The bonhomie in Hasina's meeting with Sonia and her children was in keeping with the long-standing close relations between the PM and the Gandhi family, which date back to the ties between Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman and the then Indian PM Indira Gandhi, who played a stellar role in the liberation of Bangladesh in 1971.

Hasina wrapped up her New Delhi visit and returned home with her entourage on a special flight of Biman Bangladesh Airlines that landed at the Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport at 7:15pm yesterday.

Gas crisis hits consumers hard maintenance in Singapore for two and a half months. The gas supply situation in the country had been the same back then and people had to endure gas shortage.

Sabakat Sabri, a college student from the capital's East Shewrapara, said they have been facing an acute gas crisis for about a week.

"We have been living here for 15 years, but we never experienced such a bad gas supply situation," he told The Daily Star.

Sabri said they hardly have gas in the morning. "None of my family members can have breakfast at home before heading out to work. The gas pressure does not improve even around noon. That's why we have lunch late."

He said they started using an electric stove on Sunday.

Visiting five CNG filling stations in the capital over the last couple of days, this correspondent found long queues of cars and CNG-run auto-rickshaws.

At Anudip CNG and LPG Filling Station in Moghbazar, a long queue of vehicles was seen around midnight on Saturday.

Hossen Miah, an auto-rickshaw driver, was waiting for one and a half hours in front of a filling station in Satrasta area around yesterday noon. For the last couple of days, he needed at least two hours to refill.

"Be it day or night, the delay happens. As the gas pressure is low, the CNG cylinder cannot be filled. That's why drivers need to visit the filling stations more than usual," he said.

Farhan Noor, secretary of Bangladesh CNG Filling Station and Conversion Workshop Owners Association, said the normal pressure of gas is supposed to be 15 pounds per square inch (psi), but it is now 2 to 3 psi most of the time during the day.

On Saturday, locals in Narayanganj's Siddhirganj demonstrated on the Dhaka-Chattogram highway, demanding smooth gas supply.

On June 5, President of Bangladesh Textile Mills Association (BTMA) Mohammad Ali Khokon wrote to the Petrobangla chairman demanding improvement of gas supply to the industrial belts, including Narayanganj, Narsingdi, Gazipur, Maona, Savar, Ashilia, Tongi and Sreepur.

Speaking to The Daily Star yesterday, he said there has been no improvement.

"Hundreds of factories are without gas, causing production loss," he said.

Mohammad Hatem, managing director of MB Knit Fashion Ltd in Fatulla of Narayanganj, said their production was halted for four days last week.

In Savar's Ulail area, Madhumati Tiles Ltd has been closed since June 1 due to lack of gas.

Md Salim Khalifa, general manager (accounts and finance) of the factory, said, "We had been getting gas at 3 to 5 psi for the last one and a half years. But the number reduced to 0.5 psi since the beginning of this month. We had no option but to send all 400 workers on leave."

Abu Saleh Mohammad Khademuddin, manager at the Savar zonal office of Titas Gas Transmission and Distribution Company Limited, said, "In our source supply line, the pressure was supposed to be 50 psi, but it is now around 20psi."

This newspaper could not reach Petrobangla Chairman Zanendra Nath Sarker and Titas Gas Managing Director Md Haronur Rashid Mullah for comments. They did not respond to calls yesterday.

An official of Petrobangla, wishing anonymity, said gas supply will not increase this month.

Prof M Shamsul Alam, energy adviser to the Consumers' Association of Bangladesh, said it was expected that gas supply from floating terminals would be disrupted during natural calamities.

"Such a vulnerable infrastructure is not useful for energy security ... When an LNG regasification unit stops production, there is no alternate to it," he said.

It is clear that the government is depending on imported LNG rather than exploring local gas, he said, adding that the government has announced plans to explore 48 gas wells in three years. However, there is no reflection of this plan in the proposed budget.

"The government even fails to spend allocations for Gas Development Fund for gas exploration," he added.

Our Savar correspondent also contributed to this report.

S African parties talk coalitions

AFP, Johannesburg

South African parties were discussing forming a coalition government yesterday, as President Cyril Ramaphosa called on all groups to work together after general elections produced no outright winner.

Ramaphosa's African National Congress (ANC) won 40 percent of the vote -- its lowest score ever -- on May 29 and, for the first time since the advent of democracy in 1994, it needs the backing of other parties to govern.

"As the country prepares for a new democratic administration, all parties need to work together to sustain the momentum of reform, growth and transformation," Ramaphosa wrote in his weekly newsletter.

Palestinians thank PM

As the people of Palestine go through the most horrific genocide, living in conditions unimaginable in the human mind and conditions that cannot be accepted by the human soul, the Prime Minister of Bangladesh, Sheikh Hasina, has offered an unparalleled hand to help the persecuted people of the Gaza Strip. The Prime Minister has generously offered to provide Tk 50 million in humanitarian aid support to the innocent children, orphans and residents in Gaza, who are unjustly paying the price of Israel's criminal aggression.

This is not the first time that the Prime Minister has shown her humanity. During the first week of Israel's onslaught in Gaza, she sent batches of medicines and basic raw materials, followed by another batch the week after. The Government of Bangladesh has shown unyielding support for Palestinians. Bangladesh became the first nation to offer to intervene in South Africa's case against Israel in the International Court of Justice. Bangladesh has also expressed its readiness to host the largest possible number of students from the Gaza Strip, especially female students, to study in Bangladeshi universities through full scholarships. The prime minister has also consistently urged all countries to recognise the State of Palestine.

The prime minister has stood with Palestine since she began her political career, taking after her father, the Father of the Nation, Sheikh

NO HOME FOR HARIJANS

DSCC evicting at least 87 families, many not rehabilitated

MD ABBAS

When the city corporation excavators reached the Miranzilla Harijan Colony in Bangshal yesterday, tears streamed down the face of Chinothi Rani Devi.

She held her children tight as dust swirled around them.

"Despite being citizens, we are treated as if we have no value. We are being evicted without any consideration for our rehabilitation."

"I have three children and my elderly parents. Where will we go in such a state? There is no one to listen to us," she added.

Laxmi Rani, a 75-year-old woman from the colony, could not bear the thought of seeing her home get bulldozed. The colony is where she spent her entire life. She died of a stroke on Sunday, possibly anticipating what awaited them the next morning. She died due to the stress of getting evicted, her neighbours said.

Babul Chowdhury, a resident for nearly six decades, stood in front of his home in despair as it too will be demolished today.

"The city corporation took my job as a sweeper, and now they are evicting us from our homes," he said. "Where will I go now with my seven family members?"

> Despite being citizens, we are treated as if we have no value. We are being evicted without any consideration for our rehabilitation.
> Chinothi Rani Devi

He claimed the authorities did not even give them any time to relocate.

Miranzilla Harijan Colony had been their haven for generations, a refuge built by their ancestors during the British era. Now, the Dhaka South City Corporation was deeming their existence illegal. DSCC wants to expand its existing kitchen market in the place.

Over 87 families are being evicted, without any alternative housing, they claimed.

Community leaders said DSCC Mayor Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh assured them that only 20 families would be evicted. However, they later learned from DSCC officials that over 87 families would be evicted.

"Although the authorities claimed they will evict 87 families, they are planning to evict more than 120 families," said Nirmal Chandra Das, secretary general of Bangladesh Harijan Oikya Parishad.

The heartbreak of losing their ancestral land was compounded by the uncertainty of where they would go next. These underprivileged families, many of whom had toiled as sweepers for the city, were now being cast out with nowhere to turn.

Meanwhile, Chinothi Rani Devi looked at her children after she was done speaking to this correspondent.

Their frightened eyes mirrored her own dread. This eviction wasn't just about tearing down their homes; it was about tearing apart their lives, their community, their very identity.

Krisna Lal, president of Bangladesh Harijan Oikya Parishad, led a delegation to the Nagar Bhaban as the excavators arrived. But the mayor did not meet them, he claimed.

A team of DSCC officials, led by its Executive Magistrate Md Jahangir Alam, conducted the eviction drive, accompanied by law enforcers.

A DSCC official stated that the team

GRAFT CASE

Charges against PK Halder accepted

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday accepted the charges brought against 23 people, including former managing director of NRB Global Bank Proshanta Kumar Halder, known as PK Halder, in a case filed over embezzling Tk 70.82 crore from International Leasing and Financial Services Limited (ILFSL).

Judge Mohammad Ash-Shams Joglul Hossain of Dhaka Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court passed the order after scrutinising the case dockets and other relevant documents in the case.

On April 29, Anti-Corruption Commission's Deputy Director Gulshan Anowar Pradhan, also the case's investigation officer, submitted the charge sheet to a court.

PK Halder, the prime accused in the case, was arrested in Ashoknagar, India, on May 14 of 2022 on charges of money laundering.

The charge sheet stated that the accused took Tk 70.82 crore from the ILFSL and the amount stood at Tk 103 crore along with interest until October 16, 2022 which was embezzled and laundered by the accused.

Submachine gun in the hands of an 'unstable' cop?

Constable who shot his colleague dead had history of mental illness, claims family; police unaware

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

SMT-9 submachine gun -- a sophisticated weapon that can wreak havoc in the wrong hands.

Police constable Kawsar Ali, who shot his on-duty colleague dead in the highly secured diplomatic zone in the capital's Baridhara, was mentally unstable and even received treatment at a hospital, claimed his family members.

Yet, there he was, entrusted with the SMT-9, a weapon designed to unleash controlled chaos.

The police brass, however, claimed they did not know about Kawsar's mental condition.

But this "ignorance", if it's in fact true, raises further questions, "What background checks do law enforcers conduct before handing over such weapons to their own?"

"My son was supposed to be on duty with a stick. We do not know why he was given the weapon as his department was aware of his sickness," Kawsar's mother Mabia Khatun told The Daily Star yesterday.

His wife Nilufa Yeasmin said Kawsar received treatment from a Pabna hospital, and provided a medical certificate taken in 2010.

The Daily Star has a copy of the certificate, which shows Kawsar being released from a mental facility in 2010.

Police cordoned off the area after the shooting on Saturday night.

WHAT WE KNOW SO FAR

- Kawsar joined the force in 2005
- Took treatment at a mental hospital in 2010
- Received awards 25 times
- He was punished 4 times for negligence
- Has been doing duty at diplomatic security division since Aug 2022
- 3-member committee formed to probe killing
- Police say altercation centring duty led to the shooting

According to the Dhaka Metropolitan Police, Kawsar has been working at diplomatic security division since August 2, 2022. He has been doing duty with heavy weapons since then.

Kh Mahid Uddin, additional commissioner (crime and operations) of the DMP, said, "We were not aware of Kawsar's mental condition since he was doing duty properly."

"During interrogation, Kawsar spoke about some personal discomfort. The real reason why he shot a colleague dead would be known during investigation," he said.

Around 11:45pm on Saturday, Kawsar shot his colleague constable Monirul Islam with his SMT-9 submachine gun in front of the Palestine embassy in Dhaka. During the incident, he fired a total of 38 rounds from two magazines.

Gulshan police arrested Kawsar for murder, and he is now on a seven-day remand.

An embassy driver, Sajjad Hossain, was also shot and is receiving treatment at United Hospital.

DMP yesterday formed a three-member committee to probe the murder with deputy commissioner of Gulshan Division Rifat Hasan Shamim as head. The committee was asked to submit a report within seven working days, Mahid said.

The police officials did not disclose any reason behind the shooting till yesterday.

On Sunday, investigating officer of the murder case, Abdul Mannaf, a sub-inspector at Gulshan Police Station, reported that Kawsar shot Monirul during an altercation centring duty.

Contacted, DC Rifat Shamim told The Daily Star, "Many issues have come up. We need some

WHITENING BLACK MONEY

An injustice to honest taxpayers

Say speakers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The provision for whitening black money by paying 15 percent tax in the proposed national budget for 2024-25 fiscal year will encourage corruption, and it stands against the values of a just society, said speakers at an event yesterday.

The remarks came at a national budget review programme organised by the Economics department of Dhaka University on the premises.

Prof Selim Raihan, executive director of SANEM, criticised the tax disparity between honest earners and black money holders.

"People with legal incomes have to pay 30 percent or more taxes, while those legalising black money will pay 15 percent. This is an injustice to honest taxpayers," he said.

Raihan questioned the realism of the government's target to reduce inflation to 6.5 percent within the next fiscal year, with a GDP growth target of 6.75.

"The exchange rate needs to be stabilised and the government should further undertake major reform initiatives to address problems in the financial sector, including defaulted loans," he added.

Prof Masuda Yasmin, chairman of DU Economics department, expressed her disappointment with the budget, saying it failed to meet expectations amid the current economic crisis.

Street food may not be that good

Study confirms harmful bacteria presence

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Street foods like chotpoti, chola-muri, sandwich, sugarcane juice, aloe vera juice, and mixed salads in Dhaka contain harmful bacteria, a recent study reveals.

A seminar that took place at the Bangladesh Food Safety Authority (BFSA) conference room recently showed how researchers found E coli, Salmonella, and Vibrio bacteria in popular street foods.

Latiful Bari, head of the Food Nutrition and Agriculture Research Laboratory at Dhaka University, presented these findings.

The study shows alarming bacterial levels in these foods. Each plate of chotpoti has an average of 72 million E coli, 750 Salmonella, and 750 Vibrio bacteria. Chola-muri contains 740,000 E coli, 2,000 Salmonella, and 3 million Vibrio bacteria. Sandwiches have 2,000 E coli, 2,000 Salmonella, and 1.6 million Vibrio bacteria. Sugarcane juice contains 65,000 E coli, 17,000 Salmonella, and 13,000 Vibrio bacteria. Aloe vera juice has 56,000 E coli, 1.8 million Salmonella, and 14,000 Vibrio bacteria. Mixed salad contains 1,800 E coli, 510 Salmonella, and 300 Vibrio bacteria.

These bacteria cause various stomach diseases, including diarrhea. The study indicates that out of every 10,000 people consuming these street foods, two get sick from E coli, four from Salmonella, and one from Vibrio bacteria.

Researchers collected 450 samples from street food vendors in 37 regions of Dhaka north and south city Corporations. Contaminated water, dirty towels, unclean hands, and dusty environments contribute to these germs entering the food.

Latiful Bari said, "The lack of health and sanitation knowledge among vendors is a significant issue."

He emphasised the need for training vendors and conducting daily monitoring to ensure food safety.

Saidur and his son are currently undergoing treatment in a Dhaka hospital.

"The incident was a planned attack," Saidur said. "Police did not take any action against the attackers; rather, they are trying to harass us. Even a case has been filed against us."

Before the election, Saidur had complained against DIG Abdul Baten for violating the code of conduct and accused Madhyanagar police of bias. He believes this led to the attack.

DIG Baten denied the allegations, stating, "What would I gain from this incident? I didn't influence the local police to work for my brother."

He claimed Saidur's supporters first attacked his relative. "I only instructed the local police to control the law-and-order situation," Baten said.

Madhyanagar Police Station's Officer-in-Charge Mohammad Emran Hossain said police are playing an impartial role and additional law enforcers have been deployed to avoid further violence.

Razzak and Azim could not be contacted for comments.

DNCC knocks down 25 illegal shops, 6 buildings

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka North City Corporation yesterday demolished 25 illegal shops and six multi-storied buildings at Dakkhinkhan's Jamtala, adjacent to Uttara Azampur railway line.

DNCC Chief Property Officer Dr Mohammad Mahe Alam and Executive Magistrate Mahmudul Hasan led the drive, in presence of DNCC mayor Md Atiqul Islam.

Narrow roads and waterlogging are two major problems in Dakkhinkhan and Uttarkhan areas, said the mayor. "Road widening and drainage construction projects are underway in this area. However, people are not leaving space for road widening.

Drainage cannot be constructed to remove waterlogging due to the Illegally constructed buildings," he also said. Eviction of illegal structures will be continued to widen roads and solve waterlogging problem, he said.

demolished some walls and abandoned houses yesterday and will continue the eviction drive today after rehabilitating some of the 40 families in vacant rooms of two buildings constructed for cleaners.

DSCC Public Relations Officer Md Abu Nasher said those who are documented cleaners of the city corporation will be rehabilitated.

However, there is no scope for the rehabilitation of others, he added.

Nasher said a decision to expand the existing kitchen market was made in February 2016, and they are merely implementing that decision. "So, we are not hurting any individual, group, or community."

Mujibur Rahman, who had supported and assisted the just struggle that the people of Palestine have been waging for freedom and independence—the toughest national movement in history. Our late Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat in particular bore witness to the principled position of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman and the courageous stance taken by Bangladesh in the divisive international stage under his leadership.

In appreciation of the humanitarian and moral support of the Prime Minister of Bangladesh, the President of the Palestinian Authority, Mahmoud Abbas, has sent a message to express his gratitude. As the Palestinian Ambassador in Bangladesh, it is most necessary that I express, on behalf of my people, the extent of our appreciation for Bangladesh and the prime minister's exemplary stance at this historically difficult time in Palestine, when many in the world are choosing, willingly, to stand on the wrong side of history.

"The economy needs stability, even if it means slower growth," she said.

Prof Sayema Haque said the government could have reduced the budget deficit further, warning that borrowing from the domestic sector to meet the deficit could lead to increased inflation.

DU Vice Chancellor Dr ASM Maksud Kamal highlighted the growing waste in various sectors due to a lack of skills and the need for special attention to agricultural production in light of climate change.

"There will be a significant risk to food security in future if the agriculture sector isn't given priority in the budget," he said.

Speakers also talked on issues including social security, large-scale investment, industrialisation, and the health system.

They called for increased allocation and incentives in the SME (small and medium-sized enterprises) sector, proper use of budget allocations, and institutional measures against corruption to ensure proper implementation.

Prof Ferdowsi Nahar, Rumana Haque, Saima Haque, and Syed Naimul Wadood also spoke.

time to investigate thoroughly before we can provide a clear statement."

Kawsar joined the force on December 15, 2005.

During his service, he received 25 awards for good performance. But he was also punished four times for negligence, such as missing duty and overstaying leave, according to a police source.

Several police constables in the diplomatic zone questioned why superior officers deployed Kawsar, who was mentally stressed, with a modern weapon in a sensitive area. They are demanding a proper investigation.

Tawohidul Haque, associate professor at Dhaka University, told The Daily Star, "Law enforcers commonly label the accused as 'mentally disabled' or 'stressed' to downplay incidents."

He added, "Superiors cannot avoid responsibility as they must assess situations before deploying officers to sensitive duties. Annual performance reports also highlight personal behaviour and relationships with colleagues."

He suggested implementing a proper mechanism to address these issues.

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan said yesterday, "A committee has been formed, a case was filed, and the accused constable is on remand and being interrogated. We believe the truth will emerge after the investigation."

Climate crisis affects women, children more

Speakers tell discussion

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Women and children are more affected by environmental disasters in Bangladesh, said speakers at a discussion yesterday.

They also said Dhaka's rapid and unplanned urbanisation has degraded the environment, causing pollution and excessive heat that severely threatens women's and children's health, resulting in a rise in pregnancy complications and infant mortality.

The event titled "Endangered Environment Fading Dhaka: Transition Thoughts" was organised by Bangladesh Mahila Parishad at the capitals' Segunbagicha.

Dr Nabanita Islam, associate professor and head of architecture department at University of Asia Pacific, said climate change is one of the major environmental challenges at present. Women and girls are the direct and indirect victims of environmental disasters and climate change.

RECOMMENDATIONS

- Speedy implementation of climate action plans
- Coordination between govt policy makers, implementing agencies
- Ensuring women's participation in climate action plans

She emphasised on speedy implementation of climate action plans, coordination between government policy makers and implementing agencies, ensuring women's participation in climate action plans, removing air polluting transport, stopping indiscriminate tree felling and waste management of brick kilns and factories.

Dr Fauzia Moslem, president of Mahila Parishad, said Dhaka's environment is in a very fragile state, creating adverse effects on the health of women and children. In this situation, steps must be taken to deal with the environmental disaster of Dhaka. Advocate Masuda Rehana Begum, joint general secretary of Mahila Parishad, also spoke.

Flood damages 200km of roads in Sylhet

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Moulvibazar

Since May 27, Sylhet has faced severe flooding due to relentless rain, wreaking havoc on its transportation infrastructure. Estimates indicate that road damages across the district have already reached Tk 200 crore, a figure expected to rise.

In Gowainghat upazila, Mohammad Manik Mia from Baurbagh described how the flooding submerged most of the roads, leaving behind large potholes that disrupt traffic and raise concerns about accidents.

Commuters now face higher fares when using CNG-run vehicles due to the poor road conditions.

Raihan Ahmed, a CNG-run vehicle driver, highlighted the challenge of navigating the pothole-ridden roads, which often results in vehicle damage. The situation has strained his livelihood, with repair costs outweighing his income from fares.

The Local Government Engineering Department (LGED) and Roads and Highways Department (RHD) reported that 12 out of 13 upazilas in Sylhet have been affected by flood.

The situation is improving, but the conditions were severe in Gowainghat, Zakiganj, Jaintapur, Companiganj, and Kanaighat upazilas. Many roads in these areas were closed for several days due to damage.

According to LGED, approximately 160km of roads in Sylhet have been damaged, costing around Tk 118.70 crore. The RHD reported that 40km of roads have been damaged, incurring a loss of Tk 84 crore.

Affected roads include the Shari-Gowainghat, Darbast-Kanaighat, Companyganj-Chatak, Fenchuganj-Manikona, and the Sylhet-Tamabil roads in Jaintapur.

KM Faruq Hossain, executive engineer of LGED Sylhet, said the full extent of the damage will not be known until the water recedes completely. So far, approximately 160km of roads under LGED's jurisdiction have been damaged, causing a loss of Tk 118.7 crore.

Amir Hossain, executive engineer of RHD in Sylhet, said 40km of roads have been damaged, causing a loss of Tk 84 crore. Temporary repairs have been made to the most damaged roads to allow vehicular movement. Permanent repairs will take time and require further inspection and allocation of funds.

Private company filling up part of Belai beel

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Gazipur

A company named Banglamark has been filling up a part of Belai beel with sand, allegedly without any permission, in Nalshada village under Kaliganj upazila of Gazipur.

Visiting the area recently, this correspondent saw that the company was filling up a 12-bigha fenced portion of the waterbody that encompasses a vast area on both sides of the Tongi-Kaliganj road.

According to the upazila administration and related sources, the High Court had issued a status quo order on January 27, 2019 to protect the government waterbody and adjacent agricultural land in Kaliganj.

And yet, various companies have long been filling up portions of the natural water reservoir and constructing structures there, locals alleged.

Previously, several mobile court drives were carried out against illegal structures built encroaching the waterbody, and the accused were fined and ordered to stop sand filling.

"I lodged a complaint against Banglamark on March 21 for filling up the low-lying agricultural land and the waterbody in Nalshada village. In response, the UNO and assistant commissioner in the upazila only visited the site but took no action in this regard yet," said Benazir Sarkar, a resident of Shimulia Sarkar Bari village in the upazila.

"Banglamark's sand filling activities are going on at night in presence of a supervisor," he alleged.

Contacted, Kazi Nahid, the supervisor, claimed that the company's owner Rafiqul Islam owns the portion of the waterbody.

He also claimed that another real estate company has been spreading misinformation against Banglamark after failing to purchase the same property.

SM Imam Razi, UNO and executive magistrate of Kaliganj upazila, said Banglamark has been fined several times for filling up Belai beel. "If they still continue sand filling, we will file a case against them," he said.

Defeated candidate files complaint with EC over attack

STAR REPORT

A complaint was filed with the Election Commission in Dhaka yesterday regarding an attack on a defeated chairman candidate and his family by supporters of the winning candidate centring the Madhyanagar upazila polls on June 7.

Supporters of Abdur Razzak Bhuiyan, allegedly attacked the defeated candidate, Saidur Rahman, and his family near their residence in Datiapara village. The violence left at least seven people, including Saidur and his son lawyer Arifur Rahman, seriously injured.

Family members of the victims claimed the police have not taken any action against the attackers. Razzak is the elder brother of Rangpur Range DIG Abdul Baten.

Masukur Rahman, eldest son of Saidur, filed the complaint with the EC.

Meanwhile, Sunamganj District Lawyers' Association and Songkhubdho Nagorik Andolon, Sylhet held separate human chains protesting the attack. They demanded a judicial investigation.

Witnesses said the attack was reportedly led by Azim Mahmud, a nephew of Razzak.

Meanwhile, Azim filed a case against 17 people, including Saidur, with Madhyanagar Police Station on Saturday night.

Bangshi is DYING

Pollution, encroachment turn once-vibrant river into a narrow canal

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Jamalpur

The once-vibrant Bangshi river in Jamalpur is slowly dying. Merchants once navigated its waters on large boats, but now, the three-kilometre stretch of the river within Jamalpur municipality barely resembles a three-metre-wide canal before merging with the Brahmaputra.

Encroachment, pollution, and unchecked siltation have led to its decline.

In 2007, local authorities began demarcating the river's land and excavating it to reduce waterlogging. However, the river was soon filled with garbage dumped by residents.

"Whenever it rains, our houses flood with dirty water as the river can no longer drain it away. The bad odour from the river is a constant nuisance. The municipality should take urgent steps to clean the river," said Aminul Sheikh, a resident of Dayamayi area.

Other locals shared his concerns.

"The river has become a canal over the years due to illegal land grabbing. Now it is filled with garbage and serves as a mosquito breeding ground. The municipality should clean up the waterbody and excavate," said Jahangir Selim, president of Jamalpur District Environment Protection Movement.

Mayor Mohammad Sanowar, however, put the onus on the locals for the river's plight.

"We repeatedly try to prevent residents from throwing waste into the water body. We need to conduct mass awareness drives in this regard," he said.

Terrible toilets

Hospital washrooms in appalling state, says icddr,b

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Only 68 percent of government hospitals have functional toilets, of which, only 33 percent are clean, as per a new study.

Meanwhile, for private hospitals, at least 92 percent are functional while 56 percent of the toilets are clean.

International Centre for Diarrheal Disease Research, Bangladesh (icddr,b) conducted the study in collaboration with University of Technology, Sydney and the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS).

There was only one toilet for every 214 people in public hospitals and 94 for private ones

According WaterAid, for institutional toilets in outpatient facilities, there should be one toilet for every 20–25 patients

The study evaluated 2,459 toilets in Dhaka's healthcare facilities

The study, which surveyed 12 government and private hospitals in Dhaka, was recently published in the journal PLOS ONE, according to a icddr,b press release issued yesterday.

The study found high user-to-toilet ratios in outpatient facilities in Dhaka hospitals.

There was only one toilet for every 214 people in public hospitals and 94 for private, significantly below the recommended standards set by WaterAid, the study shows.

According WaterAid, for institutional toilets in outpatient facilities, there should be one toilet for every 20–25 patients.

The study evaluated 2,459 toilets in Dhaka's healthcare facilities to assess the availability, functionality, and cleanliness of toilets.

ENTERTAINMENT'S RISING STARS

MEET DEBOSRIE ANTARA

The female voice of 'Lage Ura Dhura'

Born and brought up in a family that practices and appreciates the art of music, Debosrie Antara officially debuted in Dhallywood with 'Laage Ura Dhura' from the upcoming Shakib Khan starrer 'Toofan'. The song, composed by Pritom Hasan, has now become the party anthem of the season.

ZAREEN NAWAR

The singer, as of late, has been assumed to be from West Bengal simply based on her name, but she has been in the limelight since amassing two duets with the famed Habib Wahid.

It's been a few months since we last spoke. How're you feeling now that 'Laage Ura Dhura' is storming through the charts and social media?

I, myself, am feeling Ura Dhura (laughs). However, I have to admit, they got the right song for me, at the right time. It feels like a step forward for my career, as my name is still not 'out there' in the industry, in that sense.

PHOTO: COLLECTED

How did this opportunity come about?

Pritom bhai called me one day and said that he had a work for me. It'll suffice to say, I was stunned, as it would mean working with a musician like him for the first time. When I was told that I would be lending my voice to an item song, I wanted to know more about the lyrics, considering item songs ought to have a standard.

When all the related decisions were made, funnily enough, I still had no idea that I would be singing for a song in Toofan. That was mostly because I am obviously not a part of the film industry, and when I was told that Mimi Chakraborty would be lip-syncing to my voice, I still did not know enough to connect the dots.

A personally significant aspect of the song that I discovered-- once the trailer was released-- was that it is penned by Rasel Mahmud and Shorif Uddin. Now, Rasel Mahmud is the man who wrote the first-ever jingle I voiced. It was a full-circle moment for me.

Many claim that your name has largely been disregarded throughout most of 'Toofan's' promotional campaigns. What is your take on this?

I have come to learn and understand that there can be several reasons behind that. There are certain regulations that the team must adhere to for maximising promotional content, including which names to push and publish. They could have also been confused regarding which name of mine to use, since my stage name was written inside a bracket beside my actual name, Antara Roy Chowdhury, in my NDA. Having said that, Toofan in and of itself is a massive project to helm, so I'm sure they have more pressing matters to attend to.

Besides, the film is about Shakib Khan, so the male singer having most of the limelight is natural.

What was your experience working with Pritom Hasan like?

He is a very humble, nice, and genuine individual, who was transparent from his end, from the get-go. He is also very knowledgeable, so when it comes down to sound mixing — he is extremely meticulous.

When we were discussing the required texture of Laage Ura Dhura, Pritom bhai further elaborated on the analyses of female singers with deeper voices being preferred worldwide nowadays. His explanation boosted my morale and made me realise that the texture of my voice is an asset that I have.

Has further work been knocking on your door since 'Laage Ura Dhura's' release?

I am working on several projects, including works related to my profession outside the musical world. I will be releasing my self-made song this year, followed by more originals. I have returned to dance and music classes to hone my skills. As an artiste, I believe I must work on myself so heavily so that I can, at the very least, be solid in my work.

PORI MONI
looks to resume Eid sacrifice at FDC

Consecutively for six years, Pori Moni upheld a tradition of offering her sacrifice at the BFDC, during Eid-ul-Azha. She has been earning high praise for her commitment to this act, by her colleagues, as she pledged to distribute the meat among the needy co-artistes.

The actress also stated that she would continue to make sacrifices at FDC as long as she lives. However, due to a ban on sacrifices inside the FDC after 2021, she performed the rituals outside.

Regarding this year's plan, Pori remarked, "I want to sacrifice again. If someone from the FDC can ensure that the Kurbani is performed together in a joyful atmosphere, then I will participate."

'Toofan' sees record advance ticket sales

TOOFAN
THIS EID UL ADHA

Shakib Khan starrer Toofan is set to premiere this Eid-ul-Azha. The advance ticket sales for the film began 10 days prior to the release. Remarkably, 40 percent of tickets for the initial days have already been sold as per the hall associates of Roots Cineclub, Sirajganj.

Advance ticket sales have also begun at the air-conditioned miniplex, Cinescope, in Narayanganj.

Cineplex, Blockbuster, Lion, and other theatres are also expected to begin advance ticket sales within a day or two, which should alleviate the rush to watch Toofan starting from Eid day.

he said, adding, "As soon as we received the information, we froze the accounts and seized the properties."

Moinuddin further said, "The ACC does not have the authority to issue travel bans. We need to convince the court that he is attempting to leave the country, and for that, we need concrete evidence. We cannot approach the court with just newspaper cuttings."

On the interrogation of Benazir, he said, "... We want to hear the statement of the accused. Therefore, we often give a second chance for the initial interrogation."

About former army chief Gen Aziz Ahmed, he said a lawyer asked them to probe corruption allegations against Aziz and the allegation involves false information provided by his brothers to obtain passports.

"We are working to verify this information."

He said the ACC has written to two departments regarding the forgery of national identity cards by Aziz's brothers Haris Ahmed and Tofail Ahmed alias Joseph.

Moinuddin said that proving corruption was extremely difficult. The ACC alone could not eliminate all forms of corruption, while ministries were not taking action.

"Had they done so, many complaints would not come before the ACC."

ACC Commissioner (investigation) Md Jahurul Haque said, "Those in power in society are the ones who commit corruption. The CIP and VIP individuals, whom you try to honour, are involved in corruption."

At the event, 12 journalists from print, online, and electronic media were awarded the ACC Media Award for 2020-2021.

ACC's Commissioner (enquiry) Asia Khatoon, ACC Secretary Khorsheda Yasmeen and other top officials were present.

Around half of the Gaza Strip's 2.3 million people had been sheltering in Rafah before last month's assault, and a million have had to flee again.

Since last week, Israel has also launched a large-scale assault in the central Gaza Strip, around the small city of Deir al-Balah, the last popuation centre yet to be stormed. Yesterday, residents said the Israelis had pulled back from some areas there but were keeping up air strikes and shelling.

Finance, telecom ministers slated in JS for 'failure' the financial sector, Chunnu said he submitted the cut motion against the minister's demand for increasing budget of his ministry.

He said the major task of the finance ministry is to supervise the banking sector and check graft.

"Is the Finance Division or Bangladesh Bank supervising or taking any actions against the looting of people's money and irregularities in banks?" he questioned.

Chunnu said PK Halder laundered around Tk 3,000 crore and left the country. Different large companies take loans and then their interest is waived. "Can the finance ministry answer these questions?"

Crictising the finance minister, the JP MP said Tk 2,200 crore of interest has been waived while farmers are being arrested for Tk 50,000 loan.

"Why should the ministry spend money if you can't regulate the financial sector?"

The opposition chief whip said the major reason for the dollar crisis is money laundering.

Lambasting former finance minister AHM Mustafa Kamal, the JP MP said the previous finance minister did not listen to him.

"Stop corruption and irregularities. Businesspeople, politicians, bureaucrats who have laundered money abroad and have homes and hotels in Canada, Europe and America should be investigated and identified. Identify them even if you can't bring back the laundered money," Chunnu said.

Independent MP Pankaj Nath said money is being laundered. Be strict about this. Action should be taken against willful loan defaulters. The restriction on opening LCs needs withdrawal.

Another independent MP Hamidul Haque Khandker said there is no clear explanation as to why the Finance Division has demanded additional money.

"The money laundered by Arafat Rahman Koko [late son of BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia] in the past has been brought back," he said.

In reply to the criticism of MPs, Finance Minister Hasan said MPs have made general allegations regarding corruption and irregularities.

He, however, said they were trying their best to combat corruption.

Speaking on the cut motion on the ICT Division, Chunnu wanted to know whether its "learning and earning projects" were running properly.

He highlighted media reports on the irregularities in the Sheikh Hasina ICT Park in Jashore.

He added that the park has been named after the prime minister. "How can wedding ceremonies and social events take place there?"

Pankaj Nath said if you open the box of Doel laptop, you will find a Chinese computer. "Is it not corruption?

He wanted to know what action was taken.

He also alleged that widespread irregularities are taking place in the Directorate of Posts.

The cut motions of the MPs were rejected by voice votes.

Later, the supplementary budget of around Tk 37,817 crore for fiscal year 2023-24 was passed by parliament.

Flooding, landslides kill 3 in Vietnam

AFP, Hanoi

Flooding and landslides in northern Vietnam have killed three people, state media said yesterday, after days of heavy rain that partially submerged thousands of homes.

Images on state media showed water gushing down the steep roads of mountainous Ha Giang province, a popular spot for motorcycle tours, with vehicles overturned and abandoned in the floodwater.

Residents in Ha Giang city stood on rooftops waiting for rescue.

Around 400 foreign tourists were evacuated from the flooded area.

It has been raining heavily and continuously in the province since Saturday. Thousands of homes have been partially submerged and many roads damaged, state media said.

Cigarette promotional materials of British American Tobacco Company found in open display at four Dhaka restaurants in Dhanmondi and Gulshan and two five-star hotels in Cox's Bazar. All kinds of tobacco promotions are illegal under tobacco control law, although BAT has found a way to do it anyway.

BAT violating tobacco control law

Chattogram and Cox's Bazar, the study found BAT invested in these restaurants to sell its products and display its promotional materials.

The study also found all these restaurants received one-time cash benefits from BAT for displaying their promotional materials. The payment, made by cheque or transfer intended to cover rent or utility bill, ranged from Tk 120,000 to Tk 5,400,000.

The Daily Star shared its findings with BAT via repeated phone calls, multiple text messages and emails over the last 10 days, but the company did not make any comment.

Separate smoking zones in hotels and multi-room restaurants are legal, but Smoking and Tobacco Products Usage (Control) Act, 2005 (amended in 2013), prohibits advertising tobacco products in any manner, including through leaflets, posters, billboards and signboards.

The Act also bans offering free samples or low-cost to entice buyers.

Violation of the rules carries three months' jail sentence or Tk 1 lakh in fine or both for first-time offenders. Repeat offenders will face twice as much the punishment for breaking the rules each subsequent occasion.

Despite the restrictions and provisions for punishment, BAT has managed to infiltrate many popular restaurants and hotels in different parts of the country.

Over the last two weeks, The Daily Star visited 18 restaurants in the capital's Dhanmondi, Banani and Gulshan and found 15 have separate designated smoking zones, where only BAT brands are available.

BAT products, including cigarettes and lighters with BAT logo painted in them, were found in open display in three restaurants—two in Gulshan and one in Dhanmondi.

In the smoking zones of these three restaurants, smoking areas featured eye-catching displays and illuminated advertisements. Each table had a display case, and large showcases advertised cigarettes.

One Gulshan restaurant even included a "Tobacco" section in its menu, listing four BAT cigarette brands priced at Tk 325, although most retail shops charge higher.

"We only sell BAT products. And we don't sell single sticks, you have to buy a pack," said an employee, indicating a deliberate marketing strategy to boost sales.

One restaurant owner said BAT's promotional activities are financially gainful for him.

"It's a good deal because almost every month, BAT arranges a function at my restaurant. I make good profit from increased sales," he said.

He said BAT officials regularly pay visits to ensure their promotional materials are prominently displayed, something Voice Bangladesh also found in its study last year.

A Gulshan coffee shop manager admitted having a "very confidential" financial agreement with BAT, allowing them to run promotional campaigns at the café since 2021.

According to the restaurant owners in Gulshan and Banani, BAT has agreements with at least 20 restaurants for promotional purposes in these two upscale areas.

Two restaurant owners in Chattogram said they had a verbal agreement with BAT to display its brands and that they received some money every month as part of the deal. However, they are not receiving any money from BAT for about a year now.

At least two five-star hotels in Cox's Bazar also have BAT products display areas in their lobbies.

An official of one of these two hotels acknowledged that BAT provides them with cigarettes and promotional materials, but said he is not aware of any financial agreement with the tobacco company.

An official of the other five-star hotel did not respond to our calls and texts.

Health Minister Samanta Lal Sen did not respond to our questions sent to the senior information officer of the health ministry on WhatsApp.

Modi unveils coalition cabinet dominated by his party

AFP, New Delhi

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi yesterday unveiled his coalition government after a surprise election setback lost his Hindu-nationalist party an overall majority.

The 71 members of his government took the oath of office after Modi on Sunday, with 11 posts going to coalition allies who extracted them in exchange for their support -- including five in the top 30 cabinet posts.

But Modi's Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) old guard dominate the list, with key posts unchanged -- signalling broad policy continuity.

That includes BJP loyalists Rajnath Singh, Amit Shah, Nitin Gadkari, Nirmala Sitharaman and S.Jaishankar -- the defence, interior, transport, finance and foreign ministers respectively, staying on in their jobs.

Powerful BJP president Jagat Prakash Nadda was named as health minister.

Posts given to coalition leaders include civil aviation, to Kinjarapu Rammohan Naidu of the Telugu Desam Party (TDP), the BJP's biggest ally.

Other coalition posts include smaller ministries such as heavy industry, food processing and fisheries.

There are no Muslim lawmakers among his third-term lineup, unlike his past two governments, both formed after his right-wing BJP won a majority.

Modi's decade as premier has seen him cultivate an image as an aggressive champion of the country's majority Hindu faith, worrying minorities.

Far right surges in EU vote

Macron calls snap elections in France

AGENCIES

The snap election called by President Emmanuel Macron after Sunday's bruising loss to the far-right in European Parliament elections will be France's most fateful legislative vote in decades, its finance minister said yesterday.

Macron's shock decision amounts to a roll of the dice on his political future and that of France. It immediately sent the euro down, also hitting French stocks and government bonds.

The June 30 and July 7 ballot could, for the first time, hand a great deal of power to Marine Le Pen's far-right National Rally (RN), if they can transform their rising popularity into a win at home too - where the vote would also be about trust that it could run a major European government.

If the eurosceptic, anti-immigration RN did score a majority, Macron would remain president for three more years and continue to be in charge of defence and foreign policy, reports Reuters.

But he would lose the power to set the domestic agenda, ranging from economic policy to security and immigration, reports Reuters.

Germany will not hold a snap election despite calls for Olaf Scholz to step aside after his ruling coalition's dismal performance in the EU election, a spokesman for the chancellor said yesterday.

"The regular election date is next autumn (2025). And that's what we plan to do," Scholz's spokesman told a government press conference.

ISRAELI OFFENSIVE IN PALESTINIAN ENCLAVE

Many in Gaza back to eating 'one meal per day'

AGENCIES

Israel's relentless bombardment and obstruction of humanitarian efforts are making it nearly impossible for aid agencies to reach starving Palestinians in the Gaza Strip.

The flow of aid into Gaza has remained scarce, with many people now eating "only one meal per day", said Al Jazeera reporter Hind Khoudary.

"This is not only in the south, but also in the north" of Gaza, said Khoudary, adding that markets are largely empty and what food available is hard to afford for most people.

Khoudary has sent an update from Deir el-Balah's Al-Aqsa Hospital, where she said an extra emergency department has been opened to deal with the massive influx of injured patients.

The hospital, running on just one generator, remains flooded with sick and injured patients, and is performing surgeries on an "hourly basis", she said.

Israeli forces have withdrawn from the eastern part of Deir el-Balah, but civil defence teams were able to bring the bodies of five people who were killed in the area.

There have been a couple of air strikes in the area after the Israeli forces withdrew, as well as intensive artillery shelling throughout the night.

Al Jazeera's Hani Mahmoud has spoken to residents of the Nuseirat refugee camp who witnessed the Israeli military's operation there on Saturday that killed and injured hundreds of Palestinians.

Anaas Alayan, one resident of the camp, said Israeli special forces committed mass "executions" on the street. "I went down to the street and found bodies everywhere," he told Al Jazeera.

The military, which rescued four Israeli captives during the operation, killed at least 274 Palestinians, including at least 64 children during the day-time assault, according to Gaza's Health Ministry.

The camp is now left with a "trail of destruction", according to Mahmoud.

With many of Gaza's water wells and pipelines destroyed in the offensive, accessing water has become a daily struggle for Palestinians in the coastal enclave.

Anas al-Jamal, a pregnant woman in the enclave, tells Al Jazeera she has to leave her home every day to search for water to carry home. "The water scarcity is severely affecting me because I'm supposed to rest and avoid strenuous physical activity," al-Jamal told Al Jazeera. "We're really struggling."

Israel's military offensive has killed at least 37,124 people in Gaza, also mostly civilians, according to the territory's health ministry.

The toll includes at least 40 deaths over the past 24 hours, the ministry said yesterday.

The offensive has brought widespread devastation to Gaza and displaced most of its 2.4 million inhabitants, reports AFP.

think much should be said before the investigation [has concluded]."

"We're still saying we're closer to the truth. Once the body is confirmed, we will be able to reveal a lot to you. I've heard the statements of those who committed the murder. They said they dismembered the body. It's not known exactly where they kept it [the body parts]."

About Akhtaruzzaman, one of the masterminds who fled to the US, the home boss said, "You've seen that two cases have been filed. One was filed where the incident took place [Kolkata]. The lawmaker's daughter also filed a case in Dhaka. This incident involves both countries.

"Since it took place in their country [India], it's their responsibility to bring back and imprison their accused. As far as I know, India has an extradition treaty with the United States. In that case, the Indian government may get the benefit.

"We need proof that the recovered body parts belong to Azim. That's why a DNA test has been arranged. If the DNA matches that of his daughter, we can confirm it was Azim."

A law enforcement source said they already have evidence that the body parts, which were recovered on May 28 from the septic tank of the flat where the murder took place, belongs to a human.

Meanwhile, Amanullah and his nephew Tanvir Bhuiyan appealed for bail before a Dhaka court, which rejected the pleas.

Besides Babu, three other arrestees in Bangladesh -- Celesty Rahman, Amanullah, and Tanvir Bhuiyan – have made confessional statements and are in jail.

Heartbreak for Tigers

the next stage with wins in their final two group games against Nepal and the Netherlands after their two-wicket win in their opening fixture against Sri Lanka.

To the dismay of the fans, the Tigers failed to get 11 off the final over, failing to put away at least one of three juicy full tosses offered by left-arm spinner Keshav Maharaj -- Jaker Ali managed two runs, Mahmudullah Riyad was caught in the boundary line and Taskin Ahmed miscued the final full-toss delivery.

Bangladesh bowlers, especially the pacers, were on top of their game as they helped restrict a strong South Africa batting line-up to 113 for six on a tricky New York surface where the average first innings score this tournament has been below 120.

In the low-scoring affair -- which has been the norm at this venue as even Pakistan fell short of a 120-run target just the day before -- Bangladesh saw somewhat of a top-order meltdown with the Tigers left in a spot of bother at four for 50 in 9.5 overs.

However, in a rescuing act, Towhid Hridoy and Mahmudullah stitched a 44-run fifth-wicket stand and took the game to a point where it looked like a win was almost within Bangladesh's grasp.

Hridoy played the perfect aggressor role the slow pitch in New York demanded, smashing Maharaj for two maximums just when Bangladesh needed to up the tempo in the middle overs.

What probably would bug most Bangladesh fans and experts is how Hridoy's innings of 37 off 34 balls, which also saw two fours, came to an end. Kagiso Rabada had him lbw in the very first ball of the 18th over only on umpire's call with the ball hitting the right-hander high on his thighs and shown as just clipping the leg stump during a review -- a call that might as well have sided with Bangladesh had it not been for a shockingly fast decision by England's Richard Illingworth following a meek appeal from the Proteas.

Bangladesh could not recover from there with the final over mishap seeing the Tigers at the wrong end of yet another heartbreak in an ICC event.

Earlier, pacers Tanzim Hasan Sakib and Taskin Ahmed spewed venom soon after South Africa elected to bat, with Sakib claiming three wickets and Taskin accounting for one to reduce the Proteas to four for 23 in 4.2 overs.

David Miller and Heinrich Klaasen stitched together a 79-run fifth-wicket stand to help South Africa avert a further collapse but Bangladesh bowlers tightened their grip in the latter stage, conceding just 13 runs in the last three overs with Mustafizur Rahman giving away just four in the final over.

Compromise, hold dialogue elections. How many seats a party would win should not be the fundamental question, it should rather be how the election system works...," he said.

Asked whether a dialogue on the polls-time government is needed to settle the sharp division among the two major political parties, Habibul said, "I have some observations [regarding the political crisis over elections]. I will leave some suggestions with the next commission..."

He said that large political parties like Awami League, BNP, and Jatiya Party will need to understand the matter. "Should this impasse continue for another 100 years if they don't settle the issues? I think a solution is needed."

The CEC said the Bangladeshi politicians are well educated and they have the wisdom to find out a solution. He hoped that the politicians will take steps to resolve the political crisis.

Habibul said there is still an ongoing debate over the nature of the election-time government and both the major parties have rigid stance on this. He said participation of political parties in the January 7 national polls fell short of the EC's expectations.

He said that some lawmakers and cabinet members had tried to influence the recently completed upazila polls, but they failed to do so due to the steps taken by the commission.

The CEC said he thought people's trust in the election system and EC increased slightly due to the steps taken by the incumbent commission during the last parliamentary polls and local government elections.

Habibul said the average turnout in the five phases of upazila polls was 36.45 percent. He said he was satisfied with the elections as those were held by and large peacefully.

Four others, including Karim's brother Aga Rahim Uddin, his wife Tahmina Begum, and their six-month-old baby, who got trapped in the adjacent house, managed to get out unharmed.

Following the disaster, locals sprang into action and began removing the fallen debris. Their efforts were soon joined by the city corporation, police, fire service, and finally the army.

Abdul Jalil, a distant relative of the victim who also lives in the area, told this newspaper, "It's not just us; many people live at the foot of the hill in this area."

Abdul Karim Kim, general secretary of Bangladesh Poribesh Andolon (BAPA), Sylhet, said, "Many low-income families in Sylhet live precariously at the foot of hills, exposing themselves to the dangers of mudslides. Safer alternatives for settlements are urgently needed to prevent future disasters."

Mudslides have claimed lives in almost every year in the recent past.

On June 6, 2022, four members of a family died in Jaintapur upazila. The year before, a child died in Sylhet Sadar upazila on October 7, 2023.

Don't reward corrupt public servants

Reinstating a corrupt official sets a dangerous precedent

We are shocked to learn of the reinstatement of an official at the youth and sports ministry who, only a few months ago, was dismissed on charges of embezzlement. According to a report by this daily, the move has raised questions among the ministry officials themselves. Indeed, such a decision would make any honest employee disappointed, and it also sets a dangerous precedent at a time when the widespread corruption in public sector demands exemplary actions, not exemptions.

The official in question, Farhat Noor, and three others were found guilty of embezzling Tk 11.52 crore during an investigation conducted by a probe body formed by the ministry. Upon finding proof, the ministry decided to terminate the four officials, and the decision was endorsed by the Bangladesh Public Service Commission on February 12. But on June 5, the ministry issued an order through a gazette notification reinstating Noor in his old position, in Moulvibazar. The gazette further mentions that Noor pleaded for withdrawal of his dismissal in an appeal filed with the PMO on March 18.

Another report also caught our attention yesterday. According to Prothom Alo, Dr Fatema Doza, an associate professor at the National Institute of Cardiovascular Diseases (NICVD), has been accused of many irregularities including being absent from work for one and a half years, presenting fake invitation to an overseas seminar, etc. She has even been charged with the abuse of domestic help. Several internal investigations found proof supporting the allegations, and yet, there has been no repercussion as she continues to hold on to her position, enjoying all the benefits that come with it.

How would the responsible government organisations justify their inactions? Why is it that government employees like Noor and Doza get away with their criminal acts with such impunity? Has the charge against Farhat Noor been disproven? As far as we know, there is no indication of that. What drove the ministry to backtrack on its own decision, then? And how is it that Fatema Doza has been able to carry on with her job for years when she has been found guilty of the charges against her? It goes without saying that these circumstances directly contradict the government's own stated policy of zero tolerance for corruption.

These two cases once again show how the public sector is being run without any functional accountability, and exhibit why there is a trust deficit between the public and the government. If there was a strong mechanism in place to ensure accountability in public service, so many government employees would not be so bold to carry out their corruption and irregularities. This state of affairs cannot continue in a democratic system. We urge the government to establish a modern, accountable bureaucracy where officials paid by the public are held responsible for any breach of conduct, and indeed crimes.

Cover all open drains before monsoon

Another death-by-fall in Chattogram highlights the urgency

Yet another life was lost in Chattogram's notorious open drains. These recurring drain-related fatalities—at least 11 since 2017—can no longer be written off as accidents. It's criminal negligence on the part of responsible agencies, and it is time officials at the Chattogram Development Authority (CDA) and the Chattogram City Corporation (CCC) accepted responsibility for them.

In the last seven years, the media hammered ad nauseam the urgency of covering the open drains and building retaining walls along the canals, but all that seemed to fall on deaf ears. In 2021, the CCC found 5,527 risky spots along the drains, canals and footpaths across a total of 19 square kilometres in the city. Such findings should have spurred urgent measures to mitigate the risks by building necessary infrastructure. However, three years on, only 80 percent of the risky spots along open drains have been covered with slabs and around 70 percent of retaining walls built along canals, as claimed by a top CCC official recently. Obviously, that did not prevent the death of seven-year-old Saidul Islam, who fell into an uncovered drain near his home at the Goshaildanga area of Agrabad, or other recent victims.

Usually, these open drains and canals become death traps for unsuspecting pedestrians during the monsoon season when, clogged with silt and waste, they overflow or get submerged. However, the circumstances of Saidul's death—he went missing on Saturday and his body was found a day later at a time when there was no waterlogging—reveal the severity of the risks. It is unfathomable why four ongoing projects worth Tk 14,389 crore, meant to free the city from the curse of waterlogging partly by renovating the canals and drains, did not take this into consideration. Mega projects are supposed to not just make life easier, but also keep it safe.

Instead of playing the blame game about who is responsible for installing slabs and building retaining walls, the CDA and the CCC must work collaboratively to make all the drains and connected canals safer. Any jurisdictional or fund-related issues delaying their interventions must be straightened out immediately. Also, with the monsoon season just around the corner, some temporary measures like installing warning signs in front of open drains will be very helpful.

A philosophically incorrect, structurally frail budget

BIRUPAKSHA PAUL

The theory of rational expectations, originally proposed by economist John Muth in 1961 and later reenergised by Robert Lucas in the 1970s, asserts that people take rational decisions based on available information. And that is what people expected from this year's budget, whose steering wheel was in the hands of the new finance minister, someone with a respectable background in diplomacy and economics. But they were left frustrated.

Given the outcome of multiple desperate budgets prepared by the previous finance minister, who was greatly responsible for what the nation faces today, rational expectations were formed to see a sober budget with a touch of austerity, higher fiscal capacity, reasonably lower development allocations, and finally, pragmatic figures of inflation and growth. We didn't see that. A person who fell sick after eating biriyani for four days in a row was supposed to eat a vegan meal with the doctor's prescription. But biriyani wasn't dropped from the menu, suggesting that the sickness will continue. And thus, the budget is philosophically incorrect given the economy's critical situation involving the dollar crisis, forex reserve depletion, high inflation, and massive unemployment. When the finance minister claims that the overall approach is "contractionary," it turns into an object of ridicule because the budget is evidently expansionary.

The proposed budget is 11.6 percent bigger than the revised budget of FY2024. Had that expansion been serviced by increasing the fiscal capacity without expanding the burden of the fiscal deficit, it wouldn't have been a problem. But that hasn't happened. The budget deficit has increased by 8.3 percent, requiring funds from the banking sector which is already limping on one leg. And that makes the budget structurally frail and rationally unexpected. The increase in foreign borrowing will be as high as 19.74 percent, and that is a sign of a growing risk of financing.

Of course, contracting the body of current expenditure is tough because salaries and benefits can't be depressed. Rather, there is always an upward pressure on public salaries, and this is more so when price hikes are a persistent pain in the neck. But contracting development projects and abandoning some of them could have been carried out for a short time when the tax-GDP ratio has dwindled over the last 10 years, making it one of the lowest in the world. In contrast, the spectacular growth of tycoons and oligarchs in Bangladesh testifies that the tax administration isn't doing its job adequately to address the growing income inequality in society. The budget fails to address that.

FILE VISUAL: REHNUMA PROSHOON

The fiscal incapacity and the ensuing structural weakness originate from a perverse philosophy of pampering the superrich, refuelling the bank defaulters, and excusing the capital-market plunderers as well as money launderers. Tax dodgers, bank defaulters, and illicit fund-traffickers have formed the "Devil's Triangle," just like the Bermuda Triangle—a loosely defined area in the North Atlantic Ocean where ships, planes, and people are said to have mysteriously disappeared. The budget displayed no mechanism to break the triangle. Rather it offers an opportunity of whitening black or laundered money by paying only 15 percent tax. It's a glaring example of how the budget endorsed the instances of moral hazard and adverse selection.

The Nobel laureate economist George Akerlof theorised the situation of adverse selection when one party with access to more information takes advantage of it while the other party has no clue about it. If a person knows that he will die soon and buys life insurance, while the insurer has no access to that information, it's an example of adverse selection. The players of the black economy will create more barriers to information and take advantage of tax relief when policymakers pardon their evil deeds. Another Nobel laureate, Kenneth Arrow theorised moral hazard as a catalyst for price hiking mechanism in insurance. A situation where a person takes less care of his cell phone that is covered by insurance is an example of moral hazard. When the finance minister ensures that the money traffickers will have avenues to whiten their ill-gotten wealth, they will pay no attention to the law and governance.

How much money the government will obtain from whitening the black money is not a point; the main concern is that it will do more harm than good to the party manifesto of the Awami League where the prime minister spelled out zero tolerance against corruption. The opponents will take it as a bad reference of double standards in the future. The long-term loss will outweigh the short-term gain. The party didn't do any cost-benefit analysis before indulging in such an unethical outlet. If the budget is ethically weak, it must be philosophically incorrect.

Of course, the budget has several strengths such as expansion of the social safety net, higher tax rates for higher income, focus of science and technology, rural development, employment generation projects, improvements in health facilities, building roads and bridges, investing in education and research, and finally, its terrible eagerness to curb inflation. But the simultaneous target for a relatively high growth at 6.75 percent is economically contradictory because growth is inflationary, as economist Robert Phillips' seminal work on the Phillips curve has suggested.

While more than 80 percent of the economy is controlled by private stakeholders, assuming higher growth would necessitate higher credit growth from the banking sector that often gets dehydrated due to lack of liquidity. The ambitious budget would take a big chunk of liquidity, depriving the small and medium private enterprises while big parties will rob the banks. Targeting higher growth and thus placing a demand for Tk 1,37,500 lakh crore from the banking sector to plug the deficit gap is contradictory to the goal of taming inflation.

Interest rates are already skyrocketing, and further grabbing of funds by the government will simply put upward pressures on interest rates, bumping the production costs up. It will again ignite cost-push inflation, which is much harder than the demand-pull inflation to downgrade. That is why economists expected that the new finance minister will sincerely increase taxes on the superrich and drastically reduce the development budget. This is warranted now to reach a point of no borrowing from banks at least for one or two years in a row to eclipse inflationary flames. We didn't see that. When commitments don't match with actions, the budget becomes methodologically disturbing too.

To cut CO2 emissions, let's tackle overproduction

Recently, a video from a factory of Chinese omnichannel brand Temu went viral. It showed mountains of Temu packages being piled on top of one another, with employees forlornly attempting to sort them. The video was described on social media as a dystopian nightmare.

Such videos are not rare. We have known for a long time that the world is producing too much. Overproduction is a significant global issue with wide-ranging economic, environmental, and social impacts. This problem is particularly evident in industries like fashion, food, and electronics. Overproduction contributes to increased waste and pollution. It leads to the depletion of natural resources.

There is an environmental impact. Unsold goods often end up in landfills, contributing to environmental degradation. There is also an economic impact as financial losses for companies due to unsold inventory. Meanwhile, price reductions and markdowns to clear excess stock can erode profit margins. Overproduction can lead to labour exploitation and poor working conditions, especially in industries like fast fashion.

It can also cause market saturation, negatively affecting small- and medium-sized enterprises.

Quantifying the exact financial impact of overproduction globally is challenging due to the vastness and diversity of industries. However, there are notable examples and estimates.

The fashion industry is a major culprit, with some estimates suggesting that 30 percent of clothes produced each season are never sold. In the UK alone, around 140 million pounds worth of clothing is sent to landfill each year.

This is insane. We live in a world where approximately 9.2 percent of the global population lives on less than $2.15 per day, according to research in 2019. These figures are likely to have worsened since the pandemic, which saw a transfer of wealth from the poor to the rich.

How can we be producing so much that are thrown away when so many people cannot afford basic levels of sustenance?

Consider all of the above and then remember that global leaders never tire of telling us about targets that have been set to mitigate the effects of climate change and limit global warming. These targets are outlined in international agreements, national commitments, and various initiatives by governments, organisations, and corporations. The main climate targets include the Paris Agreement, adopted in 2015 under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) and which is the primary international accord guiding global climate action. This aims to limit global warming, keeping the global average temperature increase well below two degrees Celsius above pre-industrial levels. It will also see countries pursue efforts to limit the temperature increase to 1.5 degrees Celsius above pre-industrial levels.

The ultimate goal is to achieve net-zero greenhouse gas emissions by the second half of this century.

So, what is causing global warming? We know rising CO2 emissions are a major contributor. And the fashion industry is responsible for approximately 2.1 billion metric tonnes of CO2 emissions annually, which is about four percent of the global total, according to a report by McKinsey & Company and the Global Fashion Agenda.

The fashion industry is a major culprit, with some estimates suggesting that 30 percent of clothes produced each season are never sold. Major fashion brands have invested a lot of time and resources into reducing and mitigating their CO2 emissions in recent years. All sorts of options are now being considered, including futuristic carbon capture technologies.

While I don't want to be critical of such efforts, I wonder if we are jumping the gun. Would it not be better to focus all our efforts on tackling overproduction first of all?

I mentioned a statistic early about 30 percent of fashion products not being sold. This figure is hard to verify, and my guess is it is slightly exaggerated. Fashion has invested heavily in better logistics and more accurate forecasting models in recent times.

But let's cut the figure in half and suggest it is 15 percent. If 15 percent of clothing produced is unnecessary that means 15 percent of CO2 emissions are also unnecessary. By definition, if the fashion industry tackled overproduction, it could cut CO2 emissions by 15 percent. This would be a remarkable achievement.

As an industry, fashion and its supply chains spend a lot of time pondering how they can reduce emissions. Shifting to renewable energy is one obvious means of doing this, and the renewable energy transition in Bangladesh, which I expect to see gather pace in the coming years, is to be welcomed.

But if our industry carries on overproducing—like many other industries, it should be added—it will make an already huge problem that much more challenging. The world does not need everything it produces. Nor does the fashion industry. We routinely produce too much, which leads to unnecessary and harmful CO2 emissions.

Industry leaders should tackle this challenge head-on. Perhaps regulators could also take a look, and consider more stringent methods to clamp down on and penalise excessive production. One way of doing this is through Extended Producer Responsibility (EPR) schemes, which compel companies to take more responsibility for waste production in their supply chains.

Another way is through better logistics and use of tools such as AI to better streamline and manage supply chains. Some brands are investing in better technologies but at the moment, it is often cheaper just to produce too much than to make the necessary investments. That's why regulation could be the only way to manage this issue.

What will happen when the 'Doomsday Glacier' disintegrates?

Punishing heatwaves is not the only measure of global climate change that is undergoing an abnormally rapid change. Numerous other indicators, such as violent storms, long-lasting droughts, devastating floods, raging wildfires, and permafrost thawing, among others, suggest a more general global warming trend. An indicator that does not get much attention but will nevertheless have reverberating effects across the globe is the melting of glaciers and ice sheets, particularly in Antarctica.

As climate change drives global temperatures ever higher, glaciers and ice sheets in the polar and mountainous regions will inevitably melt. According to a paper published in Nature Climate Change (June 2020), Antarctica has warmed at over three times the global rate since 1989. As a result, glaciers in Antarctica, which contain about 90 percent of all the ice on Earth, are flowing into the oceans where they melt and raise the sea level. From 1979 to 1989, some 40 billion tonnes of glacial ice in Antarctica melted each year. A study published in 2019 in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences reported that the amount jumped to 252 billion tonnes each year starting in 2009.

Since 1880, global sea levels have risen roughly 23 centimetres. Over the past decade, the sea level is rising at a much faster rate of 3.9 millimetres per year, as measured by NASA's satellite-based radar altimeters. The rise is mostly due to a combination of water melting from glaciers and ice sheets, as well as thermal expansion of seawater as it warms.

Scientists are particularly concerned about Thwaites Glacier, a massive block of ice in West Antarctica, approximately the size of Florida. It is nicknamed the "Doomsday Glacier" because if it were to collapse and melt, it could single-handedly cause global sea levels to rise by as much as 65 centimetres. As one of the fastest melting glaciers currently losing 50 billion tonnes of ice annually, Thwaites already accounts for four percent (0.15 millimetre) of the planet's sea level rise. In the 1990s, it was losing just over 10 billion tonnes of ice a year.

When all the glaciers in Antarctica will melt, sea level will rise some 70 metres, according to the US Geological Survey. Moreover, if the rest of the glaciers on Earth melts too, 7.6 metres will be added on top of Antarctica's drastic total, wiping out most of the low-lying countries in the world, while in urban settings along coastlines, it will threaten infrastructure vital for local jobs and regional industries.

The coastal edge of Thwaites that interacts with the ocean stretches 120 kilometres, while its thickness from bedrock to surface measures between 800 metres and 1,200 metres. A platform of ice called an ice shelf that floats above the Pine Island Bay acts as a brace, holding this frosty goliath back on the land, thereby slowing its journey to the sea. Thwaites also acts as a natural dam to the surrounding ice in West Antarctica and hence provides an important defence against the sea-level rise.

Ice shelves are highly vulnerable to a warming ocean. Accordingly, scientists believe that a complete collapse of Thwaites' ice shelf will spell the beginning of the end for the glacier. Without its ice shelf, the glacier will discharge all of its ice into the Amundsen Sea, which, after melting, will be devastating for coastal communities around the world. That is why scientists are interested in studying the interaction between ice shelves and oceans in an increasingly hotter world, in part because they are concerned about the stability of the ice shelves of Antarctica's other glaciers.

In a study published in May 2024 in the journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, researchers at the University of California, Irvine, using high-resolution images from satellites and hydrological data, found evidence of the intrusion of warm, high-pressure seawater at depths many kilometres beneath the grounded ice of Thwaites, causing "vigorous melting."

The widespread contact between the warm seawater and the glacier is rapidly melting the submerged ice at the underbelly and detaching it from the bedrock. In other words, seepage of warm water under Thwaites' base is "eating away at the ice shelf," which, in turn, is slackening its grip on the underwater seamount that keeps the glacier stable. Consequently, it is highly probable that Thwaites could disintegrate much faster than previously thought, six times faster than in the 1980s.

The researchers also noted the development of cracks and crevasses on the ice shelf of Thwaites, indicating that it is being structurally weakened. Because cracking and fracturing can have reinforcing feedback effect, the ice shelf will be further weakened, thus hastening its disintegration. Indeed, all evidences suggest that the ice shelf's "final collapse" could occur sooner rather than later, probably in less than a decade.

Scientists are particularly concerned about Thwaites Glacier, a massive block of ice in West Antarctica, approximately the size of Florida. It is nicknamed the "Doomsday Glacier" because if it were to collapse and melt, it could single-handedly cause global sea levels to rise by as much as 65 centimetres.

The findings by the researchers are alarming because the disintegration of Thwaites due to the deadly punch-jab-uppercut combination of melting from below, ice-shattering and eroding ice shelf could trigger the collapse of other glaciers held in check by Thwaites, potentially raising the global sea level by more than three metres in the coming decades. This is surely an ominous sign of the impending effects of climate change from the world's largest glacier.

Previous computer models that forecast Thwaites' future did not account for seawater intrusions past the grounding line, which is the boundary between grounded and floating ice, although a study a decade ago concluded that such intrusions could double the speed of the glacier's melting. It is therefore expected that findings from all the studies will be used to fine-tune models to predict the Doomsday Glacier's future and make projections about sea-level rise more accurate.

Finally, there may be uncertainties about exactly what will happen in West Antarctica because predicting the speed of ice loss of glaciers and sea-level rise is not an easy task. And modelling glaciers, which are hydrologically dynamic, remote, and difficult to study, is a technological challenge. Yet, one thing is for sure. Glaciers will accumulate snow in winter and lose ice to melting in summer. But in a warming climate, melting will outstrip accumulation, resulting in a net loss of ice, thereupon adding to the already rising global sea levels.

Play should be a fundamental right for all children

Children need to play, and to ensure that they can, we need policies, training, and funding.

Children's busy lives of school, tutoring, homework, and chores leave little time for anything else—including active movement and play. Yet play is vital to children's physical, mental, and social wellbeing. Play is not a unique human construction: baby animals engage in play, using it to learn a variety of important skills.

When children play—preferably at least some of the time outdoors and among others—they get necessary exercise, gain coordination, learn how to cooperate and socialise with others, and gain relief from stress. Play builds resilience, instils confidence, teaches creativity, and is vital for children's full development.

Many years ago, I encouraged my winter interns from the Asian University of Women to organise a parklet near our office. A parklet involves temporarily or permanently converting one or more car parking spaces into a space for play.

When my interns returned, flush with excitement, I listened to their stories about the euphoria of the local children on being invited to come out of their homes and into the street to play. But what I particularly remember is the story of one girl who finally made it downstairs just as my interns were packing up. They offered her a hula hoop, which she cheerfully used.

"Did you have fun?" they asked her when she paused to rest.

"Yeah!" she exclaimed.

"Where do you usually play?" they then asked.

"Play?" she looked at them blankly. "I don't play."

Upon hearing their story, I was shocked. I joke with my staff about having climbed mango trees and raced around rice paddy as a child; in fact, I played house in the mountains and converted rocks into dolls. My best friend and I would play as monkeys in the front yard, running to hide every time a lion (car) passed on the street "trying to kill us." (We were right on point there.)

Play was a vital part of childhood; I couldn't imagine not being given the opportunity. Nor did all the time I spent playing take away from my achievements. On the contrary, I would argue that the active play and the imagination and creativity that play stimulated helped contribute to my academic and professional success.
